Even if it were important this could be easily solved by providing for a period of 76 years or the life of the author, whichever should be the longer. One could fix a definite date by requiring the author in the last five years to file a certificate of life and address in the absence of which the law could create a presumption of death within the 76-year period. The mechanics are simple.

There is furthermore no reason for a single term of copyright. There is no reason why copyright cannot be made divisible insofar as it concerns subsidiary rights including dramatic, motion picture, television, etc. Such divisible copyrights when granted to an assignee of the author could be for a more limited period, i.e., 20 years, and could revert to the author at the expiration of their limited several life. This would assure the author against improvident grants made by him and would give to his grantees a sufficent lifetime of use.

There is no reason why in his middle years or old age an author should be deprived of the fruits of his planting in his youth. He should have a guaranteed period of at least his lifetime.

There is no reason for dividing the term and providing for a renewal which if not taken for some reason cuts short his term. The writer of this article has known many instances where first-rate authors and others have lost their copyrights through error in or failure to take renewal. This chance should be obviated.

There should be one term of copyright and that should be for life with a period of years thereafter perhaps totalling 76 in which the author and his descendants may have the benefits of the property created.

■ We have long been proud to say that the Sound of Genius originates on Columbia Records (USA), a Division of the great communications complex, the Columbia Broadcasting System.

■ Into this center has flowed the great artistry of every continent and every sphere of music. Columbia (USA) has developed the world's largest catalogue, ranging from symphony and opera to jazz and Broadway hits, recorded by the world's greatest artists.

■ From this center, too, has come the most important innovation in recording history since the flat disc—the long-playing record, originated and introduced by Columbia (USA) in 1948.

■ Now, in 1962, in Europe, Africa, Australia, the Middle and Far East, the extraordinary repertoire of Columbia (USA) will be presented directly and exclusively on a new label which carries a great name and a great tradition —now the Sound of Genius will also be heard on CBS Records.

Dear Friends:

Greetings of the season and our sincere appreciation to the disc jockeys, music directors, program directors, librarians and the countless radio and TV stations for consistently programming Mills music . . . and to the record companies, whose recordings of our new songs and new treatments of our standards have been so outstanding.

Mills Music, entering its 43rd year, wishes the many treasured friends all over the world, a peaceful, prosperous and rewarding new year.

Sincerely,

Jack Mills, President — Irving Mills, Vice President

IT'S ALL YOURS! Just our way of saying thank you for helping make 1961 another memorable year for ABC-Paramount. Your support and encouragement were instrumental—and invaluable—in enabling us to provide the vital sounds of music that won the hearts and ears of people everywhere. ■ ABC-Paramount's star-studded repertory of popular music centered around outstanding performances by top vocalists and instrumentalists. ■ Then there was the introduction and smash success of Impulse! Records... which captured the great jazzmen of our time in the high adventure of their art. ■ Next, the addition of the famous Westminster label set the stage for us to present the superb classical orchestras, conductors and artists of the world. ■ And with the acquisition of Whitehall Records, a wide range of basic classical selections and splendid musical specialties was made available for all to enjoy, at a popular price. ■ So...as the curtain rings down on this, our 6th Anniversary, we gladly share our triumph with you. ABC-PARAMOUNT

ing In the Rain, "Dardanella," "And The Band Played On," "My Wild Irish Rose," "You Were Meant For Me" "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?", "Whistle While You Work," "Brother, Can You Spare A Dime?", "I Got Plenty of Nuttin'," "It's A Good Day," "I'm Looking Over a Four-Leaf Clover," "Bye-Bye Blackbird," "Avalon," "Whispering," "Breezin' Along With the Breeze," just to name a few of the memorable perennials.

From "Ja-Da" and "Yacki-Hula, Hicky-Dula" and "Lily of the Valley" to "Who Put the Bomp in the Bomp," there have been flash-in-the-pan novelties which enjoy extraordinary concentrated vogue and some, in time, also become musical symbols of their times. So with these, as with the 6,000-odd members of ASCAP and the far-flung affiliates of BMI, who might well point to this or that of their pet bestsellers as "belonging" in this roster, it must be stressed anew that the above roster is samplings of standards. For reasons already detailed it is impossible to include every standard, else it becomes a catalog of songs. It is unrealistic also not to recognize that a cavalcade such as this is fallible, through omission, and perhaps even by commission of including certain titles and slighting some others.

Unforeseen added values, constantly replenishing themselves, for those certain standards of the "Tea For Two"-"St. Louis Blues"-"Stardust" etc., genre is their repetitive arrangements to conform each new dance vogue. Thus, they have enjoyed instrumental interpretation as polkas, sambas, mambos, cha-chas, merengues, congas, and even marches ("St. Louis Blues March," for example). And now they've been given still another twist, into Twist arrangements.

But the above Top Pops, along with many of the other standards mentioned, represent the best cross-section of the lasting popular preferences of mass Americana.

Noted jazz historian, Marshall Stearns, author of the Story of Jazz, takes notes for his new book on jazz and the dance from an interview tape that he plays back on his NORELCO 'Continental' tape recorder. DR. STEARNS is Director of the INSTITUTE OF JAZZ STUDIES and Associate Professor of English at HUNTER COLLEGE. "I make constant use of my NORELCO 'Continental' when doing field work for my books and articles," states DR. STEARNS. "Here, the most significant feature is three speed versatility. I find that the extremely economical 1⅞ speed is ideal for recording interviews from which I later take material needed for my work. The other speeds are exceptional for their ability to capture the full fidelity of music and voice." Which is the "right" 'Continental' for you? The '400'—3-speed, 4-track stereo and mono recording and playback, completely self-contained with dual record/playback preamps, dual power amps, two speakers and stereo microphone. The '300'—4-track stereo playback; mono-record/playback. 3 speeds. The '200'—4-track mono record/playback; facilities for stereoplayback. The '100'—100% transistorized, battery-operated, 7-lb. portable. Records, plays back up to 2 hours on one reel. All are products of North American Philips Company, Inc., High Fidelity Products Division, Dept. LL1, 230 Duffy Ave., Hicksville, Long Island, New York. (Adv.)

might interest only the cultural cognoscenti and he could no longer spare the time and effort to mould public taste. If he was to hold his head above water he would have to devise ever faster means of selling that which the greatest number of people wanted immediately to buy.

History

Surely no era has a monopoly on talent and there were many fine new artists ready to take their places as the Kreislers, Rachmaninoffs and Chaliapins of the next generation. But they needed careful counseling, intensive promotion, the kind of individualized management that knows what engagements to reject as well as what engagements to accept at each particular stage of an artist's development. Under the new scheme of things it was far easier for a manager to put four pianists together and book them as a super quartet for two or three seasons of fast money-making than to build any one pianist slowly and steadily to the point where he could fill a house for the first time and sell out his 20th anniversary tour. Pretty soon the concert manager found that he could make more money with less work by selling performers and programs that weren't rightfully concert material at all—a costumed group that presented a pseudo-Broadway revue with scenic and choreographic effects, a comedian who played the violin with gloves on and told risque jokes between improvisations, a military parade with horses and drum majorettes, or even, as one of my colleagues contemplated quite seriously only a few seasons ago, an importation of world-famous fighting bulls.

Hi-Fi, Ahoy

But just when it seemed that the concert business might no longer be a concert business at all, and when, in fact, strictly show business booking agencies were invading the field, things began to change again. Partly, I suspect, because of the advent of hi-fi, with the resultant new interest in music in hundreds of thousands of homes; partly due to the growth of university and college-sponsored concert series in many parts of the country and the growth of symphony orchestras in even the smallest cities; partly due to the Soviet-American Cultural Exchange Program, which suddenly let loose in our country a large number of titanic individual artists; and undoubtedly due to the fact that tv westerns had told the same story in virtually every possible way, we seem to be veering back to the pattern of earlier days.

That an Oistrakh was able to sell out Carnegie Hall instantly, with local managers throughout the country clamoring to present him at almost any fee, gave hope that other individual artists of outstanding quality could do the same thing again. I, myself, was able to bring a Wilhelm Backhaus back after 28 years' absence with sensational success and more demand than we could possibly supply; to put a Benno Moiseiwitsch on at Carnegie Hall in a program of three stiff piano concerti and draw a record $9,000 gross.

Enthusiasm

The not-to-be-under-estimated political overtones of Van Cliburn's Moscow triumph, which were to catapult him from complete obscurity to world status among the top-drawing concert attractions of all time, served also to focus the spotlight on other young Americans taking honors in international competitions, with appreciable salutory effect on the careers of a John Browning and Jaime Laredo, for example. Triumphs behind the Iron Curtain gave new impetus to the careers of Byron Janis and Ruggiero Ricci. Recordings imported for zealous discophiles paved the way for sudden and spectacular in-person successes by artists like Tebaldi, Callas and Sutherland. And so it went.

With a more sophisticated musical taste developing everywhere throughout the country, regional concert series are now reverting to a happy norm in which fine solo artists, performing uncompromising programs, are again being balanced with only such group attractions as have a legitimate artistic raison d'etre. And, coincidentally, the so-called "independent" manager who has the time and inclination to discover and build a selective list of artists and attractions is coming to the fore again.

It is, perhaps, significant to note that, while the character of the concert business has undergone various changes, its statistics have remained surprisingly the same over a 30-to-40 year period.

The estimated $18,000,000 annual gross business out of the New York managerial offices varies hardly at all from year to year. But, whereas 15 years ago concert series operated for profit by individuals throughout the country constituted almost 75% of the total market for sales of artists and attractions (exclusive of the organized audience circuits) and university and college courses represented a mere 25%, the situation has virtually reversed itself in the past 10 years. Also, where there were about a dozen symphony orchestras engaging soloists when I first entered the business, the number now runs to nearly 1,000, if we include the so-called "community" orchestras with limited but nevertheless appreciable artist budgets.

Another relatively new factor to consider is the collective approach to concert business, as represented by organizations such as the International Assn. of Concert Managers, the Assn. of College and University Concert Managers, the American Symphony Orchestra League, et cetera. In numerous ways these groups, through which buyers of concert artists and attractions relate their experiences and problems, have served to set standards of business ethics and practice and, at the same time, to provide a kind of grapevine through which news of good or bad buys travels with amazing speed. As a result, unscrupulous operators are fast being eliminated from the business, fees and selling tactics are of necessity being standardized and it is no longer possible to fool some of the people some of the time, let alone all of the people all of the time.

In a country which, virtually alone in the world, manages to hold out against state sponsorship of opera and concerts, it might also do well to note the growing influence of government per se (via State Department-sponsored overseas tours) and tax-exempted foundation funds on our concert life. What the Ford Foundation awards and the Martha Baird Rockefeller grants to young American artists at crucial stages of their careers have begun to do is of utmost importance and will, I hope, lead to further badly needed assistance from sources such as these to what must, perforce, for some time to come continue as a virtually non-profit business run by people with unlimited faith in the future of America's performing musicians and listening public.

Booze & Gambling Changes Mark London's Night Prowl

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

Dollar-laden visitors who propose winging to London for purposes other than—or additional to—gandering the Tower of London, the Planetarium, the Tate Gallery, the Wallace Collection (not Edgar), the Changing of the Guard, Eros and similar these-are-for-the-egg-head-birds attractions will find only minor differences from last year.

The booze laws have cautiously edged away from the ridiculous to the far from sublime. As of this writing, thirsty customers in the saloons are now allowed 10 ecstatic minutes to down the drink that they ordered in wild abandon a minute before the stern closing hour. This has caused no outbreak of alcoholism among patrons, but merely a slight depression among bartenders who now are apt to miss their last train home. So beware of that last drink. It is apt to be rancid with resentment.

Tipplers are also due for other slight concessions. Soon—big deal—you will be able to entertain your hangers-on to after-hours grog in your hotel.

Gambling Legal

Flushed with alcohol, the visitor may now take advantage of the new laws to indulge in gambling. For the ordinary man there are the now legal betting shops where he can walk in and place a bet with the same legality that he could always buy a toothbrush or a pack of cigarets. For the extraordinary man, the guy with money, many of the plush West End night spots are now providing "casinos," where one can play chemmy and a form of roulette. This is slightly amended from the Continental casinos because, under the new Gaming Law, the house running the game must not win. They draw their loot from members' subscriptions and from a fee that they extract from the would-be gambler when he sits down to stake his shirt.

Rico Dajou, who runs the snooty Casanova Club, with the Don Juan nitery above it, has converted a floor of his premises into a chemin-de-fer room at an alleged cost of around $112,000. Dajou, who admits that he knows nothing about gambling, reports good progress. Les Ambassadeurs, run by John Mills, was one of the pioneers of the new gambling movement in London. There have been one or two casualties, notably the now-extinct Mayfair Club, which have come to grief through rubber checks, but there are several places where visitors can enjoy a mild flutter. Useless to pinpoint them, since, like all London's clubs, as distinct from restaurants, it is essential to be a member. If you don't happen to know someone who is a member ask the bartender at your hotel. If he can't introduce you to a spot then you are probably lucky and, instead, you will be able to take home some of those purchase-tax-free goods that make Londoners writhe with envy when they see them displayed in the shops.

Rundown of Spots

What are the changes in the places offering after-dark entertainment? "Talk of The Town" and the Pigalle still rule the roost for lavish shows that can be visited without an entrance fee. "Talk of The Town" runs two shows, a standard Robert Nesbitt piece of gay fluff which brings in one new specialty act each time the star is changed, which is roughly every six to eight weeks and a later one-name sesh. Julie Wilson, Sophie Tucker, the McGuire Sisters, Lena Horne and the Andrew Sisters are typical of the acts that have kept this luxury restaurant bubbling happily under Bernard Delfont's shrewd eye.

The Pigalle, controlled by Al Burnett and Bill Offner, also put their big toe into the Big Name market. Some clicked, some didn't. Peggy Lee, Betty Hutton and others drew the patrons, but then Burnett and his associates decided that the risk was getting too considerable, with rising costs. So, instead, the Pigalle has reverted to bright, gusty floor shows, with gals and gags and gaiety, with speciality acts such as the ever popular Bernard Brothers, but not names of the Sammy Davis Jr. class. If the wind of change in the West End veers back to be sure that Burnett will be up there bargaining for the big fish. The Latin Quarter is also a spot that can guarantee an evening's bright, brash, breezy relaxation.

Way Out, Both Ways

Gamely hanging on to the tails of its West End competitors is The Room At The Top. This is a chi-chi, pricey, but attractive room at Ilford, a nabe suburb of London. It has had its teething troubles since it opened in the past year, but there is nothing wrong with an eaterie that can persuade such acts as the Peters Sisters and Mel Torme to plane from the States to appear, and, for those who suddenly get an instant urge to break away from the West End bright lights, the trip to the outer border is worth it.

There are other smart floor shows that offer glitter and girls, such as those long running obstinate successes like the Eve, Churchills, Winstoil's Embassy and the Cabaret. But here it is as well to stress once again that they are membership clubs. You have to be signed in, wait 48 hours and then pay an entrance fee for the privilege of spending your money. But, strictly off the record, the intrepid traveller should have little difficulty in coming to a comfortable arrangement with his hotel bartender or linkman. Just keep a couple of dollars handy for the introduction.

The newest, and boldest, entry into the night scene is The Establishment, a club which is situated where the Tropicana, a defunct stripnerie, used to lure those with a fetish for ogling peelers. Started by Peter Cook, one of the talented "Beyond The Fringe" quartet, it has a resident cabaret which specializes in satire and cocking a snoot at the pompous. Later in the evening's proceedings the "Beyond The Fringe" blue-eyed boys tend to turn up and chip in with their two centsworth of fun and games.

Other Havens

Still concentrating successfully on food and drink and with one act can be included the Society, the Colony, Quaglino's and its twin room, the Allegro, the Celebrité, the Hungaria, bandleader Paul Adam's Satire and the Blue Angel, while, in the hotel belt, the Savoy is still clinging to the idea of cabaret, though the Dorchester has bowed out.

The establishments mentioned only scrape the surface of what London has to offer for those who find going to bed at nights a waste of time. But it is clear that nobody needs to stay in his hotel room and read a book, for even if he wishes to get up really late there is always the Stork Room, where Al Burnett has created a remarkable showbiz atmosphere with his unconventional, often off-the-cuff shows.

But maybe you don't want entertainment except regarding the groceries and the bottle? There are several clubs and restaurants ready and eager to exchange courtesy for cash. Most remarkable phenomenon is the White Elephant. Mentioned in a similar lookseе at the West End after-dark scene in last year's Anniversary issue as a new venture, it has forged ahead and is now firmly established as one of the hottest bets in town. Without shaking the perennial popularity of such "musts" as Siegi's, Les Ambassadeurs, the Albemarle and the 21—prime favorites, not only with visitors but with the natives—the White Elephant is certainly the most regular rendezvous for showbiz personalities. Flushed with deserved success, it has taken over the 500 Club and re-named it the Little Elephant.

One "casualty" during the year has been the Empress Club, which has been taken over by Mario Gallati, boniface of the ever-crowded Caprice, as a restaurant. Louis Scott has moved his Empress Club to the premises of the old Mayfair Club, which is now dubbed the Persian Room.

Yes, there still is a night life in the West End.

The Soho strip clubs still exist but it would seem that the craze for these dubious peel-factories is on the wane. They took a slight knock when the police began to look into one or two of them and brought a couple of test cases on the grounds that the owners were running disorderly houses. But there are still plenty, some legitimate, some strictly for suckers who prefer the more furtive entertainment that they provide.

NELSON EDDY

Now starting his 44th year of baritoning—10th year in entertainment spots with singing partner, Gale Sherwood, and pianist-conductor, Theodore Paxson. Salt Lake City and Idaho Falls next week. R-r-r-r! May need his old Mountie outfit!

'Lookout' Managers

Worth a Lot If They Know How To 'Look Out' For Upstart Stars

By BENNY MEROFF

Elm Grove, Wis.

From my semiretirement in Wisconsin, although plenty busy with conventions and industrial shows, fairs, etc., I have a good perspective on personalities, usually of the come-lately calibre, and their "lookout" managers—or lack of looking out for their charges. I call them "lookout" managers because savvy agencies know that some of these new stars need plenty of looking out for, and also looking after.

A bad manager can hurt a star, or least by failing to protect him he can magnify the existing handicaps. A few months ago I played a convention date with a big singing star. He had to be big to command $6,000 for the two-day affair. The kid didn't even know how to take a bow but he was collecting the loot pretty good regardless.

This youngster had the wrong manager. My dressing room was right next door and we could hear each other's breathing. The singer was complaining about the orchestra leader, the bad tempos, the heat, the crowds, the inadequate press, and "all those autograph pests."

A good manager wouldn't allow his charge to sound off that way in front of people, whether in a small or big town.

Obviously, if he's making so much money then hire your own special conductor. If a big personality doesn't draw big crowds, a smart manager would tell him that in no time he'd be very "comfortable" with not many people around to "bother" him. If a bad notice, make sure that they at least spelled your name right. Don't pan the rest of the show; the bigger the star the bigger buildup he gives the other acts. And be grateful for the autograph hounds because it's a sad day when they stop asking.

Also, be sure you know what "autographs" you're signing. Don't let it happen as it did to me at the old Morrison Hotel (now the Conrad Hilton), Chi, when one night I signed a tab for $21.

Charity Balls' New 'Twist' As Consistent B.O. Click

By EDWARD M. SEAY

On a bitterly cold winter night, when theatre and movies are laying to rows of empty seats and when the waiters outnumber the customers in most hotel restaurants and nightclubs, it frequently happens that every table is occupied at charity balls held in the Waldorf-Astoria, the Plaza, the Sheraton East, the St. Regis and the Pierre. In some of these hotels there may be two or three events playing to capacity attendance on the same night. What, theatre owners and hotel men may well wonder, are the reasons for the public's—at least that portion of the public that has even one foot in the door to society—increasing absorption in charity fetes.

Primarily, the explanation for the success of charity balls is simple. They are not only status-builders, but also rich entertainment. Even so, they don't just happen, but are the result of a year's careful planning, organizing and publicizing. Finally, they are not only good for business, but a glamorous method of enlisting the interest of the money class in unglamorous but useful projects such as the fight against cancer, heart ailments, blindness and juvenile delinquency. A charity ball clears anywhere from $25,000 to over $100,000 (April In Paris ball over 200G), depending upon the cost of the tickets and the size of the ballroom in which it is held, as well as to the extent of the financial support given by whatever business is underwriting the cost. About the only way a charity ball can clear a sizable profit without sponsorship is to sell expensive books of chances on such de luxe merchandise as a diamond necklace, an automobile or luxury cruise.

Practically everyone connected with a charity ball gains status, as we understand the word in present-day New York. The chairman of the whole bash gains the most reclame, but the chairmen of various subcommittees also enjoy glorification, depending upon how prominent they are and how many of their distinguished friends they bludgeon into buying tickets ranging from $25 at the cheapest, to $150 each, for the most expensive of them all, the April in Paris Ball, held this year in October at the Seventh Regiment Armory. Even at this fete, conceded to be the least exclusive of the great balls, one's status is enhanced by attending. If a host and hostess have guests that in itself is proof of great solvency. As for any guests, they naturally are justified in feeling important if they are invited to such a plush gala without cost to themselves.

Most Status

Generally speaking, however, the most status is gained by attending the least expensive balls. The members of the Saint Nicholas Society, descendants of the original Dutch colonists of New York, give such a ball annually in the Plaza, but, of course, it isn't for a charity. Founded in 1833 by Washington Irving, Peter Gerard Stuyvesant, Peter Goelet and other eminent citizens of that era, the society at its annual dinners and fetes still adheres to a number of colorful ceremonies which honor forbears who established New Amsterdam on Manhattan Island. An example of an exclusive charity ball would be that of the Boys' Club of New York, an organization founded by the late E. H. Harriman in 1876. The latter's sons are former Gov. W. Averell Harriman and E. Roland Harriman. Men of comparable importance direct activities of the Boys' Club and their wives are in charge of two annual benefit balls. Invitations to which are eagerly sought.

Entertainment is usually desirable and on an elaborate scale at great charity galas such as the April In Paris Ball and the Mardi Gras Ball of the New York Junior League, but not so desirable and much more simply done at smaller benefits. Youngsters from the Boys' Club sing popular songs at that organization's events. Society women model the clothes of Elizabeth Arden at the Blue Grass Ball sponsored by Arden. At the smart Yorkville dinner dance there is no entertainment, while at the Ball of Roses, given to aid Roosevelt Hospital's free care program, there is never more than one entertainer, usually someone of the calibre and social appeal of Celeste Holm, Jane Morgan or Hildegarde.

A number of exclusive small balls get by nicely with special ideas. Fans of all kinds add the interest for the Fan Ball, which aides the Children's Cancer Fund of America and headdresses do the same for the post-debutante Tiara Ball, given to aid the Spence-Chapin Adoption Service. A royal guest of honor is the drawing card for the Imperial Ball, given for the Hospitalized Veterans Service of the Musicians Emergency Fund. Prince Rainier was the central figure of this ball the night his engagement to cinema star Grace Kelly was announced. At the most recent Imperial Ball (Dec. 7) beautiful Princess Niloufer Osmanglu of Hyderabad was the decorative honor guest. A pageant, typical of the entertainment popular at this type of chic ball presented a posy-deb, Miss Mary McFadden, as Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra; Miss Mary Cushing, a deb of this season, as Queen Mumtaz Mahal, in whose honor the Taj Mahal was built; Victoria Fairbanks, daughter of Douglas Jr., as Aimee Dubucq Mrs. Joseph A. Neff as the Empress Theodora of Byzantium; and Joan Fontaine as Lady Richard Burton. They represented a judicious mixture of various social groups, a dash of the theatre for spice, all lovely and magnificently attired.

Lucky Numbers

While professional entertainers are sought for many glamorous balls in many cases they are asked to draw the lucky numbers or make a presentation speech rather than to sing, dance or give a comedy routine. If they do actually entertain, committee chairman often ask them as tactfully as possible to do their act in 15 minutes. After all, patrons of the benefit are there to eat, drink, dance and be seen. They are the show themselves and don't welcome professional competition. A few years ago at a ball benefitting the Kips Bay Boys' Club a famed crooner, now married to a leading film star, sang for almost a full hour and almost ruined the ball. Instead of being grateful to him, the fashionables were in a mood to tar-and-feather him for interrupting their dancing so long. On the other hand, Eka Chase, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Helen Hayes and Katharine Cornell have given sparkle and lift to many a society benefit merely by brief and witty extemporaneous remarks about the purposes of the charity involved.

Do It Yourself

One of the few great society functions where entertainment is heavily featured in the Mardi Gras Ball, given to aid many philanthropies of the N.Y. Junior League. The entertainment, however, is by members of the organization, who are rehearsed for months in advance by professionals of the theatre and television. The show they present usually is almost Ziegfeldian in its opulence, with many of the girls as beautiful and undraped as any showgirls who dazzled Follies audiences in the 1920s. Sixteen to 20 business firms pay $2,500 each to sponsor individual acts. This entitles them to advise concerning the costumes worn and the theme of the act put on by the Junior League models representing their organization. They receive generous publicity, not only in the press, but through the whole show being televised over WCBS-TV. The windup of the presentation each year is the high point of interest as it is then that the identity of the Queen of the Mardi Gras is revealed when she makes her appearance with a leading actor—it was Anthony Quinn last year—and is crowned by Mayor Wagner.

"Because of the predominantly youthful membership of the Junior League, our ticket cost is kept modest," said a member of the committee. "We make enough, however, to support the League's varied welfare program. Also, the main work done backstage, as well as on stage, is done by our volunteers, although costumes and decor are executed by professionals in those fields. Immediately after one Mardi Gras Ball is over we begin planning and working a full year ahead on the next one."

LAMENT FOR BREAK-IN DATES

The Twist Knocks Cerebral Comics On Head in Booming Cafe Cutups

By JOE COHEN

The year 1961 has been the most unpredictable year in nitery annals. It's been a year when the centre of activity shifted from the head to the hips—and with it came one of the most unusual box-office upswings within memory of the oldest nitery denizen.

The year started out as the one in which the brains of the industry would take over. Cerebral entertainment was on the upbeat. The cultural lag was at long last catching up to the nitery world. The mental comics had reached the peak, the small, intimate and clever revues were catching on, and psychologists and psychotics bumped into each other on the common meeting ground of the cafe floors. A nocturnal design for living in the upper IQ areas was firmly being established in the nitery firmament.

So what happens? Toward the end of the year an item known as The Twist is discovered and in the short time from it's first dissertation in VARIETY to the tail end of the year, it has become the hottest thing in the cafe world, with the depths of its boxoffice still unprobed. The craze is booming beyond prediction, and it's being supported with hard dollars and cents in the most unlikely places from the cellar dives to the storefront niteries such as the Peppermint Lounge and the Wagon Wheel to the upper social strata. The producers also entered the race to produce the first Twist film. Cocktail lounges took out a few tables to permit twisters to twist, and the electric organ, on which Twist music generally hinges, became the pied piper luring adults and juveniles to slipped disk gulch.

The entertainment industry again has discovered that the kids are the leaders in boxoffice trends. Watch the juveniles and the elders will soon follow. All this happened in a year which was to have marked the cranial upbeat of the century.

Actually, this is the affirmation of the dictum that a little child shall lead them. Apparently, the parents after years of listening to rock 'n' roll finally learned to dig the beat. Everywhere from the pocketsized radios to the elaborate stereo setups, came that persistent rhythm at first the parents hated it, then tolerated it, then liked it, and now they dance to it. It's taken the elders almost a decade to catch up to what the kids were doing in their subteens. Again, the parents have learned to bow to the will of their superiors, their kids. If you can't beat 'em join 'em.

Long Exposure

The Twist has had a long exposure in all media. Evolving from the basic rock 'n' roll rhythms, the dances had wide circulation on television. The kids on "The American Bandstand" have been doing the dances leading up to The Twist for many years. From the Slops, the Mashed Potato, The Fish, the Pony, and from The Twist is emerging the Hully Gully. Some say, the dance precursors are trying to ruin a good thing with improvements. The Hully Gully as yet, isn't making it. They say it's too hard to do, whereas The Twist requires little or no skill. The bonifaces want the dance masters to leave this good thing alone for a long time.

The cafe industry hasn't had an upbeat like this since the early days of the rhumba, and then when the wartime prosperity took over, the mambo was well on its way to becoming the national dance. From there on, the cha-cha-cha tookover. The latter brought great prosperity to the dance schools and to the dance teachers who plied their pedagogy in hotels, cruise ships, and the hill-country hostels. But in all these items, an element of great skill was necessary. It was not uncommon to see elders take to the dance floor with their lips moving while counting out the beat even faster than their legs could carry them. Dance schools virtually had to be escort services as well in order to make out in cha cha. On all these counts, these terp seminaries had their greatest measure of prosperity. The Twist is seen as ending that era. It not only is taking the accent off the Latin terping which had a vogue of two decades, but also is steering the trend away from dances which require schooling.

Many cafe bonifaces are banking on The Twist remaining popular for a long time. Policies of established niteries are being reconverted to the hip-swivel. There are Twist matinees, and Twist nights in the more conservative spots. The Twist is on at any time in the clubs which have taken the trend by the forelock.

Practical Basis

On a practical basis, The Twist is being given credit for tearing folks away from the television sets and onto the dance floor. People are going to niteries who haven't taken a fling in cafes for ages. At first, it was a rush to the Peppermint Lounge. If the no admittance sign was up, then down the street to the Wagon Wheel. From then on in, it was anywhere with a Twist policy. There is still another aspect. There are those who after watching The Twist, who felt that they had seen everything there was to see about it. They subsequently went off to regulation niteries, or else to a spot where they could squirm out a few theniselves. It is said to be responsible for getting people out. Why else did the year 1961 wind up stronger at the boxoffice than at the beginning. Why else was the pre-Christmas holiday shopping season as strong as it was in the early fall when all niteries showed off their biggest and most expensive headliners.

At this point, the craze is even more encompassing than that of the hula hoop, or scrabble, and has become more universal than a Diners Club card. It's a crazy dance that may be a sign of the times. But no matter, everybody, including nitery owners and patrons are ready to enjoy it as long as it lasts or as long as their spines hold out. It's a boxoffice bonanza — for chiropractors also.

TODAY'S COMIC & NEW MATERIAL

By CHARLIE MANNA

Comedy is a subject that everyone feels he can discuss with authority. Yet comedy is the most complex of all the arts, and certainly the most elusive. The American public has been saturated with enough comedy over the past decade to give it a definite awareness of laugh techniques. Exposed to weekly doses of such master comedians as Berle, Hope, Benny, Caesar, and the parade of comedy talent on the Ed Sullivan Show, the audience grows more sophisticated and more knowledgable. The American people want to laugh as much as they ever did, but they cannot be caught off-guard as easily. Therefore, a new comedian is confronted with the greatest challenge in the history of show business. New ideas become the criteria, and craftsmanship takes a back seat. It was just this process in reverse that created the comedy giants of today, the giants who are not being replaced.

Charlie Manna

Let's turn the clock back 50 years. A young man interested in comedy had a place to learn his craft—vaudeville. He would begin his career in the smaller circuits, just as a ball player starts in the bush leagues and works his way up. First he would develop stage presence, then tinning, then individual style, and finally he would seek the new ideas that brought better bookings, better billing, and sometimes eventual stardom. A great comedy routine could make the rounds for years and still be

When Royalty Goes To The Theatre

By BUD FLANAGAN

(An excerpt from his autobiography, "My Crazy Days," Muller, (London); $2.50).

London.

During "Together Again" King George VI brought the Queen to the Victoria Palace as a birthday treat. We made our entrance, the drums rolled and with the audience we sang "Happy Birthday to You" before starting the show.

During the interval we arrived to meet the Royal Party. Her Majesty thanked us warmly for the birthday greeeting. "You know," she said with a radiant smile, "The Victoria Palace is my local." The King turned to me. "Is this the show my daughter, Princess Margaret, saw?" I said, "Yes, sir, with one or two exceptions. We cut out a few gags." He smiled and said firmly, "You put them all back again." We did, and added a few more.

While we were talking, the manager's phone rang and the King, who sat sitting on the desk, picked it up with a grin. The conversation went something like this. His Majesty; "Hello." The voice: "Is that you, Sam?" Putting his hand over the mouthpiece, the King asked, "Who's Sam?" When the manager said, "I am, sir." His Majesty asked the caller, "What do you want?" The voice said, "What time do you want the curtain to go up on the second half?" His Majesty turned and passed on the query. Sam said, "In about ten minutes, sir." The King then said, "In about ten minutes." The voice said cheerfully, "Okay, Sam." The man at the other end was the stage manager, Tommy Robinson. When we told him about it later he said faintly, "Cor Blimey," and couldn't believe it.

"Ring Out the Bells" pealed away for 20 months and during the run we did a Royal Show at the Palladium. Jack Benny and Dinah Shore were specially imported for the occasion. Jack Benny, a darling of a fellow, can get very excited under that deadpan manner. Just before the show I said, "Jack, if you want to see a sight you will never forget, come with me." I sneaked him under the stage to the tunnel through the orchestra door and along the passage up to the side of the stalls right opposite the Royal Box. It was covered in flowers, and the white-shirted audience was abuzz waiting for the Queen and the Duke to arrive.

Jack looked amazed and awe-struck. The drum roll started and the audience rose to their feet as the Queen entered her box, a magnificent and charming figure with diamonds flashing to match her smile. The cheers that followed the National Anthem were deafening.

We went back to Jack's dressing-room; he couldn't speak for admiration. There were a few telegrams on his table, and he started to read them. I made a quick exit. I had sent him one saying: "JACK BENNY. REMEMBER WHAT HAPPENED TO LINCOLN. CAN HAPPEN TO YOU. GOOD LUCK. BUD FLANAGAN." Just to cheer him up, I had reminded him that the great President had been assassinated in a theatre. Jack took it well and told me afterwards that the telegram gave him a laugh which he badly needed at the time.

Nobody can be more relaxed or enjoy themselves more thoroughly at the theatre than our Royal Family, but protocol must be observed and everyone on and off the stage has to respect it.

Kaye's Gaff

Poor Danny Kaye discovered this the hard way when he flew over specially to appear at a performance before King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. When Danny came on to do his act to tremendous and deserved applause, he opened with an excellent gag or two and suddenly broke off, quite unexpectedly, to introduce his wife in the stalls to the audience. They applauded politely but that killed his act, which never picked up again. Until we came on, singing "Arches," the house was practically in silence. If he had only checked in advance, we would have warned him that wives are not introduced during Royal Shows.

How he cried after the show. I felt very sorry for him. Their Majesties didn't object, of course, but those 25 guinea ringsiders were not amused.

Much preparation and planning gors into a Royal Show. It was Val Parnell who initiated the now standard "warm-up" to thaw the barrier between artists and audience before the Monarch arrives. Val came to rely on the Crazy Gang to do this job and it has become our regular duty, not always an easy one.

At one warm-up the Gang were up in the box before the arrival of the Royal Family. We brought in a high baby's chair for Prince Charles, who was only a tot then. One of the Gang was on a ladder under the box boring a hole with a brace and bit so as to enable the people sitting directly underneath to get a better view of Her Majesty and the Duke. We sprinkled the flowers with rice, and the people underneath kept ducking, thinking it was water. The audience loved it, except one stupid and shortsighted critic who accused us of using the Queen as a stooge. Foolish man; Her Majesty hadn't arrived yet.

The Water Rats had the honour of making the Duke of Edinburgh a Companion of the Order after a special luncheon at the Mayfair Hotel, attended by several hundred Water Rats and their friends. Jack Hylton was to present the Emblem Rat and it was arranged that I should fix it in the Duke's buttonhole.

The great moment came when I picked up the tiny gold badge and advanced towards the Duke. As I fixed it into the buttonhole, I felt the Duke's lapel and said, "That's a smashing bit of material." He roared.

Not long ago I had the honour

Nostalgia for Live Showmanship As Norm of Old Film Houses

By PETE SMITH

Hollywood.

It is an evening in the year 1932. In the forecourt of Grauman's Chinese Theatre the arriving ticketholders are thrilled by something new in theatredom. Here in the concerete walk are the actual prints of the hands and feet of the world's greatest stars. And ever there may be seen the famous showman, Sid Grauman in person, as he greets old friends and makes new ones. In the lobby the customers are startled by life-like wax figures of their film favorites dressed in their most famous screen characterizations.

In the auditorium, beautiful young ladies beautifully gowned are politely ushering people to their seats. The huge orchestra fronting the entire width of the great stage is tuning up. The musicians are in evening clothes. Now the house lights are dimmed. An expectant hush comes over the audience. A white spot hits the left side of the pit as conductor Oscar Baum appears. As the spot travels with him to the podium the audience gives him a warm welcome. He taps the baton. The stick is raised. A dramatic pause in complete silence. And with the downbeat the overture is underway. It is a fine arrangement of Johann Strauss melodies. As it progresses, varied colored "mood lighting" floods the auditorium to blend sight with sound. Interspersed are talented soloists individually spotlighted. The music swells to its finale and with its last crashing chords the audience bursts into applause such as one might expect only in a concert hall. The conductor and his men and women take repeated bows.

The rise of the curtain then reveals "The Grant Hotel Street Scene" with live performers under the direction of LeRoy Prinz filling the huge stage set. Comes then in rapid succession, each specialty expertly spotted, The Society Dancers; Dorothy & Harry Dixon, burlesque dancers; Gary & Joyce, bellhop crooners; Harry Bayfield & Baby Ducklings; Caligary Bros., English pantomimists and a number of other "Street Entertainers," with the very popular Will Mahoney winding up the live show which in itself is worth more than the price of admission—$12.50 top reserved seats.

Following an intermission, a short subject featuring the world-renowned Flying Cordonas, directed by Jack Cummings and narrated by you-know-who. And then the main attraction. And what an attraction! "The Grand Hotel," starring Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone and Jean Hersholt. Had so many great stars ever appeared in one picture? And these were no merely "guest shots" but each star played an important character in the Vicki Baum plot. "The Grand Hotel" was perhaps the greatest boxoffice magnet of the era. Yet it was augmented by a big live show. And that's the crux of this piece.

The Live Element

The live, human element has taken on new importance in the theatre of today. Los Angeles for example, has for many years been considered a dud for live shows. Now, many small off-Broadway type of theatres are flourishing in all parts of the community. Top legit ticket prices prevail for even the small, 200-seat places. For the bigger theatres, reservations for Broadway attractions must be made months in advance. Ice shows and circuses have been packing them in. Even high school auditoriums sell out for established plays.

Yes, of course, tv has taken a mighty toll on motion picture theatre boxoffices. Yet, the point cannot be ignored that live shows are booming. It is because of the tidal wave of electronics entertainment in the home and in the film theatres that the trend to live, flesh entertainment grows. Isn't it, therefore, reasonable to believe that a return of the human element in film theatres would make sense? Naturally, this would apply chiefly to the bigger theatres in larger cities, many of which have stage facilities for live presentations. But most of which could do with increased week-to-week business.

The human element however, must not be confined to the stage. It should start at the top and permeate throughout the theatre's personnel in its contacts with the public. Today the theatre manager, like Sid Grauman, can be seen in the lobby all right. But unlike the late showman, the manager today is generally too busy stuffing popcorn sacks to notice even his own mother, should she appear on the scene.

In former years the theatre manager was a popular figure in his community and took part in local civic and charity functions. He was a front man for his theatre at any and all times. And it paid off.

Like Home Viewing

In most cases attending a movie theatre is much like watching a tv show at home. True, the screen is larger, the sound is louder and the commercials are missing. However, like tv practically everything is electronic or mechanical. Only more so, because in most cases you get double features. And very often you don't go because the feature you want to see is on the supper-show time or starts again at 10 or 10:15 which would keep you up too late to handle tomorrow's job.

There is a new generation that has never seen a stage and screen show as put on by the Graumans, the Rothafels, the Balabans, Katzes, Plunketts, and the Reisenfelds of 25 years ago. And there are countless many for whom such a combined show would have irresistible nostalgic appeal. After all, how many people in the country can go to the Music Hall in Manhattan, the sole beacon still shining in the darkened world of live and filmed entertainment.

It may be argued that personnel salaries and expenses are higher than in 1932. But so are possibilities in the way of admission prices as compared to the $1.50 top of former years. Perhaps orchestras would not be quite as large nor the acts quite as many as in Sid Grauman's day. But today's appeal for live, flesh entertainment is undeniable. And showmanship ideas on par with stars footprints, wax dummies, military ushers, etc., need not be confined to the past.

Once again, the orchestra will rise out of the pit, the baton will be raised—and a combined stage and screen show will be here . . . and there . . . and there.

I can dream, can't I?

Vaude 'Comeback' Flurry in Paris

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Music halls in Paris, once a standard entertainment value, have been wobbly since about 1954. An easy explanation is the shortage of turns to turn the turnstiles, combined with the disclinclination of potent stars to work too hard or too often and their fear of "over-exposure" to the public. Nonetheless this last year has witnessed some improvement in the Parisian varieties, over all.

Pierre Barlatier set up what he called the Paris Conservatory of Song in early '60 and at about $20 a month lined up some singing hopefuls to help insure a backlog of future headline singers. Some of the powers behind the houses got behind him and he put Maurice Poggi in charge.

The vaude "comeback" revealed a new and young audience with money when beguiled by what was offered. Interest in singers of depth, drive and personality was notable.

Still considered tops in drawing trade are Yves Montand, Maurice Chevalier, Jacques Brel, Gilbert Becaud, Charles Aznavour, Leo Ferre, Charles Trenet, the aforesaid Sacha Distel and Johnny Hallyday, Georges Brassens, Edith Piaf, Colette Renard, Patachou, Jacqueline Francois, Juliette Greco and Line Renaud.

Runnersup include Henri Salvador, Philippe Clay, Marcel Amont, Dario Moreno, Dalida, Maria Candido, Michele Arnaud, Cora Vaucarire, Gloria Lasso, Eddie Constantine, Catherine Sauvage.

Vaude (And Live) Woes: V-i-d-e-o

[SAME IN SCOTLAND AS ELSEWHERE]

By GORDON IRVING

Glasgow.

Show biz is badly in need of new leaders in Scotland. As the tv age develops, and more local stations start operations, attendances at vaude and legit houses slump.

Two new commercial tv stations, one at Aberdeen, and the other at Carlisle, over the England-Scotland border, are relaying networked programs into thousands of homes, with a modest proportion of local-flavored shows, mainly of the news-magazine type. The tee-off of these stations, Grampian Television and Border Television respectively, is keeping thousands of potential customers at home watching filmed and national shows, with result that the local incentive for staging live performances in theatres and concert halls is being stifled.

In central Scotland the powerful Scottish Television station keeps up a steady output, with local programs getting a stronger show. Allied to output of the BBC-TV network, this is formidable opposition for any live theatre promotor.

Commercial tv in north Scotland is reaching another 900,000 viewers via the Aberdeen station, with transmitters at Durris and Mounteagle. Chairman of this station is Sir Alexander King, cinema magnate, with James Buchan as program controller.

In Glasgow the company formed by Canadian newspaper magnate Roy Thomson continues to provide entertainment and controversy for the Scots, and rates as enviable opposition to the more dignified but solid BBC station, which is busily constructing new tv studios adjoining its radio station in the west side of Glasgow. Scottish Television has a new managing-director in Noel Stevenson, former executive of the Independent Television Authority, and himself an experienced broadcaster and lecturer, and his influence has still to be felt.

3,000,000 For TV

The Scottish Television station is approaching a 3,000,000 audience in the Central Scotland area, which has a population of four million and eighty thousand. Recent survey shows that 71% of the population in private houses receive STV programs.

The number of film situations still declines. In the past six years a total of some 175 cinemas have shuttered in Scotland. Television is stated to be the main factor, but another is the removal of hundreds of families to outlying subdivisions which are, so far, minus cinemas.

The heavily-populated county of Lanarkshire had a particularly heavy closure figure, with a total of 76 cinemas shutting their doors between 1955 and 1961.

In live theatre, the position also shows serious omens, with the Empire Theatre at Edinburgh a probable casualty of the tv age before February and, a similar threat to the Empire, Glasgow, in the next few years. The latter is earmarked for property development, although theatrical unions and customers will fight the move.

Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, a leading legiter, and showcase for new plays at International Festivals, is also a probable victim in a general reconstruction plan. It will, however, be replaced by a newer and more modern theatre inside a giant office block, including Festival headquarters.

Metropole, Glasgow vaude spot, where Stan Laurel and Harry Lauder made appearances, suffered a recent setback in a fire, and is being re-built to again house vaude. Alec Frutin, who controls it with his family, is one of the stalwarts of intimate vaude in Scotland, and will retain the Metropole's traditional plush-and-music-hall interior for theatre's centenary this year (1962). His tartan extraganza winter shows have been a feature here for years.

One of the surprises of the year has been the success of a 27-year-old comedian-singer, Andy Stewart, whose disc of "A Scottish Soldier" reached the top charts. This young performer packed out the 2000-seater Glasgow Empire twice a night for most of the summer, and enjoyed tremendous popularity. His success may be a pointer to the return of family-style shows. Comedian planed to Australia for an eight-days' tour to cash-in on his disk hit.

Anzac Economy Helping

By ERIC CORRICK

Sydney.

Scheduled to visit Australia in 1962 are a Russian Ballet troupe, Russian Circus, Spanish dancing troupe, Japanese revue, Hungarian orchestra, French revue, German singing troupe, British revue, plus a batch of American acts.

J. C. Williamson Ltd., Tivoli Circuit, Tibor Rudas, Garnet Carroll, Aztec Services Ltd., Harry Wren and independent promoters with backing from influential foreign interests are activating this splurge.

Buoyant Biz

The live theatre in this territory has been extremely buoyant in recent times, and this buoyancy is freely expected to continue throughout '62 and into '63, not only covering the local scene but in New Zealand likewise.

With more money circulating, an upbeat in employment and the end of the credit squeeze of the Robert Menzies' Liberal Party government, this country, according to financial experts, will experience a boom period in the year ahead via primary and secondary industries.

An indication of the money circulating today is seen in $18,000,000 profits turned in by departmental stores here. In the primary field, wool sales (it has been said that Australia lives on the sheep's back) have reached high levels, especially in Japan.

Foreign Increase

Australia's foreign population is increasing every month. Within—and beyond, the city limits have sprung up Italian, German, Greek, Hungarian, Spanish and French sectors, whose inhabitants seek entertainment from their homeland and are ready and able to pay for it, either in flesh-and-blood or celluloid. Show biz operators are finding it highly profitable to present international-flavored shows and this pattern will be followed in '62-3.

In this keyer today there are no less than six cinemas solely devoted to foreign language product, all playing to profitable business.

American product, excepting run-of-the-mill stuff, is still high in popularity with the Aussie fans. This should be the pattern throughout '62-'63. Long-running pix (two-and-half to three hours) at upped admissions are favourites, instanced by "South Pacific" (20th) 3d year; "Can-Can" (20th) 2d year; "Suzie Wong" (Par) four months; "Spartacus" (U) seven months, and "Pepe" (Col) four months, just to mention a few of the '61 toppers.

It's pleasant to record (for once) that nobody blames teevee for any biz dropoff!

NIGHT LIFE IN ATHENS

Tourists Increase—Important To Greek Economy

Athens.

Greek taverns with Bouzoukia music or other local orchestras have their own peculiar atmosphere. The most sophisticated ones have a floor show of Athenian and foreign talents but the majority confine themselves to a couple of singers with their guitars. Such tavernas are in almost every corner of Athens each one offering a food specialty.

Of course there are cosmopolitan night clubs like the Asteria, Athinea, Coronet or Roxy and the new luxurious hotel Mont-Parnes, built on the top of a mountain overlooking Athens, but they are like any other similar place all over the world.

Tourism is a new source of income for Greece and the increase of this year's visitors reached almost 35% in spite of the decline in other countries of Europe.

Many new hotels and tourist pavilons have been built. Life in Greece is still fairly cheap for tourists. Some places remain primitive but Athens and main spots are comfortable.

MY FATHER'S UNKNOWN TALENT

(How A Hard-Luck Immigrant Finally Justified Himself)

By CAP'N BILLY BRYANT

Point Pleasant, W. Va.

Show people as a whole are sentimentalists, an easy touch and are devoted to their father and mother. I come under the category. However, I made a terrible mistake when I was a young man. I sold my Dad short. I thought that he was a detriment to the Four Bryants, our family act, that his inferiority was keeping us off of Broadway and the Keith circuit. But watch out for that Dad! He may be shiftless, lazy, and sleep with his socks, son, but if he ever gets his foot in the groove, he'll make a fool out of you—and I speak from past experience.

As an English commoner, my Dad had learned the rudiments of making mistakes early in life. His grandfather was a lanscape gardener to Queen Victoria. Naturally, Dad wanted to be a florist. He saved his money and bought a hatchet, draw-knife and a saw only to be fired after ruining some of the shrubbery around the Queen's private pathway. Dad, in disgust, eloped to America with my mother in 1894. They begged their way across the Brooklyn bridge where Dad got a job driving a mule-drawn streetcar from the bridge out Flatbush Ave. and mother nursed Joseph Jefferson's baby son, Thomas.

Hard luck still followed Dad. The second day, the mule kicked him off the streetcar which ran over his hand severing several of his fingers. He sued the company for $5,000 and they offered him two. "It'll be five or nothing!" he screamed, and that's what he got. Nothing. Then mother, who had sung in "opera" in England, decided to put Dad into show business so, in a one-horse spring season, the Four Bryants (my sister and I had been born in New York) started barnstorming west.

Although Dad had a crippled hand, he wanted to be a magician so he could entertain the people as he high-pitched medicine from the back of the wagon. Mother played the guitar and my sister and I did songs and funny sayings. Dad had a liniment that he made out of red pepper and gasoline. If anyone in the crowd had rheumatism, to demonstrate, he would pull up their shirts and rub them till the red pepper burned so bad they would forget all about their rheumatism.

Later he purchased a small tent and became "Dr." Bryant. Joe Keaton was our comedian and Merr Cutler played the organ. They were married in our show and later, Buster Keaton was born. Dad started to hold medical consultations without a license. He did his first six weeks in jail in Coffeeville, Kansas, after a deputy sheriff's wife nearly died from taking too much of his herbs. He was in and out of jail all over Texas and Kansas.

In 1900 the Four Bryants were playing Bonnies, a concert hall on Canal St. in Buffalo. Incidently, Fanny and Kitty Watson were there at the time. Dad smothered one of his rabbits in his magic act and they fired him. They then put him to cleaning up the wine rooms after they closed up. One night George M. Cohan and his sister stopped in. They felt sorry for us and George said he would write us an act that would put us on Broadway. He did and got us an engagement at Shea's Theatre. The act was good but we were terrible and we opened and closed at four o'clock the same afternoon. We just didn't have it.

More Misadventures

After that we joined Cap Price's "Water Queen" showboat at Augusta, Ky., where mother sang illustrated song slides, now called ulcerated slides. My sister danced to "The Wedding of the Lily and the Rose" and I sang "The Green Grass Grows all Around" till I was hoarse. I was a riot! They wouldn't let me go. But Dad? No good. Even in that small river hamlet he couldn't make it. The pigeons in his magic act got loose and flew out the windows and when you go out a window on either side of a showboat you're in the river.

Capt. Price cancelled Dad's act and although it was the first time in my life I had ever received an applause and taken a bow I suddenly became so very important and overbearing I told my mother that Dad was ruining our chances in show business and had to go. Dad agreed to go back to England if it would help the act and mother turned her accusing eyes toward me and stormed, "You shut your trap you long-eared jackass! I'll take care of your father."

Six weeks later he made a fool out of me. This is how it came about.

Parade for Pop

To give Dad something to do, Capt. Price put a cork in the mouthpiece of an auto horn and let him march along in the parade. This he did so mechanically that they had to take him out of the band and put him in the kitchen washing dishes. From Buckingham Palace to the kitchen sink was quite a drop for Dad.

After the Water Queen closed its season, we decided that we would never leave the river that had been so good to us so we took our savings and went up to East Liverpool, Ohio, and bought a shanty-boat that was broken down on each end and humped up in the middle likeit was headed for the maternity ward.

Dad went out on the river bank, looked at the boat, then took his draw-knife, hatchet and saw that he had brought with him from England, cut the carlings loose, and put a beautiful shar in the boat without even putting it on the docks. An unheard of river feat. In other words, my Dad was, unknowingly, a ship carpenter and one of the finest on the western waters. During his career he built four of the most beautiful showboats that ever graced the Mississippi basin that brought fame and fortune to the Four Bryants.

When my parents passed on I laid them away in a white marble mausoleum in Point Pleasant, West Va., where we built our first little showboat, "The Princess," and where September river fogs cast their shadows and the whistles of passing steamboats, they so dearly loved, echo through their resting place.

Fallout Fatalism Favors Fun Factories, Or TV Drops Dead: Chi's Cafes Boom

By MORRY ROTH

Chicago.

Chicago bonifaces have a multitude of explanations for the mid-1961 upturn in cafe biz. It's been one of the most profitable periods since the postwar make-hay-days. Not all have shared in the new prosperity, but the beat in both the Rush St. boite belt and the downtown supper c'ubs has been uptempo.

A spate of new clubs opened in the Rush area, in the neighborhoods and in the suburbs. In addition, the Bonaparte Room of the Sheraton-Blackstone hotel returned to an entertainment policy, and the Cart, a south-of-the-Loop eatery, has added entertainment. Also, the Gate of Horn, a folk music spot, moved from a dingy basement on north Dearborn St. to elaborate trappings in the Rush St. area.

Loop Moribund

The prosperity in the larger clubs on Rush St. has resulted in or been coincidental with a proliferation of smaller clubs along the street plus an outcropping of cabarets on the streets leading into the main entertainment artery. A nearby cabaret enclave has taken form on Tooker Place, once the site of the legendary Fickle Pickle Club where Ben Hecht and other newspapermen hung out in the first two decades of the century. It now houses Le Bistro, Kismet, Absinthe House and several other clubs.

The outbreak of smaller clubs in and around this area, in other neighborhoods and suburbs is providing the first opportunity in over two decades for a new or upcoming act to break in. Also good for young talent is the cabaret theatre trend, which by early fall had eight or more cafes using tab revues. The trend, initiated by the Second City, has also seen several of the groups fall by the wayside, but in each case it has provided a showcase for from six to 12 tyros.

The Reasons Why

Other signs of better times includes reports from cafe owners that midweek business is paying its own way and the clubs are no longer dependent upon the weekend spenders. Local talent agencies say that they not only have more outlets for newer acts, but that the front-rank niteries are buying more expensive acts.

As to reasons why, one operator: "People are nervous about the international situation and are going out to get away from the ominous news they get on tv-radio. It seems to happen during every crisis." Another says: "The suburbanites are tiring of television and parties at home. Going out is socially acceptable again and it's okay to say that you went to a night club, particularly if there is a hip comic on the bill. Also, the young marrieds have learned to live with their mortgages and car payments and still have enough to go out for dinner and a show."

A frontrunner in the cabaret renascence is the Playboy Club, now with counterparts in Miami and New Orleans and with c'ubs skedded for a half-dozen other cities by the middle of 1962. Most successful by far of the freshet of key clubs in Chi, it has recently added another show room to its set-up here and now employs nine variety acts and three musical units in the Windy City operation alone.

With the Chez Paree dark for over 18 months, the Empire Room of the Palmer House has asserted itself as the city's premier room. It has been booking the top names that used to play the Chez Paree and appears to be attracting the Chez regulars in addition to its own convention and family trade.

Oscar Marienthal, who along with his brother George owns Mister Kelly's, the London House and the Happy Medium cabaret theatre, characterizes the year thusly: "It's been the best year in the eight year history of Mister Kelly's. Not by a wide margin, but still the best. Perhaps the best indication is that we have made money on every act that has played Kelly's this year—and that is the first time that it has happened."

FRED KEATING

By MILBOURNE CHRISTOPHER

Frederick Serrano Keating—he made the middle name disappear from his billing as a teenage trickster—saw his first magician when he was eight at the Eden Musee in New York.

Buatier de Kolta, a bushy-bearded French wizard, floored him with his vanishing birdcage. Later the cage feat, in Keating's deft hands, baffled several new generations of theatregoers.

An article once stated that Keating saw de Kolta do the vanishing birdcage trick at the Eden Musee, but in light of the great magico's death in 1903 it is unlikely Keating, who was eight at the time, could have seen De Kolta.

Sidney Lenz, who could do a neat card trick or two himself, initiated young Keating into the intricacies of bridge and pasteboard presto. The bridge-playing sleighter-of-hander in Arthur Train's "Illusion," was based on the Keating personality.

Stanwood Menken, in a Santa Claus suit, gave Keating a box of elementary tricks at a Christmas party. He was on his way.

Show business was in his blood. His Spanish-speaking mother, Camilla Serrano, was a singer. His Irish father, first a newspaperman, then an attorney was, as Fred said, "one of the finest actors ever to plead a case in court."

His actor-uncle played with Charlotte Walker in "On Parole." His earliest memory was watching the performance from the wings of the now-gone Majestic Theatre on Columbus Circle, N.Y.

Keating cut classes to see a Nate Leipzig matinee and the master sleight-of-hand performer was so taken by his poise and personality that he accepted him as a pupil without pay.

Keating ran away from Peekskill Military Academy to join the Thurston illusion show as an assistant. He learned stage sorcery the hard way, washing ducks, shining the great man's patent leather shoes and moving crates.

Keating debuted on his own at 15.

He set the pattern for the suave, witty night club wizards of the cover-charge age. He conjured in Ruth Selwyn's "9:15 Revue" and the first John Murray Anderson "Almaniacs."

He played his first dramatic lead on Broadway in 1933 with Tallulah Bankhead in "Forsaking All Others" and his last in 1954 opposite her in "Dear Charles."

Early in life he traveled with the 101 Ranch Wild West Show and not too many years ago he spent a season with his own illusion show on the carnival route.

Keating was a Palace theatre favorite on the two-a-day, teeing off with a two-week stint in February 1929. He went to Hollywood in the early 30's and made six films. For a time he renounced magic and, in an appearance at the Rainbow Room atop the RCA Bldg., he specialized in patter without the presto, but the old urge was too strong. Back he came into the magic circle.

Curiously, for several years he refused to do the vanishing birdcage that had been his trademark, but he again mastered the technique and it has a high spot of his hocus-pocus until the end.

Varied Career

Recent New York appearances included "Characters and Chicanery" at the Phoenix in 1956 where he shared the evenings with Cornelia Otis Skinner. As "Fun and Games" the blend of monolog and mystery came to Broadway in 1957. He did an act in Beatrice Lillie's "Beasop's Fables" on the road. He coached the magic sequences of the N.Y. City Center's production of "The Consul" in 1960 and last June 27 he teamed with Sheila Barrett in "Charades and Chicanery" at the Theatre Marquee, N.Y.

For a while he offered his "Wit and Witchcraft," one-man presentation through W. Colston Leigh.

During the past few years he turned out several mystery novels, one for Mike Shayne which popped up on tv. Naturally the magician played a leading part in the proceedings. He was working on an autobiography when he died last July.

Robert-Houdin once wrote that a "magician" was an actor playing the part of magician.

Incidentally, the "broken wand" service was held for Keating July 2 at Campbell's in N.Y. Representatives of the Society of American Magicians, the International Brotherhood of Magicians, the Magicians Guild, F.A.M.E., Future American Magical Entertainers and the London Magic Circle attended. This writer presided as president of the first-named organization.

When You Can't Even Hear Them Breathe

Seasoned Songstress' Perspective on Audiences And Customer Behaviorism

By HILDEGARDE

It would be amusing if, sometime, a critic would review an audience. He could describe, in a vinegarish way, all the dear people who come chattering down the aisle long after the curtain is up, of the seats clattering as they are seated and then, almost at once, clattering again as they decide their first arrangement wasn't right at all. Those who're unfailingly late returning after the intermission also should be part of this review together with the oh-so-gay gossip who simply has to remind the member of her party seated furthest from her of something or other; it doesn't matter what.

Such a review should, I think point out that these people—and, alas, all the nice, polite people in the audience—often get less from the stage than they paid to see. For some players react badly to distraction and only one player has to be put off to throw a monkey-wrench, as my father used to say, into the rest of the cast.

The bridge built between an audience and players, over which emotions shuttle back and forth to weave a magic, is, to me, a very fascinating thing. I know that upstairs in my suite I can be feeling quite ill, even wonder if I should go on. But the minute that warm spot is turned on me and I sense the expectancy of my audience I feel better. And within minutes I forget I ever felt ill. I'm not a hypochondriac. Just a ham.

In my work few distractions can destroy the rapport between performer and audience. Since I don't have to stay with any continuity I can absorb interruptions. If a child talks out—there often are children at my dinner shows—I can make it part of my act. "Rock-a-bye-baby," I can sing. If women laugh and whisper, I can stop and stare at them, quite flabbergasted, to the amusement of everyone else and to their self-conscious but deserved discomforture.

Down and out rude people are good for me, a challenge. I think, "Allright, I'm the cat, you're the mouse. I'm going to get you right where I want you."

Also, before every performance I pray. I understand that one doesn't always confess to this, but this is how I am—this is my belief.

During the first five minutes of a performance I've come to expect a lack of attentiveness—my audience is more interested in looking me over; taking inventory of my face, figure and dress than in anything I can do. They also exchange whispered commentaries on my age, my income and my romances. I never try to make a tremendous thing out of my first song.

2 Unforgettable Bombs

Only twice in my life—in which I've played to plenty of bad audiences—have I walked off the floor. This first happened four or five years ago at Boston's Blinstrub's; a big place, not at all like the plush supper clubs with which I'm so familiar. And I happen to believe a career is healthier if it's diversified. So, if I get my price, I take any engagement that I feel can do me no harm.

At Blinstrub's, which holds about 2,000 people, I held my own until the last show on Saturday night. Then the noise was so great, I literally could not hear myself.

My first chore—anything that had to be done before that audience deserves that word—was to introduce an important foreign visitor. I tried. I tried very hard. I felt so sorry for the poor man standing on the stage beside me. "Ladies and Gentlemen," I said, meaning it merely as a figure of speech, you understand "I have the honor to introduce to you . . ." Nobody heard one word I said. I tried again. And again. My composure dropped to considerably below normal. I took my visitor by the arm and guided him down the steps. "Do not," I told him "judge Americans by the quality of the people here tonight."

I went back and tried to sing. "The Last Time I Saw Paris," 'I'll Be Seeing You . . .'" shouted hundreds of voices in measured unison, as if they had rehearsed to thwart me. "'The Last Time I Saw Paris!' 'I'll Be Seeing You!' 'The Last Time I Saw Paris!'"

"I'll get to them later" I shouted into the mike so loud that it cracked my voice and sent it banging against the walls.

"We want it now" they bellowed.

I asked myself what tricks I might use and knew there were none.

Finally, after about 20 minutes of the greatest effort I have ever put forth, if not the greatest performance, I stood up. "Pouff to you!" I yelled. And off I went.

The manager was very upset, I was too.

Upon this occasion it was my good fortune that the following night, Sunday, and the end of my engagement, there was a benefit, at Blinstrub's for St. Anne's Organization. Hundreds, upon hundreds crowded in to see Hildegarde," a pillar of the church." And did I give them my all, did I? And did they respond, did they! The manager called me a champion, a name considerably at variance with that which he had called me the night before. Always I've been grateful to those good supporters of St. Anne for helping me get the bad taste of failure out of my mouth.

My second fiasco, in another big place at Windsor, Canada, was even worse than the first. It had no happy ending. I walked off. And that was that. My Windsor audience consisted almost entirely of drunken traveling salesmen who sat with their backs to me. That night I learned backs can talk. Each and every one of those backs demanded, all to eloquently, "Who is this dame anyhow?" In a way I was relieved that that audience wasn't facing me. I must have looked pretty insane standing up there, opening and closing my mouth, soundlessly apparently; unable, even with the mike, to out shout the din.

The night, to add to my humiliation, a dear friend who was in Windsor with her father, a prominent judge, had brought him to see me. He saw—in my dressingroom, in tears. And a temper.

An odd thing. I am not yet able to think of those two defeats without a shadow of the anger and chagrin and sadness I knew returning to my heart.

And Those Other Audiences

I prefer to remember all my wonderful audiences, the supper club rooms that become as quiet as cathedrals, with cigarets being lighted here and there the only evidence there is life out there beyond my lights.

Last year, at the Plaza's Persian Room, I sang "I Love Thee," in the original Norwegian, while playing parts of the Grieg A Minor Concerto and Peer Gynt Suite. For a week three Norwegians came, every night, to the dinner show. Then they sent me a beautiful, big bouquet. When I thanked them, I asked the lady in the group to come out on the floor with me. She told the audience how much it had meant to her and her friends, who were flying back to Norway that night, to hear this song in "such excellent Norwegian." For her compliment I must give thanks to my singing teacher, Lea Karina.

There are, for me, two kinds of applause; the applause that comes after I've sung the songs audiences particularly like me to sing—long and deep, forever wonderful—and the applause that's gay and full of laughter.

In my time, naturally, I've had some odd gifts. Indeed there have been moments when I've wondered if I should open them while I was on the floor. But I always do. The most unusual came, unwrapped, on a silver tray; a pair of pink panties, trimmed with pink mink. I held them up—what else was there to do?—and asked the donor to stand up. He was, to one one's great surprise, the manufacturer. But he had given us all so much fun and laughter that I didn't mind his getting a plug.

What is it that creates mood in a supper club? A combination of many things, of course. But, above all, I believe, it's the music and the words of the song itself.

"Grieg's "I Love Thee" and "Lili Marlene" are two songs that never fail. Singing these songs I've discovered that quiet can have several depths to it, can even be so deep that it seems to have a pulse.

Always I make "Lili Marlene"—to which the toughest audience respond—my last song. I've showmanship enough to know I can't top it. I say into the mike—so quietly that I can just about hear myself—"And now, here's Lili Marlene". The reaction to this creates almost a reverend silence.

When I finish "Lili" my head goes down, the trumpet sounds taps, there's a blackout. For about three seconds, always, there is a dead hush. Then the applause thunders. And when the lights go up I'm as stirred as my audience.

Those are the wonderful moments of show business . . . when the magic lies over everything and nobody coughs and nobody lights a cigaret and you can't even hear them breathe.

to receive an invitation to a luncheon party given by Her Majesty for a few people from various walks of life. The chief guest, you will remember, was Yuri Gagarin, the first Space Man. It was a wonderful occasion, so friendly and informal, but what really tickled me was the following letter from Sir Norman Gwatkin of the Lord Chamberlain's office:

"My dear Bud,

As an old friend I thought I would put you wise on one or two points apropos your luncheon engagement on the 14th July.

1. You should not wear your old hat or fur coat, at least not inside the Palace.

2. Splits and double somersaults, besides being undignified at your age, are absolutely out.

3. Under no forseeable circumstances should you start throwing custard pies about. (We shall be at some pains to think out a sweet which will be unchuckable and so reduce the temptation.)

4. You will not be asked to sing so you need not bring your music or a piano.

5. If you embark upon a story remember that my cold and fishy eye will be fixed on you.

6. A quiet lounge suit would be correct wear. It would be quite wrong to come dressed as a debutante or even as a knight in armour

Yours,

Norman."

You Meet Such Interesting (?) Customers In The Saloons

By SOPHIE TUCKER

The old gal, age 85, who greets me with, "So good to see you again. My mother took me to see you when I was a little girl."

Some silly questions: How do you do it? What pills do you take? Why do you work so hard? Is it worthwhile doing this charity work?

The man or woman who invariably come up with, "I bet you don't remember me." My answer to them, "You're right, friend. You won your bet. I don't remember you."

Why will the customers insist on putting their arms around you.

Why will they stick their faces with their bad breath in your face to talk to you? and when you ingeniously manage to keep them at a distance from doing it, "They immediately call you a snob."

Why will the drunk always slap you on the back?

And drunk who shakes your hand so hard he darn near breaks your fingers.

The drunken gal who walks out on the floor to me, oblivious of the whole room, and asks me, "Where's the ladies' room." So I walk her direct to the rest room so I can continue my show.

The drunken gal who heckled me from the sidelines and when I asked the headwaiter to please take her out of the room, and she yells back at me, "I've been thrown out of better places than this one."

My past experience recently at a symphony concert to hear my friend, Richard Merrill. I was asked how I enjoyed it. Guess I floored the intellectual audience when I replied, "I hope you all will come and see me in the saloon I am appearing at in town."

The drunk on the town alone, rushes into my dressing room unannounced. Just curtains, as there isn't a door, and I'm standing almost in the nude and he barges in with, "When I was a train conductor I served you." I tell him to get the heck out and I have a rough time chasing him out. Next day I get a letter from him saying I "had no character."

The dinner shows when the family bring their children. Out of 20 or 25 youngsters, I can truthfully tell only five or six will say "please may I have your autograph" and will say "thank you." Such bad manners so I guess their mothers and fathers haven't got the time to teach them good manners.

Staying Young

I am doing a song in my act, "Be In the Business of Staying Young." Never have I had more elderly ladies in my audience nightly, and such a good feeling to hear them all thank me for giving them a new lease on life."

The new group acts booked into the clubs today who come in the night before they open to see the outgoing show and then run to the boss and yell, "How the devil can we follow that gal. We have no act."

On The Plus Side

On the affirmative side also are the fine people who patronize the clubs, who admire a good artist, who are friendly, tolerant and understanding when one of their party gets out of line. They will get him out of the room so as not to spoil the show for other people. These people go to niteclubs to be entertained and they don't complain about the food or the prices of drinks.

The real people who come up to my table to purchase a book or a record, drop the money in the box and away they go. The opposite ones, the "shoppers" examine the book from cover to cover—the record from top to bottom—and will hang around the table keeping others away who want a record or a book—and invariably the "shopper" doesn't buy a thing.

The one and only question customers ask nightly, "What is wrong with the new talent we see today? Why can't they get the attention of the audience as you do?" I can only answer them that our talent today is too quickly manufactured by public relations corps and record companies and very few have learned that you must entertain people—you must meet people—that people who come to clubs want to be entertained and that they, the people, want to make a star of you, if you have the stuff.

The comradeship we in the old days had is gone even in the niteclubs. As the boss and his wife in Omaha said "you are the first artist to play our club who has ever asked us to sit down and dine with him or her."

Holland's Limited Amusement Fare For Outlanders

By HANS SAALTINK

Amsterdam.

Entertainment resources in Holland so far as the visiting tourist is concerned remain meagre. There are concerts, Shakespeare or "My Fair Lady" in Dutch, a fairly interesting Holland Festival each year between Netherlands own plus combines Netherlands own plus imported foreign opera, legit and ballet elements. Working with a modest $100,000 budget annual festival impresario Peter Diamond has created a good prestige for this festival during the past decade.

It has become a tradition that the top actors from the five main theatrical companies in Holland join forces to appear in one play that otherwise could not be cast. In 1961 it was Communist Bertold Brecht's "Mother Courage."

For three consecutive years the Playhouse International produced a comedy revue in Amsterdam. First two were titled "Going Dutch," the 1961 show was named "We're In Dutch Again." Brainchild of two Americans, Jack and Jill Lardis, the revue is financed by breweries and a department store. This year the show also aimed at the Dutch public by casting three Dutch actors, among them mime Rob van Reyn, along side the English actors. Material is mostly taken from English intimate revues, with local color added. Director and actors stem from England.

Mainly for the Dutch are the cabaretiers, three of which are at the top form now, i.e. Wim Kan, Toon Hermans, who also was in Vienna with his one-man show and is contacted for a television appearance in the U. S. and Wim Sonneveld, who will resume his cabaret career with a one-man show when "My Fair Lady," in which he appears as Prof. Higgins, concludes.

Some of Sonneveld's former cabaret collaborators have found a haven at the "Tingel Tangel" cabaret, founded by actor Sielo Hoving. "Tingel Tangel" is a satirical and political cabaret, set in a small intimate room, where one may drink a beer next to a secretary of State who came to listen what is said about him. Other favorite nightspots of the Amsterdam public are joker Max Tailleur's nightclub and the cabaret "Saint Germain de Pres" of comedian Tom Manders, both on the Rembrandt Square.

Vegas Riviera's Facelift Via $3,500,000 Expansion

Las Vegas.

The Riviera Hotel here is engaged in a $3,500,000 expansion program, main feature of which will be an 11-story, 200-room addition. It will be topped by a Sky Room which will be entered into by an outdoor elevator.

There also will be a new wing of 120 lanai rooms overlooking the patio area, and a complete redesign of the Versailles Room. The dressing rooms will be removed to another area so that the stage may be enlarged.

New Circuses & Shopping Centres

By CLAIRE and TONY CONWAY

It's so nice on a cold day in January when the snow is up to here and the temperature is down to there to sit back in a warm living room with the latest copy of VARIETY and think back to summer with the sun shining down on a circus tent and the warm smell of dust, trampled clover, popcorn and elephants. You sit back, put up your feet, and think back—

But it wasn't warm last January when Ringling-Barnum was rehearsing at its new winterquarters in Venice, Florida. The cold wind whipped through the big unfinished building. When the performers were not being put through their paces for the four big numbers by Richard Barstow and Margaret Smith, they huddled around the smudgepot heaters like so many frozen orange trees. Wagons and equipment transferred from the old quarters at Sarasota were spotted here and there about the acreage. But the main point of interest was the huge new building which housed not only a scale reproduction of the arena area of Madison Square Garden but also served as a general workshop with wardrobe people busy in one spot and prop men working on rigging in another.

Venice, however, liked the show. Both tourists and townspeople came in numbers, carrying with them their folding chairs. Immediately, the price of coffee went up.

Ringlings Hit So. America

At the circus office in downtown Venice, Pat Valdo was busier than ever working on plans for a Ringling unit to go to South America as well as keeping in touch with the work going on under Bob Dover at quarters. In two short weeks Dick and Maggie put together the numbers for the traditional American tour. Then, in just a few additional days, they did the numbers for the South American show.

Ringling's 1961 tour opened in Miami Beach. But first came a very late dress rehearsal and, as a result, thus Claire Conway was locked out of the local YWCA. (No laughing matter—you're treated as though you had broken at least four, or possibly five of the ten commandments.)

The opening matinee provided one bit of excitement when a couple of Mrockowski's horses decided to see the show from the seats and joined the audience. Most of the people believed it was all a part of the act. The first evening show was very calm and provided none of the breathless excitement of the old New York openings. The performance went well and everyone seemed very happy with it. Barstow works such wonders in only two weeks.

By the time Ringling reached Washington in March everything was running like clockwork. Uline Arena looked like an entirely different building with Ringling set up and every performance was packed. For most of the date there were turnaways. Press, radio, and tv gave the show coverage such as it had not had in Washington for years.

In the meantime, the South American unit had opened. Barstow, Margaret Smith, Bob Dover, and Merle Evans had flown down during a layoff of the "big one" to get things going. With Paul Eagles as manager, Justino Loyal as equestrian director, and Ramon Escorcia as bandmaster, the latin edition included such acts as Unus, Dieter Tasso, and Buschbom's liberty horses.

A Shrine Circus

Al Dobritch International Circus, sponsored by the Shrine, played Washington's Uline Arena in April. Although the attendance was not so great as for Ringling, show provided a wonderful performance including Robert's Leopards (uncaged) and the George Hanneford Family riding act.

One day Kay Francis added something new to the dog act and her Easter rabbit rode into the ring on the back of the pony. Everyone on the show was amused by "Hanneford's Riding Rabbit." The bunny, for his part, took riding in his stride, but that is to be expected of anyone connected with this circus family.

Another cold night warm in our circus memories was the occasion when we caught Hoxie Bros., a brand new circus. Like the famous purple cow, we never expected to see a lavender circus. Yet there it was! There were only six pieces of rolling stock and all six were painted lavender.

Veteran of Nine

Before the performance that night, we noticed tiny Ann Spitzer in diminuitive cowgirl costume looking through the backdoor of the big top, carefully counting the house. As things turned out, Ann had every right to check on the audience for she was the star of the show, appearing in almost every act and doing all the routines a grownup showgirl would do. Not bad for an old lady of nine years!

Hoxie Bros. continued to grow throughout the summer, adding equipment and personnel until its performance barely resembled the one we saw early in the season. This was a mighty nice little outfit and it should easily make its way in seasons to come.

Wallace Bros., brightly painted in red and gold, came our way with members of the Cristiani family performing in true Cristiani style. (Some members of this renowned family went with the Ringling South American unit and some were with Wallace.) The Flying Wards were on the show during the early part of the season but later went to the West Coast and Rudy Bros. The Arturos, high wire act, joined during the Philadelphia stand and stayed for the remainder of the season.

We spent many a happy, sunlit hour on the Hunt show watching Paul Nelson working the horses or talking of old times with the Jenniers (Jennier's seals and Miss Aerialetta, (trapeze). Hunt had a bad blowdown early in the '61 season but no one was injured and the showfolk didn't seem too upset by it.

Probably the most dramatic event of the season occurred the evening when one of the Hunt elephants slipped in mud while doing the long mount and fell on her side, narrowly missing some sharp tent stakes but becoming entangled in the fencing separating the grandstand from the track.

Everyone with the show went to work to free the old girl calmly and without panic. It took about 20 minutes to free the elephant and get her back on her feet. There were tears in our eyes when, free once more, she rejoined the rest of the herd and performed the long mount as usual, then lumbered out into the backyard, safe and sound.

Later in the season, on Al G. Kelley and Miller Bros. Circus, another elephant slipped and nearly fell right on us. While it was a simple matter to send Tony's suit to the cleaners, it took three days of soaking and bleaching to get the mud out of Claire's dress.

Hub-Deep in Mud

Mud and yet more mud faced Kelly-Miller on the two lots where we visited. On the lot at Warrenton, Virginia, the show was mired so deeply and the elephants worked so hard that it reminded circus veterans of the old days. It was quite a sight to see two and three elephants pulling the huge trucks, sometimes stuck so firmly that the elephants went to their knees. Even so, we had the feeling that the big girls enjoyed it all, being the center of the stage and the admiration of all who beheld them.

We were very pleased with the Kelly-Miller performance which exhibited more animal acts than any we saw in 1961. Among these were the leopard and white wolf act and the llama act purchased in the early part of the year from John Cuneo. Fine horses were also on view and fast-moving elephants.

Points for Priesthood

It was fun, too, to visit again with Peggy and Shorty Sylvester, midget clowns, whom we have known for years. And, just to prove that anything can happen on a circus lot, between horses, llamas, and elephants, we discussed various religions with Vance P. Hurley, young equestrian director-announcer, who was about to leave the show to enter the seminary to train as a Russian orthodox priest. There is nothing like discussing the rules of fast and abstinence with your feet deep in mud, while avoiding the biting, kicking, llamas.

Kelly-Miller is unique in that it has built special equipment wagons and cage wagons which load into the huge semi-trailers which transport the show over the road. The trailers are unloaded over ramps in much the same manner as were the flat cars of railroad circuses.

This was the 25th Anniversary tour for Kelly-Miller and its first eastern tour since it took to the road in 1936. We hope that owner D. R. Miller will again come our way in the not-too-distant future.

Circus friends may join shows that tour distant parts of the country, but we don't lose track of them. At various times during the summer we received postal cards from points out west reading "Weather hot. Business good," or "Weather Hot. Business tremendous." These brief messages were from "Seacow," now a clown with Rudy Bros., a friend of ours since he was an usher on Ringling-Barnum some years ago. Jimmie Douglas and Reds Gallagher wrote from Polack Bros. to tell of the adventures of their "Poodle Express" dog act. This unique act comes before the audience aboard its own motorized Gay '90s type train and the canine occupants are all costumed. During one layoff, we are told, every girl on the show was employed in making new wardrobe for the dogs. Dime and Connie Wilson, clowns, wrote to tell us that the Gill Gray Circus was having a good season.

Of all the shopping center shows we saw only two: Animaland, USA, and Hagan-Wallace. Animaland, USA is just that; a traveling menagerie composed of cages of animals, a pony-go-round, and an elephant train. Dub Duggan's Hagan-Wallace offers performing lions, bears, and elephant, a juggler, and a three-person aerial act consisting of trapeze, rings, wire, and sway pole offered from a single unique rigging. In addition there are carnival-type rides and games.

When no circus was within our reach, we found circus acts in other places. Though we did miss the Hamid-Morton Circus for the first time in years, we made a special effort to visit George A. Hamid's Steel Pier at Atlantic City which was presenting Lorena Carver's diving horses, clown Charlie Cheer, and the Barbara Morris sealion act. We have known Barbara both on Ringling-Barnum and on Cole Bros., but that was before she had her present act. While we have seen many fine sealion acts including those of the Tiebors and Walter Jennier, they were all "dry acts." Never before had we seen a "wet act" such as Barbara presents. These sealions do a marvelous routine, including jumping hurdles stretched out over the tank and balancing objects while swimming. Steel Pier has its own tank but circuses can't tie up their arenas with such immovable equipment so Barbara appears mostly at sports shows and similar events.

Fair Grandstands

The grandstand shows at fairs also are places to find circus friends. The Cook and Rose agency of Lancaster, Pa., put on a full circus program at the Montgomery County Fair, Gaithersburg, Md., featuring Torrelli's dogs and ponies and the Torrelli liberty horse act. For approximately 42 years Frank Wirth has provided the grandstand show for the York (Pa.) Fair. This year, in addition to star attractions like Johnny Cash and the Dick Clark Show, he presented Greta Frisk, single trapeze, and The Frielanis, bicyclists.

Clyde Beatty and Cole Bros. Combined Circus was within our "travel area" on three occasions and we visited in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Any visit to Beatty-Cole is old home week. On one visit we found Eddie Dullem working as "the Kedso Clown" in an adjoining shopping center. Or there was the time when little La Norma, star of the high trapeze, showed off her third cat, a tiny kitten. Then again, there was tiny "Irish" walking along the midway and checking her dream book to learn the meaning of Claire's dream of buying a new raincoat. (Claire, of course, insisted it meant she needed a new raincoat.)

When Beatty-Cole played Charlottesville, Virginia, it was two months ahead of the routing of former years. Shows were jumping ahead of other shows all over the east and there were prospects, for a time, of a real opposition war as in years gone by.

The big mystery on the show at this time was: "How did that size nine footprint get in the center of Harry Dann's pillow in an upper bunk when his pet chihuahua doesn't have feet that big? Harry was about to hold a "Cinderella" contest to find the lucky person.

Mom Sells Seats

The little King Bros. Circus looked small indeed after sizeable shows like Beatty-Cole and Kelly-Miller, yet it made a nice appearance on the lot and put on a fine performance. The people in the seats enjoyed every moment of it.

Here again we were in the midst of friends. James M. Cole had the office wagon and Dorothy, his wife, was on reserved seats. Isla Garcia had the organ in the 3-piece band which consisted of organ, trumpet, and drums. And there was Rosa Wong doing web and ladders and showing off her two-and-a-half-year-old daughter who already wants to do everything on the program. Youngsters like this one are the promise of tomorrow to the circus.

Mills Bros. Circus came our way in mid-September. Once again Jack and Jake Mills brought out a good strong performance, including, for the first time in the history of this show, a lion act in a steel arena.

Mills has always featured horses and this year was no exception. John Herriot rode menage, presented liberty horses, and then returned with a mixed act consisting of camels, llamas, and ponies. This was something of a homecoming for John for he had been on Mills as a child. Now he found himself working a pony in his act upon which he had ridden when a child. The stock on Mills truly lives to a ripe old age. By the way, John is as proud as a man can be for his baby daughter was born on the show in July.

Many more shows were on tour than we had opportunity to visit, appearing beneath big tops, in buildings, in ball parks, and at shopping centers.

Are we worried about the future of the circus as we sit reading our copy of VARIETY? Not at all. Business has been good and bad according to the weather, the part of the country being played, and other factors which always have been considered by general agents and managers when preparing their routing.

No one can say that the circus is dead when new shows like Hoxie Bros. take to the road, the Hunts talk of the possibility of bringing out one or, perhaps, two additional shows, and a major circus talks about one or two new shows in the coming year.

This is 1962. This is a new season. Soon the big trucks will be rolling out of winterquarters across the nation as they have each year since America was young.

ODE TO STRAIGHT MAN

By SENATOR FORD

In the good old days when vaudeville was vaudeville a great many comedians worked with straightmen. The straightman of that era was usually goodlooking, had sex appeal, a good speaking voice, was a natty dresser on and off, had a keen sense of timing, and was adept at cuff-shooting.

Some of the oldtime straightmen were also master wielders of a rolled up newspaper. This "prop" was cheap insurance. If the gag didn't get a laugh, whacking the comic on the noggin with the newspaper did.

Later, when vaudeville became "vodeveel," the better straightmen discarded the low comedy newspaper and replaced it with the more refined kid glove. The higher salaried straightmen used "Mark Cross" gloves.

This was the kind of vaudeville reform that was naturally approved by Mr. Albee. Good old E.F. always applauded any refinements that lifted vaudeville to a higher plane. It was he who first frowned on and then banned such "surefire" bits of business as kicking the wife in the derriere. Mr. Albee followed Tony Pastor as the champion of good taste.

The veteran straightman rarely received the recognition he deserved. The good straightman made the mediocre comic look good, and made the good comic look better. Men like Ben Bard, Frank Batie, Ed Gallagher, George LeMaire, and Cliff Hall were among the Tiffanys.

Some of our "name" straightmen were really comedians, and many of them got more laughs than the comics. Lew Fields, of Weber & Fields; Glenn, of Glenn & Jenkins; Russ Brown, of Brown & Whitaker; George LeMaire of Conroy & LeMaire are a few of the better known comedy straightmen.

Some of our big name comedians must be listed as great straightmen on the occasions when they turned to "feeding." Fred Allen, George Burns, Frank Fay and Jack Benny must go down in comedy history as great straightmen.

Things have changed since the days of the great "scolders." This is a mechanical age, and even in show business people are being replaced by gadgets. Very few comedians use straightmen anymore. They now use a telephone. Alexander Graham Bell has run a lot of straightmen out of the business. Whereas the oldtime straightman came in blue or gray, the phone company furnishes silent "feeders" in black, green, gold, white, yellow, and helitrope. Straightmen now come in six delicious colors.

The elimination of the straightman comes under the head of restraint of trade but Congress is too busy panning Jack Paar to worry about the other type of "scolder."

A straightman's union might help to solve the problem of the vanishing live "feeder." If the straightmen organized, a comedian would have to pay a stand-in everytime he used a phone as a partner.

However, the replacing of the straightman by a telephone has its good points. It not only cuts down expenses, but cuts down on dressingroom fights. A comic can't very well bawl out a telephone for doing a lousy show.

The way things are going it is only a matter of time when the comedian, too, will be replaced by some kind of a mechanical laughgetter. When that happens, the only live comedy left will be in some of our tv dramas.

seen by only a small segment of the population, thus enabling the comedian to develop even greater skill and greater timing.

Besides vaudeville, there was burlesque, which developed the art of "low comedy," paving the way for motion picture careers. Between vaudeville and burlesque, a comedian had a step-by-step process which was clear cut. Competition was keen, but at least a comedian could serve an apprenticeship in vaudeville. There were no overnight sensations created by a quirk of television. Stardom demanded, at least, a seasoned performer.

Today, the embryo comedian has no place to go where he can be "bad." In the early days of television it almost seemed as if vaudeville had had a rebirth. This new medium seemed a perfect school for trial and error and many comedians took a crack at it for little or no money. Much of what we saw was bad, but at least there was the excitement and interest in a new experiment—and in new faces. Television today insists on a tight script, "big-name" performers, and provides little or no opportunity for experimentation.

Fewer Tele Outlets

There are fewer comedy and variety shows than ever before. "Situation comedies," they seldom turn out very comical. They use ostensibly new scripts in which only the names have been changed —the same dreary situations persist. Any wonder that the word "comedy" in the television listings merely elicits a "ho-hum" from the potential viewer who then, in despair, has to learn to "love that horse."

The club-date and the nightclub are the only work areas in which the new comedian can try to develop and both these situations can be deadly. Let me first define the club-date. Wherever there is an organization consisting of one or more people, said organization holds a wing-ding once a year in which they recapitulate their fondness for one another and restate their aims for the coming year. The organization appoints a committee to see to it that the best entertainment in the world is provided at the least possible cost. The members of the committee immediately become "experts" in the field of comedy and never hesitate to tell the comedian what he should or should not do and he very often goes on-stage with such phrases as, "we would have liked to have had Bob Hope but we couldn't afford him," still ringing in his ears. These are the circumstances of a club-date. One can readily see that few performers are going to develop anything but a hard crust in this type of environment. Only the most courageous would venture to break-in new material on a club-date and risk the displeasure of the club-date booker. These dates represent bread and butter to comedians since they are their only source of income other than nightclub engagements.

Nightclubs are actually the only medium left for the development of stand-up comedians. Cafe owners again are not interested in the potential of an artist—only in how many laughs he can get and, if the price is within his budget. The comedian in this situation must, if he is forward thinking, try to please the audience and please himself as well. He must project through smoke and alcohol to reach the brain and heart of his audience. To develop craftsmanship and style under these circumstances and to maintain high standards of performance in order to pursue other media of entertainment, is certainly a monumental task. Many successful nightclub comedians are unable to perform in other areas because they themselves have become jaded and their material tinged with "blue." By the same token, today's "new school" comedian is so immersed in the intellectual refinement of his material, that in a nightclub situation, he is totally unable to cope with the humanity sitting ever so close and the audience senses this comedian's inability to communicate as a real personality. He in turn is unable to evaluate the situation and complains that they are drunk and won't listen. He winds up performing only in a theatre situation, and although this is ideal from his standpoint, the gulf between the audience and the performer becomes subsequently wider. Hence, though he may reach the brain, he never quite makes it to the heart.

Fortunately, there are always a few who can evaluate their careers in terms of obstacles and goals, and are emotionally prepared to treat each new situation as a challenge to be overcome rather than evaded. Perhaps from this group a few giants will emerge.

Critics Around the World

Uninvited by Management, Critic Can Be Sued In Britain; Key Is 'Malice'

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

It is a widely accepted fact that Britain has a free press and stringent libel laws. Although this often appears strange to outsiders, it is not a contradiction of terms. Common law is designed to protect the individual as much as the publisher, and such common law can apply to film and drama critics.

Under common law it is recognized that a play or motion picture is the property of an individual or a company. That individual or company has the right to decide whether or not the play or film will be shown to the critics and which critics will be invited, or which newspapers will be asked to send a critic. If a newspaper fails to get an invite and buys a ticket from normal sources and then proceeds to publish a review, the producer has the right to take action.

Having that right does not necessarily mean that the owner of the film or the play will be successful in his action. On his part he would probably have to prove "malicious intent" on the part of the newspaper or its critic. The main defense of the paper would be that its criticism was done as a matter of public interest to meet the readers' need.

As an extension of the producers' rights, the common law of conspiracy lays down that if a critic goes to a theatre with the intention of attacking a piece it shall amount to conspiracy.

Happily there have been few cases in recent years of managements taking such drastic action in the courts, though there have been some cases where film companies have objected to certain critics.

Critics' High Criteria In Argentina; They Vexed Dictator Juan Peron

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires.

Visiting entertainment folk express astonishment on arrival in Argentina at the high intellectual quality of local reviews, whether dramatic, screen, musical or literary. Yet few of them earn much from "Critic King" and must spend too much on magazine or library subscriptions to keep posted.

Most critics here have themselves written plays, scripts or composed music, but the majority also double at some profession, or as civil servants. Screen critics now have a better income through television commitments and advertising commissions, but in a country renowned for venality, there is surprisingly little venality in the reviewing fields.

Under the Peron dictatorship reviewers held out for independence, with only limited exceptions, and suffered for it. In fact the majority ceased reviewing, rather than accept "directives." Six years later there is still cleavage between the small group of "collaborator" reviewers and the non-collaborators. The so-called "collaborators" were not all as black as they are now painted, and there were "colabos" in the ranks of the Critics' Association too. It was more a matter of "conforming" or not conforming.

Legit Critics

Legit critics are banded together under the Association of B. Aires Dramatic Critics, of which Carlos H. Taig (author of a monograph on Eugene O'Neill), reviewer for "Critica" evening paper and "Lyra" magazine, is currently President.

Early in the century critics wrote reviews in dawn hours from cafe tables, surrounded by Bohemian carousing. Nevertheless, theirs has always been a most highly respected profession. Today's critics type out reviews in dusty newspaper offices, or amid the clutter of Government offices.

Unveiling busts of former critics Hipolito Carambat and Carlos Max Viale at the Casa del Teatro in September this year (1961), Martin F. Lemos said the latter had died of "Bohemianism and noctambulism," ills which attacked legit critics of the past. Judging by their pallor, today's reviewers get little more sleep. Their main problem is transport; in a taxiless city where automobiles cost more than they earn in a year.

Sr. Lemos also recalled that Domingo F. Sarmiento (revered Argentine President, Statesman and Educator) had worked as Drama Critic of "Mercurio" in Chile during an 1841 political exile. Alberdi, another Father of the Republic, worked as dramatist and critic. Other famous past critics were Joaquin Linares, Leon Alberti, Eduardo E. Beccar, Miguel Lillo, Saldias, Lepera, Porto, Cordone, Viola, Suero, Octavio Palazzolo, Marianito de la Torre, Octavio Ramirez, Enrique Gustavino and dramatist Julio F. Escobar. Octavio Ramirez, son of an Uruguayan Ambassador to Argentina) was for 30 years La Nacion's drama critic and intimate of visiting intellectuals.

B. Aires critics declare roundly they've no difficulty whatever in writing as they please, indignantly refute any chance of impresario or other coercion. The Critics' Association would promptly expel any member trying venality. A case of "unethical" writing came up this year, ending in apology by the culprit, which smoothed things out.

Incidentally, "angels" are termed "white horses" in this country, which contains just a hint of knight errantry.

Outstanding amongst today's dramatic critics are Julio Cesar Viale Paz of "La Razon," also a music and screen critic; Menegaso and Cane of "La Nacion" also carry great weight. "Lyra" the magazine of which Carlos Faig is dramatic critic, won an Argentine Sesquicentennial Committee award of a European trip in 1960, for a special 1960 number recounting Argentine stage history. Jaime Potenze is another dramatic and film critic. Alejandro Berutti (author and critic) doubles as scholarly head of the Authors' Society (Argentores) Library.

Theatre Managements are most generous in distributing "paper" amongst critics of the big local dailies and magazines, but overlook foreign correspondents, on the mistaken assumption that they're not interested. It can be said in their behalf that the big dailies take an overlarge slice of what is called "espoleo," which they sell at reduced rates to their staff or to the public. If a foreign correspondent wishes to review a local show he must buy his ticket, and as admissions are high, that often rules him out.

Fraternizing Doesn't Prevent Australians Being Hard-Hitting

By ERIC GORRICK

Sydney.

Drama critics covering the main Sydney and Melbourne stems probably, to some extent, resemble their counterparts in New York, London or Paris, in that they evoke happy or raging reactions in accordance with what they write. Too, in the main, they are "columnists" on the side and are sent by their editors to meet and interview visiting celebrities. But in their role as critics they are strictly independent in their views and do not suffer an editor's bluepencil, nor do they hand their stuff to a rewrite man. It's printed as written.

An Aussie dramatic critic probably reviews 20 to 30 shows annually, maybe more, ranging from key shows in the majors to straw hat performances in the little houses. He also covers vaude-revue, which, naturally, makes him that much more versatile. The Aussie season runs all year round.

Here, as in Manhattan, the critic is a "guest" of management on opening night. There is no second list for minor critics as in New York.

Should a show be running late and deadline approaching (12 midnight) for a morning edition, the critic may slip away to his typewriter without frowns from the management. He makes an exit when the lights are down, and nobody worries muchly. The critic working for an afternoon paper stays right through because the deadline is timed around 10 a.m., hence the afternoon guy even has plenty of time to go backstage for a managerial party. But party or no party, if he doesn't like the show—or part thereof, there it is in black and white the next day for all to read and either cheer or burn up.

Records here fail to disclose any managerial banning of a critic. Naturally, they (managements) resent a panning, but no action is (or has) ever been taken against a critic. He's just as welcome for a new show.

General rule here is for major legitimate operators to stage a meet-the-star party (instancing Vivien Leigh of the Old Vic troupe), at a plush hotel. There are plenty of cocktails and caviar.

Probing deeply into records at the Journalists' Club here no evidence was unearthed to even suggest that a critic had sunk any coin of his own into a show; firstly, because he doesn't earn that kind of money; secondly, because Aussie show biz is controlled by responsible organizations, J. C. Williamson Ltd., Garnet Carroll, Tivoli Theatres, to mention the top trio.

Top critics here—covering legit, vaude-revue, pix and music, are Griffen Foley (Daily Telegraph), Norman Kessell (Sun), Julian Russell (Sun), and Josephine O'Neill (Herald).

Women's weekly, top femme paper, only reviews films and tv shows, leaving flesh-and-blood to the dailies. This also applies to minor monthly publications with limited circulation.

The Aussie critic doesn't come any fairer—or tougher, worldwide.

Freeloading, Payola Give Critics Blackeye; It's Manana in Mexico

By EMIL ZUBRYN

Mexico City.

Mexican film and theatrical critics have to trend a difficult diplomatic tightrope in that they know and are known by everybody. Also, they are friends, or enemies, respectively of producers, directors, stars, technicians, etc.

Also, the inevitable cocktail parties and luncheons, banquets, etc. tendered to critics, as well as unadmitted but widely suspected are factors. Gifts, tips on money-making opportunities, blatant cash tribute, picking up of Acapulco an other vacation tabs, etc., makes it difficult for critics to be "objective."

Often a sugar coated review is explained to colleagues somewhat after this fashion: "True, the picture (or play, television, radio show, night club act, etc.) is very bad, but the producer embraced me so affectionately (and possibly slipped in a little memento into a pocket), how can I be severe?"

Or, "we are friends, and eat together often. He's such a clever story teller and so serious in his feelings that he is a good producer. How can I offend him?"

But not all critic, shut their eyes or clamp their noses. In Mexico the breed is not highly paid, often undertake other chores far removed from their field, including, for example, reporting on prize fights or wrestling matches. In turn producers complain that seemingly anybody can be a critic in Mexico. Critics answer that seemingly any reasonably curved senorita can be a "star."

While dramatic criticism appears promptly, film criticism often is published a week or so after film has completed its first run.

Many publications exist in Mexico of dubious character, with alleged critics seeking free seats. This has led to a drastic tightening of Annie Oakleys by managements and by the Office of Public Entertainments, which issues credentials to bona fide critics. The freeloaders and phoney critics still exist though, and many don't even earn the handouts by a token review.

Recently, in a move to give status to the critic's profession, the first critic's round table conference was held here with opposing elements: reviewers, producers and actors, getting together to see if the profession can rise above its alleged status of "cocktail critics."

Schedule 'Yellow Loves' For Loeb Drama Centre

"The Yellow Loves," by Howard Sackler, Shakespeare recording director for Caedmon Records, will be presented Feb. 1-3 and Feb. 8-10 by the Poets' Theatre at the Loeb Drama Centre, Cambridge, Mass. The play, which George E. Serries will direct, is based on the life of French poet Tristan Corbiere, who died at the age of 29.

As a fund-raising offering, the Poets' Theatre will present on Feb. 25 "A Visit With Jules Feiffer and his Characters."

Festivals Multiply In Austria & So Do Its Operettas

By EMIL W. MAASS

Vienna.

Despite the fact that quite a number of town and villages in Austria have decided to hold "festivals" of their own during the summer months of 1962, one cannot foresee any talent inflation, as most of these events are intended for local consumption with some foreign (not necessarily American) tourist trade.

Festival committee of Bregenz, capital of the most western province Vorarlberg (and thus most easily reached by tourists from western countries) has proven to be the most enterprising of them all after Salzburg and Vienna which retain the international glamor, Bregenz has decided to switch to modern operetta for its stage on Lake Constance, which now has an increased capacity of 6,000.

New operetta by Robert Stolz with book by Per Schwen and Robert Gilbert, titled "Yucatan" (for Mexican fishing village setting) is booked for next Summer. Composer Stolz will direct personally.

At the capital of Styria, Graz, performances in the Burggarten, Landhaus, as well as in castle Eggenburg and Rabenstein are in prospect for 1962. There will be open air theatres in Moerbich and St. Margerethen in the Burgenland and in Klosterneuburg, a few miles west of the Austrian capital.

Operetta society of Spa Ischl, where Franz Lehar and Oscar Straus worked, and lie buried, plans pend for revivals of oldies. Ischl dates back to Romans use as a resort and won its modern aura when Kaiser Franz Joseph chose it as his summer town in 1854.

Until the outbreak of World War II it had became an "operetta trading centre of the world." Practically everybody connected with this medium met in Spa Ischl during the summer months to work out plans for the next season. First were Giacomo Meyerbeer and Johann Strauss, all others followed. Last year one could see a few old timers, very few indeed, but they did not discuss operetta plans. There are no theatres on hand for that purpose.

City's Subsidy

A last minute injection of $20,000 subsidy by the city of Vienna prevented the closing down of the capital's last operetta house. (In the state-operated Volksopera only works by deceased composers are produced.)

Selection of Carl Michael Ziehrer's old operetta "The Guide" during the June festival, though a good one, was such a boxoffice flop, that the deficit grew daily. Another oldie, Edmund Eysler's "Golden Mistress" proved to be better b.o.

Stapoper and Burg Theatre had a good season but no outstanding productions though Christopher Fry's world precm in German language) of "Curtmantle" was well received. Academy Theatre revived Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" and Mary Chase' "Harvey," with the comedy finding more approval.

Volkstheatre scored with Aldon Nash's "Sainted Sisters" and Thomas Staerns Eliot's "Elderly Statesman," an ensemble even touring the country with the latter. Production of Elmer Rice's "Cue for Passion" in theatre of Josefstadt deserves praise. Theatre Courage had on its repertory "Last Summer" by Tennessee Williams. Critic so-so.

None of these mentioned theatres could exist, not even if sold out daily, without considerable subsidies by state and municipality.

The houses in the provinces, as Graz, Innsbruck, Klagenfurt, Salzburg and Linz are in a similar position. While they produce only plays, already on the repertory of Vienna theatres, the management of the St. Poelten Theatre, 40 miles west of Vienna, has attempted to become a sort of "straw hat." They preemed plays and even operettas, directors and talent scouts drove to St. Poelten, but so far no work was found worthwhile to be taken over by a Vienna house.

SWEDEN: LEGIT ACTORS' DREAM

Chamberlain Brown's Revenge

By GEORGE FREEDLEY

(Curator, Theatre Collection, Main N.Y. Public Library)

(Editorial Note: Chamberlain Brown was, for years, one of the regular haunts of at least two generations of job-seeking actors in the days when "The Road" and Stock were not yet moribund and Broadway ran as high as 72 houses. With their affinity for humor, troupers made many a joke about the Browns, but especially Chamberlain. It is provocative to note that the memorabilia of this time-dusty haunt now is a valued part of the Theatre Collection.)

By strange coincidence the two most important theatrical acquisitions of the N.Y. Public Library in 1961 are tied into my first months in New York in 1928 when I was working for the Theatre Guild in various capacities. Vinton Freedley gave me early in September two letters of introduction; one was Lyman Brown of the Chamberlain & Lyman Brown Theatrical Agency and the other was to Theresa Helburn of the Guild where a couple of months later I went to work as an assistant to Kate Drain Lawson, technical director of the Guild, through whom I met Florence Vandamm and her husband, the leading theatrical photographers in New York.

The complete office records of the Brown Theatrical Agency were offered by the executors of Lyman Brown's Estate as a free gift last summer. Paul Myers and Mark Carnevale and a small corps of packers and truckmen emptied the five rooms plus closets and a section of the firescape, switched through some of last summer's hot days packing the books, portraits, theatrical memorabilia, the hundreds of scrapbooks and photographs.

It was and is one of the most remarkable theatre collections extant. They even had to scrape posters off the walls where they had been pasted in order to preserve them. A handsome marble bust of Clara Lipman presides benighny over the collection which is in the process of being catalogued which will take more than a year at the very shortest, probably several years to make it all available to the public which should be grateful to the Brown brothers for preserving their theatrical records when so many offices discard files when they are no longer commercially useful. Some of them have remembered our theatre collection and have sent the files to us for preservation. I wish all agencies and producing organizations did, particulary from Off-Broadway where finding vital statistics is difficult. We are crowded, of course, but we hope to have fine expanded quarters in the new Library-Museum at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, when and if.

A number of Midwestern universities were anxious to purchase Florence Vandamm's file of theatrical negatives of some 1200 plays produced on or intended for Broadway since 1925. The number of negatives vary from a dozen to several hundred when a long-runner with its many casts such as "Life With Father" is considered. There are approximately eight hundred individual subjects from the Lunts to Robert Sisk and Leonard Bernstein included in this collection purchased in the Spring of this year.

It is partly catalogued and all of the material is so arranged that individual shots can be readily located where they are in storage in the Library's annex on West 43rd Street. The card catalogue by title, designer and actor is housed in the Theatre Collection as well as the Key-sheets so that readers can select individual photographs for printing. The full cataloging will be completed perhaps by the time this article is printed.

Hallelujah! Parties!

By NAT DORFMAN

Diamonds may be a girl's best friend, but the best friend the Broadway theatre has right now is the Theatre Party Agent. Indeed, the theatre, for the record, has 17 or 18 best friends and with one exception they're all lovely, hard working ladies who fill our playhouses with benefit shows to the tune of multi-millions every season. These are the gals, who come spring, collect the titles of the shows listed for the following fall and winter, note the names of the authors, stars, and the play's contents, and begin their inspired sales campaigns.

Thus, while the seven bad wolves, as the critics on the Metropolitan papers are cruelly designated by some, take time off from their arduous first night chores to thrill at the sights of Europe and the Orient seeing a few shows in between, or just hide out in nearby huts and reconverted barns to rusticate from their acidulous typewriters, the ladies are already selling blocks of seats and full houses to a wide, charitable public who are risking their pelf in the hope they are right in their choice and that the vacationing critics, relieved by the summer hiatus, will back them up in their critical judgment when the harvest moon shines.

Quite often the party ladies and the critics agree, but most often there is a wide difference of opinion. It is then that the importance of the party agents become dramatically evident for without them and their parties the Fabulous Invalid would have to curl up and cry "Uncle." Not that the benefits can save a bad show, but they give a fairly good audience show, though critically socked, an opportunity to find paying customers. Many a play has thus been saved from the ignominy of closing after a few despairing performances. In other instances, where the advance sale has been tremendous because of the pull of star names, even a poor show lived to reimburse its backers.

Ironically, and unbelievably, there are some heretic in the Broadway canyons who are openly hostile to theatre parties. These snorting dissidents aver theatre party audiences are hit over the head by their charity groups to buy tickets at fabulous rates, are not interested in the show but come to greet their friends, are constantly waving to them and chattering during performances to the annoyance of the actors, with method and without experience. No doubt some of these allegations are true, but not entirely. Once the curtain rises and should the show prove absorbing, they get just as absorbed in the stage offering as any other audience paying . . . with the difference, they are local people and if they like something they spread the word of approval with the speed of a prairie fire.

And coming back to the actors who just "despise theatre parties because they sit on their hands," isn't it better to collect salaries week after week with theatre parties and keep plays going rather than have closing notices drive you to the savings banks for economic survival?

Finally, there are those who charge theatre parties keep regular playgoers from their pews for months at a time. What we'd like to know is, what are theatre party patrons—vegetables?

So, a hallelujah to the party agents who live in anonymity but serve the living theatre so well.

YEARLY PACTS, OLD AGE WAGES

By FREDERIC FLEISHER

Stockholm.

The dramatic theatre in Sweden normally runs at a heavy loss. Box-office receipts cover only about half of the expenses. Rest comes from state and municipal subsidies. The major contributor to theatre is a monthly, state-supervised lottery; lottery tickets sell for about $3 and the annual gross runs over $40,000,000. About one-third of the total is returned to the fortune-hunters and somewhat less than a third goes to the support of the Royal Opera, noncommercial theatres, symphony orchestras and art and concert societies. Each time a ticket is sold to a noncommercial performances it can be said that the state pays between $3-$4.

The noncommercial theatres have relatively heavy running costs as the actors, actresses, stage hands, technicians, designers, dressmakers, stage directors, etc., normally have one year contracts and are paid irrespective of whether they are used or needed. Besides the Royal Dramatic Theatre in Stockholm, which has two stages, Sweden has three civic theatres with two stages and three with one stage. An average one-stage civic theatre stages about nine plays annually and its total expenditures run about $240,000 and it receives about $120,000 in the form of municipal and state subsidies.

"America's Actor Equity Assn. members will be stunned perhaps that unemployment among dramatic performers in Sweden runs as low as 4% and hardly above 10%. Estimates by Equity of unemployment among its own membership exceeds 90% though this is somewhat misleading since many members are seldom if ever working in theatres but instead rely upon tv, industrials, and so on.)

Stars at $8,000

Top star wages at the Royal Dramatic Theatre are around $8,000 a year; an average wage at this theatre is $3,640. When actors and actresses at the Royal Dramatic Theatre are retired they receive two-thirds of their salary; the retirement age for actors is 60 and 55 for actresses while ballet dancers at the Royal Opera may retire at 41. Sweden's recent compulsory pension plan, however, is increasing progressively and in less than a generation all actors and actresses will be able to retire at the age of 67 and they will receive a pension that amounts to two-thirds of their average income during their 10 most productive years.

Although the survival of the noncommercial theatres is not dependent on boxoffice receipts, there other pressures on the heads of the theatres. Each theatre has a board which is often made up of prominent cultural figures. The stage directors and critics also express their wishes. Although the critics exert only slight influence on a theatre's finances, they spread a general conception about whether the head of the theatre is doing a good job. A theatre head cannot consistently choose light and popular plays as influential groups may feel that he no longer sees to it that the theatre serves culture.

Swedes' Credo

Swedes also regard theatre as a form of education. During each season a theatre must aim at giving audiences a mixture of classical, modern and experimental drama. Furthermore, most of the noncommercial theatres give special performances for school children and educationalists are most pleased if the children see a classic.

Private theatres, on the other hand, receive almost no state or municipal support and often have an extremely hard time surviving. There are some outstanding exceptions as the production of "My Fair Lady" at Stockholm's Oscars Theatre, which broke all Swedish records by running for close to 800 sellout performances.

One of Sweden's leading private theatres is Stockholm's Vasa which

Insurance Bias Vs. Showfolk

Underwriters' Rigid Rejection of Theatrical Clients —A Blanket Indictment—Some Progress Against Blind Policy—But Shoddy Publicity Based On Thefts Hurts All Artists

By LEE B. WINKLER

(Author of the following piece is a leading protagonist, previously quoted in VARIETY, of the view that insurance companies are suffering from intellectual hardening of the arteries in applying hopelessly obsolescent ideas to theatrical clients seeking policies.)

It is probably no secret to most professionals reading this item that they are second-class citizens when it comes to obtaining insurance. Underwriters may want your autograph, but they certainly do not want you as clients.

Should you be one of the lucky ones not having this problem, be assured that you are the exception and not the rule. Specializing in all types of show business insurance and handling, as we do, great numbers of "art" clients, we live with this problem daily.

Why artists should be considered poor insurance risks is a subject which we and others have dealt with at length. The insurance companies raise all sorts of objections to theatrical people from "too much publicity" to "poor moral risks."

To say that most of these accusations are with little basis in fact does not alleviate the problem. The situation is still that most persons in the art fields, be they players, dancers, musicians, producer, writer or director, have greater problems in obtaining insurance than any other persons in America.

What progress has been made? Unfortunately, little—but definitely some.

Blind Prejudice

The greatest problem today is in getting insurance companies to underwrite a theatrical person as a person. In other words, to get an insurance company to look upon you as an individual and not just apply the negative blanket label of show business upon you, and then say "No insurance".

We have found the majority of art people to be family persons living quite normal lives, with strong community and civic ties, and often with other business interests.

Another problem is a simple economic one. I.e., if an insurance company gets $60 to insure Mrs. Jones' mink coat, and only gets the same $60 to insure a celebrity's mink coat, the insurance company would naturally rather insure Mrs. Jones since it gets the same premium, but supposedly has far less chance of loss with Mrs. Jones.

Our answer in this case has been to fight fire with fire. By accumulating as much theatrical business as possible, and funneling it to only two or three insurance companies, the result is that these companies obtain quantity premiums to offset possible greater loss exposure. The law of averages operates for the insurance company if they insure several theatrical people.

One problem is the thoughtless pressagent who uses "theatrical thefts" as a gimmick. Gossip columnists prefer using theatrical names in hints of immorality and avoid mentioning wealthy business tycoons, who are equally or more culpable. The problem of phony claim; business manager and insurance broker collusion, etc., all are evils to be worked upon.

The greatest progress that will be made will undoubtedly come from organization such as Actors Equity, which even now is helping by entering the fight. Committees to investigate insurance problems have been formed, and are looking into the matter. Groups of actors and others are banding together through unions and associations to place their insurance coverages en masse through one source we recently insured two groups totaling over 70 members who had previously had great troubles getting coverages individually.

Summer Drama As Greeks' Come-On

By RENA VELISSARIOU

Athens.

Some 15 legit theatres are operating this winter in Athens, playing local and international works. National Theatre is presenting classical plays only, starting with William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." Kostas Mousouris who favors international successful plays selected "Fanny" by Marcel Pagnol with Jenny Carezi as leading lady.

Two plays by the Communist Bertold Brecht are played at two theatres. "The Ascension of Arturo Oui" at the Art Theatre by Charles Koon and "Galileos" at the New Theatre by B. Diamantopoulos.

Elli Lambetti is back on the Greek stage. She presented with her own group at the Dionyssia Theatre "The Miracle of Anny Sullivan, followed by Van Druten's "The Voice of the Turtle."

All other theatres are presenting Greek plays. A branch of the National Theatre will operate in Salonica capital of Northern Greece also presenting classical foreign and Greek plays.

Drama Festivals

Two drama Festivals have prevailed every summer for seven consecutive years attracting many tourists. Greek National Theatre's Festival is running every July at the Epidavros ancient theatre famous for its amazing acoustic. Its program includes antiquity dramas Sophocles, Euripides, Aeschylos, Aristophanes. An exception was made last year only and the program included the opera "Medea" by Cherubini with Maria Callas.

Athens Festival, every August is held at the Odeon of Herodes Atticus beneath the Acropolis. Dramas presented at Epidavros are repeated. The program of the Athens Festival is enriched also with concerts by foreign orchestras such as the N.Y. Philharmonic, or by the Athens State Orch with local and foreign soloists.

The world premiere of the "Nausica" opera by Peggy Glanville-Hicks was given during the last Festival and was conducted by Carlos Surinach, directed by John Butler with Teresa Stratas, Spyros Melas, Sophia Steffas, John Modenos and a Greek orch and chorus.

I would like to be a "could-be"
If I could not be an "are"
For a "could-be" is a "may-be"
With a chance for reaching far.

But, I'd rather be a "has-been"
Than a "might-have-been" by far,
For a "might-have been" has never been
While a "has been' was once an "are".

Ten-Twent'-Thirt': A Golden Era Of Native American Melodrama

At 10-20-30c. Earthy Right-Shall-Prevail Plays Regaled the Gallery Gods —Accent Often on 'Special Effects' (Trains, Horses, Electricity) — A Chapter From a Forthcoming Book, 'Gone Are the Stars'

By ERNEST HUGHES

Cleveland.

Entirely neglected by biographers and writers of theatrical history are the plays produced during the years of the vogue of sensational melodramas that were dear to the hearts of the patrons of these productions, and we know of no books dealing with this type of entertainment.

Ernest Hughes

Ten, 20 and 30c were the admission prices, with the exception of a few front row orchestra seats at 50c sounds unbelievable, but they could be had.

The plays authored by such prolific writers as Theodore Kremer ("The Fatal Wedding"), Lincoln J. Carter ("The Heart Of Chicago"), and Hal Reid ("Human Hearts") would probably be laughed at today, for their homely dramatics and ludierous situations, but they were in a class that meant money at the boxoffice at all times and many houses displayed SRO. during an exceptionally sensational blood-curdler. A week was the extent of the showing of these melodramas, then on to the next town. There were no so called "long runs" in those days.

H. R. Jacobs Theatre was the home of melodrama in Cleveland. The play, "The Pulse Of New York"; the year, 1894. When the gallery doors opened, the mad rush of the "thundering herd" of so-called gallery gods was on, and four or five flights of wooden stairs meant nothing, if you would sit in the front row. Then followed the long wait for "Overture," pandemonium breaking loose when the orchestra appeared from beneath the stage, a short march of the day, usually one of Sousa's, and finally—that moment of hush, when the house lights were lowered and the footlights came up, also the curtain. And the show was on!

That seat in the gallery was the means of an excursion into make-believe, which in those days meant an exciting evening of such "realism" as we never beheld since—"The Eyes of Youth." But that thrill has gone, as have the plays and players of those days.

Durable Favorites

It was not only the young and impressionable mind that was charmed, but many older patrons delighted in each new play, or in a repeated former favorite that came with the new season. Some of the best remembered are found in the following list: "Down In Dixie," "Dangers Of A Great City," "Pawn Ticket 210" (which was the number on a ticket which would redeem a pawned baby!) "The Sidewalks Of New York" featuring James and Bonnie Thornton, "The White Rat," "On The Bowery" (with bridgejumping Steve Brodie), "Peck's Bad Boy," "Blue Jeans," the first one with a "great sawmill" scene, "When London Sleeps" (in this one a former circus girl walked on telephone wires to escape from a burning building across the way), "In Old Kentucky," racing play which ran for 17 years (introducing a treadmill race long before "Ben-Hur" was thought of as a play). Not forgetting Bartley Campbell's "The White Slave," with the world famous line: "Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake." Then came Lincoln J. Carter's "The Heart Of Chicago," the play based on the famous Chicago fire.

This had the illusion of a locomotive five miles away—the headlight becoming larger and larger as "the train" approached—the heroine locked in a shanty, the hero tied to the tracks; "To the rescue!," and just in time—for as the beautiful heroine managed to sever the ropes, releasing the hero, there stood a full-sized replica of a locomotive, steaming and puffing, right down at the footlights—Quick Curtain!!

Audiences liked the "big mechanical effects" as they were glowingly advertised, and many were used in the plays written around trains. "The Denver Express," "The Limited Mail," "The Midnight Express," "The Fast Mail" and "The Great Express Robbery" all depended upon synthetic "trains" for their sensational scenes.

Plays on the evils of The Big City had the basic themes the idea that big cities were wicked and filled with snares for the innocent. Here are a few of their titles: "Lost In New York," "Opium Smugglers Of Frisco," "Midnight In Chinatown" and "New York By Night."

An 85-Year Run

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was the play in which hundreds of players were employed during a period of more than 85 years. The play, originally produced in 1852, became one of the greatest boxoffice attractions: hundreds of "Tom" troupes playing the old tearjerker all over the world in over 50 versions.

Faintly remembered also are such gems as "The World Against Her," "Fallen Among Thieves," "The Silver King," "A Lion's Heart" (starring Carl Haswin), "Tennessee's Partner" and "Darkest Russia" with Selma Herman. Another thriller ("with a train") was "Nobody's Claim" starring Sadie Hassen and Joseph Dowling.

"A Guilty Mother" starred Henrietta Vaders, a favorite of an earlier day, and delighted women theatregoers for years. The famous Dreyfuss case of the Nineties, became the story of "Devil's Island" featuring Leander Blanden; this was good for three seasons. Sheridan Block and Maude Granger, both "Big names" in their day, presented "Man's Enemy." Theodore Babcock and Dorothy Rossmore appeared in "Brother for Brother."

"Uncle Josh Spruceby," a drama depicting life "down on the farm," was another standby; this also featured "the sensational sawmill scene" in which the hero was saved from being sawed in half just in the nick of time.

"The Road to Ruin," "Sporting Life," "The Queen of Chinatown," "King of the Opium Ring" and "Why Women Sin" were of a more modern trend and, if anything, more sensational, than the earlier ones.

Wrote Plays Around a Lithograph

Al Woods, a shining light in the world of melodrama, produced many of the "blood-and-thunder" gems. It is said that Woods used to find a sensational news item, a murder, a robbery or anything he visualized as a new thriller, then visit a lithograph company, have artists design several posters, illustrating his ideas, take these to Theodore Kremer, an experienced writer of plays based on crimes of the day, commission him to write the new "chiller," and theatre history has it that Kremer would produce one of these boxoffice magnets in 48 hours—four acts and from 6-to-14 scenes in some of them.

"The Fatal Wedding" was perhaps the best known of Kremer's plays, and "The Bowery After Dark" the most sensational. This was the starring vehicle for Terry McGovern, well known lightweight fighter of the time. It opened in New York on Christmas day 1900 starring along with McGovern, Ralph Cummings and Victory Bateman, both stock stars. The play was originally to be titled "The Power of the Cross," but Woods felt that "The Bowery After Dark" would have more b.o. allure.

The "hair-raising" scene in this one was the nailing of the hands of a Chinese woman to a doorpost (the punishment of a disobedient mistress in China, as the "villain" of the play explained), this done with screams, etc. It was heard before only in "The Sign of the Cross." In the same melo we found another "sensational scene," (they were all "sensational"); it showed the heroine bringing the villain to his knees as, with a large crucifix held high above her, she declaimed, "Down on your knees you blasphemer and tremble at The Power of the Cross!" The cross, electrically wired and studded with 60-watt bulbs, flashed on in bright lights as the curtain fell.

Startling Titles and Lurid Posters

Startling titles and lurid posters rather than the players' names seemed to draw the largest audiences, but all the various types of plays were clean, devoid of smut, sex, offending scenes or innuendos; it was entertainment for the entire family. On the acting side, there was nothing subtle in the lines of the players; all love and hatred were outspoken and to the point.

Had Reid was another writer of the "heartbreakers." His Human Hearts" was one of the biggest money getters on the circuit, playing return engagements season after season. It was the story of the honest blacksmith and the faithless wife from the city—faithless wives and "female villains" were always "from the city." One of the well remembered scenes in this old favorite was in Act 3 in which "Tom's" blind mother is granted an audience with the governor as a last resort to obtain her son's freedom. Through her gift of a bonquet of oldfashioned yellow roses the governor is persuaded to pardon her son. The dialog in this scene, enacted before our then youthful eyes, will never fade from memory; we remember nothing more inducive to tears in any play before or since.

"On The Swanee River," was one of the less sensational plays on the circuit at the time; among the players were Stella Mayhew, Florence Gerald, Fredrick Truesdale, Marie Wellesley and Harrison Steadman. "Kidnapped In New York" starred the debonair Barney Gilmore, who was a new type in melodrama, a singing comedian. Mildred Holland and Neva Harrison presented "Two Little Vagrants," a sort of companion piece to "The Two Orphans" of an earlier date. Miss Holland appeared in several other attractions in melodrama houses, the best known "The Power Behind The Throne" and "Arla, The Musican's Daughter," both great matinee favorites.

The evils of gambling were brought out in several more modern plays: "The Gambler's Daughter," with the beauteous Elsie Crescy, "The Gambler Of The West," with Severin de Dayne, and "The Card King Of The Coast," all highly successful.

Temperance Preachment

Temperance preachments were brought out in "The Curse Of Drink" and the oldest of all (barring "The Drunkard"), "10 Nights In A Barroom," a well remembered oldie, if for nothing more than the song, "Father Dear Father Come Home With Me Now." Various queens who reigned in the theatre were "Queen Of The White Slaves," "Queen Of The Secret Seven," and "Queen Of The Highway" which featured Charlotte Severson.

In 1906 the H. R. Jacobs Theatre became the Cleveland Theatre opening its season with "The Orphan's Prayer" with Nettie De Coursey, followed by Marion Ballou in "The Little Organ Grinder" and Florence Bindley in "The Street Singer." Eagerly awaited were the annual roadshows: "Nellie, The Beautiful Cloak Model," "Lottie The Poor Saleslady" and Cleveland.

We recall, with chills and thrills, lines from old dramatic masterpieces, lines which were considered highly dramatic and powerful in their day. Today one may consider them as mock heroics and a little farfetched but in their era we loved them. A few of the best remembered:

|---|---|
| "Stop! I see murder in your eye!" | ("After Dark," 1853, by Dion Boucicault.) |
| "This woman did not give herself, she sold herself!" | ("Monbars," 1904, presumably by Brownlow Hill.) |
| "Leave your money to the poor and your widow to me, and we'll both forgive you." | ("The Colleen Bawn," 1853, by Dion Boucicault.) |
| "Whoever lifts the fallen brother is greater than the conqueror of the world." | ("The Drunkard," 1834, by Wm. H. Smith.) |
| "You took the man I should have married; no woman ever forgot or forgave that." | ("Woman Against Woman," 1885, by Frank Harvey.) |
| "Tremble at the power of the cross!" | ("The Bowery After Dark," 1900, by Theodore Kremer.) |
| "Then, among all you GENTLEMEN, is there not one man of honor?" | ("The Two Orphans," 1874, by Adolphe DeEnnery & Eugene Cormond.) |
| "Mecnie, either I dream or I am mad, but I am your father." | ("Rip Van Winkle," 1865, by Dion Boucicault.) |
| "Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake!" | ("The White Slave," 1882, by Bartley Campbell.) |
| "No, massa, mah soul belongs to de Lawd, an' yoh can't never buy that." | ("Uncle Tom's Cabin," 1852, by Harriet Beecher Stowe.) |
| "Call me not husband—but curse me as your destroyer." | ("The Drunkard" (see above.) |
| "I've got a boy all alone in this great city, and I'm dreadfully worried about him." | ("The Old Homestead," 1887, by Derman Thompson.) |
| "Remember you are brothers!" | ("The Two Orphans," see above.) |
| "Keep your gold, it would soil my poverty!" | ("Streets Of New York," 1853, by Dion Boucicault.) |
| "And there weren't no weddin' ring on her finger nuther." | ("Way Down East," 1898, by Lottie Blair Parker.) |
| "I cannot love you, for another image is in my heart." | ("After Dark," see above). |
| "Strike! If it pleases you—for you are her father!" | ("The Lady Of Lyons," 1838, by E. Bulwer Lytton.) |
| "I want my love to give me liberty." | ("The White Slave," see above.) |
| "Heaven and this certificate, signed by your hand, are my witnesses." | ("Kathleen Mavourneen," 1860, by Dion Boucicault.) |

| "We should find nothing in Russia now but graves covered with snow." | ("The Kreutzer Sonata," 1906, by Jacob Gordin.) |
| "All the world can't stop me now!" | ("The Silver King," 1882, by Henry Arthur Jones.) |
| "One for all, and all for one!" | ("The Three Musketeers," 1848, by Alexandre Dumas, Sr.) |

BITTER FRUIT: VERY YOUNG PLAYWRIGHTS

Edward Albee, Jack Gelber and Jack Richardson Compared To Odets, Miller, Williams of the '30s, '40s and '50s

By HAROLD CLURMAN

I write with some diffidence about our young playwrights. My hesitation is due not to caution or uncertainty but to humility. The creative process should be respected. The limelight of our theatre tends to sear young talent.

A French playwright once told me that though he had had 40 plays produced he considered only six or them good. The gentleman is now one of the Immortals of the Academie Francaise.

This instance conveys an attitude which appears to be wholly foreign to the custom of our theatre. A promising new playwright with us is a signal event. His arrival is not merely greeted, it is hailed! He is sought after; interviewed by press and radio. He is questioned on television on a wide variety of subjects. He may even be attacked—supreme compliment!—for not being the paragon his publicity proclaims him. The symptoms of his eventual decadence are set forth. And even while his first play is being studied in college drama courses his second play may have been produced and failed. With this failure the young playwright is pronounced "finished."

We are an impatient people. We crave novelty. There is some virtue in this: it shows that we have an appetite for renewal and for a sort of perennial youthfulness. But this may prove a vice: it may condemn us to superficiality, immaturity and a restlessness which permits of no completion. It discourages growth. It is wasteful and finally savage.

In the theatre, at any rate, it would be wiser if we viewed every playwright under 45 the age at which Ibsen and Shaw entered their most productive years as a beginner. Such an attitude might prove more helpful than frenzied adulation which is often no more than the mask of a deepseated indifference.

My purpose in discussing our newest and youngest playwrights—Edward Albee, Jack Gelber and Jack Richardson—is not to measure the degree of their talent or to predict their future value but to examine in what manner they collectively represent certain central characteristics of the moment. For though each of these playwrights is differently endowed and probably headed in divergent directions, there can be no doubt that there is a kinship among them. They tell us something about present day youth but even more about our American world generally.

Clifford Odets and Others Were 'Rebels' of the 30s

Such talent as theirs emerged in the 30s. But the young dramatists then—Clifford Odets preeminently—were "rebels" whose values were based on the classic premises of our oldest religious traditions: human brotherhood, social justice, concern for the underprivileged, hope for peace, resistance to tyranny. Odets and his fellows may not have believed in God, but they believed. Their heroes were no knights in shining armor but they were either seeking new heroes or enjoining us all to adopt an heroic stance, to be heroes together. At worst they deplored the lack of heroes of the debauching of a youth which might with the help of sane social circumstance attain heroism.

The impetus of the '30s was curtailed or modified by the spasm of the war. In the late '40s—Arthur Miller continued the "religious" (or the hortatory) line of the dramatists of the preceding decade. Willy Loman was if anything less lustrous than any but the finks in "Lefty." A poor and sorry figure, but Miller vowed that he was worth our attention, that he possessed admirable human traits pitifully gone to seed. Loman might have been redeemed; or if this were too much to say, his pathetic example might serve as a warning to at least one of his sons.

In "The Crucible" Miller limned characters capable of self-sacrifice and, even more important, of active resistance. These characters oppose the forces of evil—evil being defined as that which would muddy conscience and undermine reason.

Together with Miller there developed in the '40s a dramaturgy devoted to the portrayal of victims. This is the line that may be traced to the work of Tennessee Williams. The yearning and protest of Odets and Miller were still guttering in Williams but they are turned inward.

As a sort of joke—but more revealing than he may realize—Paddy Chayefsky—another young playwright—has the atheist in "The Tenth Man" say "better to believe in a Dybbuk than in nothing." This is the sort of affirmation—I say this without malice—that several of our talented young dramatists have now reached, so to speak, on the upgrade!

'Connection' Is Stylized, Basically Naturalistic

The note typical of the youngest playwrights of the late '50s is sounded in the concluding lines of Jack Gelber's "The Connection" first performed July 15, '59. The play, as everyone knows, though slightly stylized, is a basically naturalistic picture of what goes on in a junkie's pad: that is to say, it the lingo is still unfamiliar to you, a place where addicts take their fix or dose of heroin. (The play's "chorus" keeps repeating throughout the play, "That's the way it is. That's the way it really is.") Still the play is not fundamentally about drug addicts; if it were it would not have made the strong impression it has.

A character in the play whose idea it is to make a movie about junkies answers the suggestion that the "H-Bomb riff" might make a more arresting subject, "Well, if it wasn't junk, I would have been involved with something else." Another character comments, "That's very heroic." The reply describes the play as a whole: "No doctors, no heroes, no martyrs, no Christs. That's a very good score."

Before the final curtain descends there is a repetition of the most telling (though wordless) scene of the play: a character enters who "goes to the light socket in centre-stage and plugs in the cord of the portable phonograph. He opens the phonograph and puts on a Charlie Parker jazz record. Everyone assumes an intense pose of listening and Harry carefully picks up the record, closes the phonograph, unplugs the cord, and leaves. There is a long pause. One of the musicians (onstage) starts playing and others join him in cementing their feeling."

This is the play's "religious" ritual—a concentration on and an absorption in the wild wail, the lyric chaos of the jazz enigma.

After the years of hope (the New Deal etc.), after the war against Fascism and Nazism, after Hiroshima, after McCarthyism, after the return to business as usual, after constant talk of disarmament accompanied by increasing preparation for and apprehension of nuclear war, Solly the intellectual in "The Connection" declares, "You are fed up with everything for the moment. And like the rest of us you are a little hungry for a little hope. So you wait and worry. A fix of hope. A fix to forget. A fix to remember, to be sad, to be happy, to be, to be. So we wait for the trustworthy Cowboy (purveyor of heroin) to gallop in upon a white horse. Gallant white powder." To which someone retorts "There ain't nothing gallant about heroin, baby."

So "The Connection" is, after all, a social play—with a difference. "I used to think," says the Negro jury of the play, "that the people who walk the streets, the people who work every day, the people who worry so much about the next day, the people who worry so much about the next dollar, the new coat, the chlorophyll addicts, the aspirin addicts, those people are hooked worse than me."

The difference between the outcasts in "The Connection" and the dissidents of the '30s is not in their frustration but in their aims. The boys of the '30s had faith; those of the '50s have no cause, see no issue. The best of them can do no more than dream—usually in nightmares.

They are what Edward Albee calls "permanent transients." They are attached to nothing—not even to women. (Hardly any of these new plays deal with the relation of the sexes; there are very few important women characters in them, and sexual passion is almost never referred to as either a delight or a solace.) Freedom here is that of progressive jazz which supports no identifiable theme but leads wierdly in erratic rhythms.

How did these people get that way? We might speak of the absence of a recognized moral authority and of a freely accepted discipline. But this is only the consequence of the social history of the past 40 years and the present fearful stasis in which prosperity and success are the only sure norms of value.

The specific human result of the familiar history I have sketched is most incisively dramatized in three of Edward Albee's one-act plays which he modestly and properly refers to as his "novice work."

Just as there are no heroes or martyrs in any of these plays there are also no geniuses or people of exceptional gifts. The central characters are always little people with small needs and little or no possessions. All they aspire to is some small comfort.

'Laughably Small Room' In Uper West Side N.Y.

So Jerry the orphan of Albee's "The Zoo Story" (written in 1958 and first produced—after its world premiere in Berlin—in New York on Jan. 14, 1960) is in his late 30s, lives isolated on the fourth floor of a dismal roominghouse in New York's upper West Side. As he describes his "laughably small room" one of its walls is made of beaverboard: we learn that his neighbor is a colored homosexual as lonely as Jerry himself. In another small apartment lives a Puerto Rican family: "a husband, a wife and some kids; I don't know how many." Neither does he know any of the people on the second and third floors — except that there's a lady living in one of the rooms who cries all the time. The landlady is fat, ugly, unwashed and drunken. There is also the landlady's mangy dog whom Jerry tries desperately but unsuccessfully to befriend.

In Central Park Jerry confronts Peter, a married man in his early 40s: a publisher's editor who earns $18,000 a year and lives with his wife and children in the East 70s. I say Jerry "confronts" Peter because the conversation in the Park is imposed on Peter by Jerry's fierce determination to talk to someone who might understand his speech if nothing else. This speech is a stylized amalgam of sophisticated literacy with street-corner slang made comically eloquent by Albee's almost excessive facility.

Jerry is aggressively hostile and conciliatory at the same time. Peter tries to be friendly though he is discomfited when he is not appalled by Jerry. The contrast of the men is theatrically brilliant and renders the point of the play unmistakable.

On hearing the description of the tenants in Jerry's roominghouse Peter blurts out, "I find it hard to believe that people such as that really are." To begin with, Peter had supposed Jerry to be a Greenwich Village "intellectual" to which Jerry's response is, "What were you trying to do? Make sense of things? Bring order? The old pigeonhole bit?"

The play makes that cold abstraction the word alienation altogether concrete in terms of our immediate environment. Jerry seeks contact, a relationship, even if it only be that of reprobation or enmity. The landlady's dog's attempt to bite him, he says, was in some way an act of love. To which Peter very nearly in anguish cries out, "I don't understand" — precisely the reaction of the audience which fails to see the relevance of this play—and several of the others—to our present social condition.

The dramatic upshot of the play is that Jerry dies or rather commits suicide. He forces Peter unwittingly and unwillingly to kill him. To restate this less literally: Jerry already driven mad by the complacency of Peter's middle-class world only achieves contact with it in the end by forcing it to destroy him as an unintelligible menace.

Peter in a way has his own peculiar history not so much in "The Zoo Story" as in "The American Dream"—a more patently stylized play influenced, I surmise, by Ionesco. "The American Dream" (produced in the fall of 1961) is a caricature of the American middle-class home. Here Papa has been disembowelled and desexed by surgery and Mama is a bejewelled goose whose quacking Papa silently suffers, while Grandma is a crusty and cracked old soothsayer whose hometruths intrude on the bedlam of disconnected dialog like idiotic irrelevancies. Mama and Papa have had no children but Grandma reveals that they had once adopted a "bumble" a baby. In the course of making it into a proper child, they had slowly dismembered it. The baby finally vanished.

Into this household now comes a handsome youth, as perfect a specimen as a refrigerator, fit for modeling or any other form of commercial exploitation. He is looking for work: he will do anything for money. The boy reminds Grandma of the earlier "bumble." A splendidly packaged youth, the boy confesses himself incapable of love though everyone loves him for his physical attractiveness. He is a highly efficient mechanism, but he can create nothing though he can perform whatever labor is demanded of him. His name, says Grandma, is the American Dream.

This overlong play is biting but in comparision with "The Zoo Story" rather arid. Its audiences are on the whole vastly amused by it because for one thing Albee is often funny and can write. One wonders however if these audiences realize that in laughing at this devestating cartoon they are laughing at themselves — or at their very close relatives.

'Death of Bessie Smith' Is Approach to Realism

The third demonstration of what the younger generation thinks of our world today is "The Death of Bessie Smith," a play in eight short scenes first produced in Berlin in 1960 and in New York in the winter of 1961.

"Bessie Smith" is as close an approach to realism as Albee ever desires to make. All his plays have something of the parable about them. I am inclined to regard Albee's realism as one of the soundest aspects of his writing. Symbolism is rarely valid or moving except when it is couched in supremely expressive language or when its roots are deeply imbedded in the soil of recognizable experience. What is especially remarkable about "Bessie Smith" is that while it treats a subject that might have appealed to anyone of the "radical" dramatists of the Thirties—Albee deals with the material in an original manner. The subject is the fate of Bessie Smith, the famous blues singer whose death was indirectly caused by the refusal of various hospitals in the South to admit her after the emergency of an automobile accident because she was black.

We never see Bessie. The tragedy of Bessie Smith's death is not hers but that of a nurse who works at one of the hospitals to which Bessie has been brought.

This nurse is a lower middle class (or poor white) girl whose decrepit father has pretentions of descendance from much "finer" people in ante-bellum days. The nurse browbeats her father whom she despises, sex-teases an idealistic young intern with whom she is willing to neck but whom she will not think of marrying (his salary is $42 a month), and lords it over the Negro orderly who harbors thoughts of actively improving his status. In a play of the '30s this nurse might have been presented as a "reactionary bitch" (to use the summary terms of the era) but Albee reveals her as a person caught in the same blind alley of a "closed" society as the yearning but ineffective intern and the seething but cowed orderly.

The climactic speech of the play is that of the Nurse who cries out with a vehemence which transcends naturalism: "I am sick of it! I am sick. I am sick of everything in this hot, stupid, fly-ridden world. I am sick of the disparity between the way things are, and as they should be! I am sick of this desk . . . I am sick of this uniform—it scratches. I am sick of the sight of you [the orderly], the thought of you makes me itch. I am sick of him [the intern]. I am sick of talking to people on the phone in this damn stupid hospital. I am sick of the smell of Lysol . . . I could die of it' . . . I am sick of going to bed and I am sick of waking up . . . I am tired. I am tired of the truth . . . and I am tired of lying about the truth . . . I am tired of my skin . . . I Want Out!"

Fruit of Seed and Soil Our Society Provides

I do not blame those who dislike these plays! If they do not actually mirror the barrenness of the everyday life of our community they are certainly the fruit of the seed and soil that our society ordinarily provides.

Jack Richardson is the pleasantest of the three writers we have to consider and in a certain sense the most cultivated. Perhaps he should not even be enrolled in this scowling league of youth. In his two plays "The Prodigal" (Feb. 10, 1960) and "Gallows Humor" (April 18, 1961) he tries to express confidence in life, and to smile something like the smiles of Giraudoux and Shaw whose manner and language he occasionally imitates.

Yet "The Prodigal," the more successful of his two efforts, ideologically runs parallel with its coevals: it is anti-heroic, anti-political, anti-commitment. The second part of "Gallows Humor" mocks at conformity and the rule of habit; the first part rings changes on the axiom: take a chance on life. The accident and hurly-burly which are at the core of being are not only to be accepted but embraced and rejoiced in. The world is so crazy and so fundamentally without design that even good may be expected of it. In "Gallows Humor," the humor is indeed somewhat strained because its fables do not inevitably produce its precepts.

Orestes will not take sides with Agamemnon against Aegisthus or vice versa. He is indifferent to his mother's adultery, to his father's classic heroism, to the new order his father's rival wishes to establish. Orestes merely desires that his freedom be "indolent, unobtrusive and uninvolved." He just wants "to live" or to put it in the blunter language of the author's contemporaries he too "wants out."

When Orestes is condemned to exile for his hedonistic anarchism he is delighted to leave the "silly city"—capital of the civilization in which hot and cold wars are prepared and launched. "I have chosen as my friend and travelling companion," says Orestes," a person whose only worth is his charming uselessness. I am sickened by state ethics, find religion, at its best, high comedy, and having been tutored in wrestling since a boy, I can't remember having won a fight."

All three writers deserve encouragement, careful critical scrutiny and an attention that once was given to omens and oracles. For frail as their combined works still are—in number and in scope—they have their importance. What happens to them as artists and as men may well augur something of our own future.

London Musicals Gotham Never Saw Though By Rodgers & Hart & Porter

By ROBERT BARAL

Two of Charles B. Cochran's most colorful shows of the great London period of musicals (1920-30) were "Evergreen" and "Nymph Errant." Neither crossed the Atlantic to Broadway. The first has a Rodgers & Hart score and the latter is by Cole Porter. Only the musico'ogical cultists are familiar with this music. Oddly, too, as both scores are goldmines of little unsung gems from Gershwin, Kern, Youmans.

Buddy Bregman has lately cap'ured little known Rodgers & Hart songs at the Camelot nitery. It revealed that a lot of people go for the minor works, too. "Rodgers & Hart Revisited," Ben Bagley's disk for Spruce Records was along some nostalgic theme. Some feel three's enough material in the Broadway archives to do the same for Irving Berlin, Noel Coward, DeSylva, Brown & Henderson and many other ranking tunesmiths. The little songs got pushed aside when a "Sometimes I'm Happy" or a "Smoke Gets in your Eyes" ran away with attention.

Columbia Records has been approached to have Eileen Farrell interpret "Sam and Delilah" from Gershwin's "Girl Crazy"; "Thief in the Night" from Dietz & Schwartz' "At Home Abroad" and some of Vernon Duke's unknowns. Jerome Kern's "Siren Song," while not among the lesser known Kern songs, was also mentioned for a Farrell recording. It's felt many sleepers are lying about.

Rodgers & Hart's score for "Evergreen" of course is dominated by "Dancing on the Ceiling" but several of the other songs from the show also merit attention. "Nymph Errant" by Cole Porter is collector's item all the way through. Off Broadway has been toying with this show in mind for some time but nothing has yet materialized. Book limitations is given as the main drawback for a current production.

In either case it's the music which stands up and above. For an assist here is a backward glance at the two British musicals which never came over:

"Evergreen" (1930). The cast: "Jessie Matthews, Joyce Barbour, Sonnie Hale, Albert Burden, Madeline Gibson, Jean Cadell, Leon Morton, Kay Hammond, Mabel Couper, John Tiller Girls, Jean Barry, Dave Fitzgibbon, W. E. C. Jenkins, Carlos & Chita, Gladys Sammut, Eve. Book by Benn W. Levy. Songs by Rodgers & Hart. Dances by Buddy Bradley, Joan Matas and Billy Pierce. Costumes and sets by G. E. Calthrop, Alick Johnstone, Marc Henri & Laverdet, Ernst Stern, Ada Peacock, Gustave Eacarials, E. DeLany, Doris Zinkeisen, Norman Hartnell. Revue Ltd. It ran 254 performances.

Jessie Mathews' Work

Here was a tour de force for Jessie Matthews. She essayed the role of a phony, a young girl posing as a 63-year old matron, all for publicity purposes. This unusual book by Benn W. Levy offered rich improvisation in the way of pace and color. It moved all over, to Paris, to Spain with sidesteps in cabarets. There was plenty of revue in the show.

Two feature stood out—the revolving stage which was introduced here and the Rodgers & Hart score. The revolving stage gave special meaning to "Dancing on the Ceiling" from the Rodgers & Hart songs. The center stage was dominated by an extravagant chandelier upside down—to create the effect of an overhead ceiling. The song was first used in Ziegfeld's production of "Simple Simon" which starred Ed Wynn, but somehow didn't impress Ziegfeld so it was taken out. In London this particular song became Cochran's favorite for years. It became the race when "Evergreen" finally settled down.

Other songs from Rodgers & Hart included: "Dear, Dear," "No Place But Home," "The Colour of Her Eyes," "In the Cool of the Evening" and "If I Give in to You." All are catchy. "Harlemania" is another jazzy number here, though it was not published in the regular sheet music form.

"Evergreen" was lush with glossy trimmings. Carlos & Chita lent authentic "Folies" nudity when the book arrived in the Paris setting. Then the Spanish scene which opened the second act was strict-Catalonia and accented flamboyant pageantry.

Sonnie Hale, Joyce Barbour and Albert Burden were also important to the show—but it was Jessie Matthews who ran away with it. In addition to dancing expertly she also slipped into the old woman character with facility. The army of designers who created the fancy upholstery for the production speaks for itself. The show was top C. B. Cochran. Among the Young Ladies presented were: Margaret Braithwaite, Iris Browne, Hylda Burdon, Ann Barbarova, Eileen Clifton, Roma Darrell, Peggy DeReske, Mina Hillman, Bunty Pain, Pearl Rivers and Felicity Seddon. It's said that one reason "Evergreen" never came to Broadway is that the novelty of the revolving stage wound up in "The Band Wagon" first which took the edge off a quick repeat. The Rodgers & Hart songs though hold up through the years.

Early Gertie Lawrence

"Nymph Errant" came into the West End in 1933 with Gertrude Lawrence, Betty Hare, Wilfred Caithness, Norah Howard, Doris Carson, Moya Nugent, Austin Trevor, Gerald Nodin, Kenneth Ware, Queenie Leonard, Irish Ashley, Morton Selten, Leslie Roberts, Hella Kurty, David Burns, Eve. Elisabeth Welch, Walter Crisham, Jean Davaut, Edward Underdown, Margaret Emden. Book was by Romney Brent adapted from the novel of James Laver. Songs were by Porter. Dances by (note) Agnes deMille, also Carl Randall and Barbara Newberry. Sets and costumes credit to Doris Zinkeisen. The run was 154 performances.

Porter's sock songs plus Gertrude Lawrence as a modern nymph is the memorable feature of this C. B. Cochran musical. While based on James Laver's book of the same title, the show soon assumed revue personality with its vari-colored scenes and exotic flavor.

Porter's score never heard on Broadway except in the smaller east side boites) contains some of his finest work. It is saucy and full of surprises in a slick Cole Porter fashion. In the Turkish harem scene Gertrude Lawrence sang "The Physician" which required expert command of slick diction to master. She covered all the ailments with syncopated relish in this ditty. Then in the same scene Elisabeth Welch from Broadway belted the jazzy aria, "Solomon," across with authentic Harlem virtuosity. "Experiment" which was introduced in the Lausanne sequence is also exceptional. The star reprised this song in the finale. "It's Bad for Me," "How could We Be Wrong?" and the title song, "Nymph Errant" which accents a juggernaut rhythm, round out the other Cole Porter contributions.

Basically the story concerned a young girl on the loose, who is confronted with men and sex everywhere she turns, only to find true love right on her own front door step. There's a peek in at the "Folies de Paris," which presented a razzle-dazzle display of girlie-girlie turns. All of this bounding book provided window-dressing for the rich score. Agnes deMille directed the dances here with an assist from Barbara Newberry and Carl Randall. Doris Zinkeisen's sets and costumes ran riot on this musical grand tour including Venice, Athens, Turkey, Smyrna and Paris. "Nymph Errant" today would get nowhere on its book, but the Cole Porter songs are still bright. RCA Victor cut a platter of this show with Gertrude Lawrence which is good for show biz posterity. The star gave it a strong personality sell.

New Theatre at Manteo, N.C.

Manteo, N. C.

The new Waterside Theatre being built on Roanoke Island on the site of the original amphitheatre built in 1937, is scheduled for completion by the time "The Lost Colony" opens next summer for its 25th anniversary season.

The structure is being built by the National Park Service at a cost of about $70,000.

REDISCOVERY OF 2D BALCONY

By AL MORGAN

Thanks to David Merrick, I have been privileged to return to at least one scene of my childhood without disillusionment or pain. The second balcony has remained frozen and hasn't changed at all since the days when it was my natural theatrical habitat.

The hard truth is that I never saw a good play until I was 17 years old. I haunted Gray's Drugstore and picked up 20 or 30c seats in the second balcony that were put on sale at eight o'clock. I saw every bad play that opened in New York in the years between 1932 and 1938.

Since the war I have been involved, in one way or another, in reporting on the theatre, have freeloaded my way to openings and would suspect the validity of a ticket that didn't have a hole punched in it.

At the moment I am involved as an editor and play reviewer of a magazine, an occupation directly responsible for my fascinating trip back to the past. It seems that Mr. Merrick objected to something I wrote about him, threatened me with a lawsuit, a punch in the nose and quite probably an appearance before the United Nations. I, in turn, objected to subsequent actions of Mr. Merrick and we had, in the immortal words of the Broadway columns, phffted. As a result, I joined a long list of distinguished people on what is laughingly called "The Merrick list." The first evidence of the enormity of our breach came to light when I was told that I had been stricken from his press list and would have to hustle around for a ticket to the opening of the first Merrick production of the season, "Sunday in New York." I did a ridiculous thing. I called the boxoffice of the theatre and bought a ticket, an action calculated to get me drummed out of the Drama Desk. The only seat available was in what is rather quietly called "The Upper Balcony." It was not only in the upper balcony . . . but was the last possible seat in the upper balcony that qualified as being inside the Cort Theatre. Opening night I made my way to this eagle's nest, the scene of many a childhood disaster and sat myself down. My legs have grown since 1938 and I was forced into a jackknife position, with my knees against my chin, my head bowed, to get a glimpse of the stage four stories below me. One advantage was that I had no trouble reading my program. I was sitting with my head brushing against the crystal chandelier. I thought, for a moment, of Lon Chaney in "Phantom of the Opera" but dismissed the idea because I wasn't sure where Mr. Merrick was sitting, a bombsight distance, below me.

I was buttressed by two overweight schoolteachers on one side and two equally stout ladies on the other who carried brown paperbags. The schoolteachers spent the minutes before the curtain rose discussing the charms of the gym teacher. The lady with the brown paperbag opened it and passed liverwurst sandwiches on hard rolls to her companion. She offered me a bite and I declined.

"You pay for your ticket?" she asked me.

"Yes," I said.

"You're crazy."

It was an opinion that held up right through the course of the evening's entertainment.

The schoolteacher on my immediate right reached into an oversized handbag and took out the Newsweek cover story on Bobby Morse and proceeded to read it aloud.

The lady with the liverwurst sandwich turned to me and through a liverwursted full mouth asked if I knew somebody in the cast.

"I figured you must," she said. "Or you wouldn't be here. You connected with the theatre?"

I said no.

Just before the curtain went up a very elegant pair of upper balcony firstnighters picked their way down the 60-degree angle of the staircase to their seats. He was wearing a tuxedo and Chesterfield. She was wearing a low cut evening gown and an orchid. My sandwich eating friend had a comment.

"Big deal! If he'd bought her a violet instead of the orchid maybe he could afford to sit in the mezzanine. You see her hairdo? It's called a beehive. For God's Sake!"

She went into gales of laughter, spreading roll crumbs over the four rows in front of us.

"The beehive, for God's sake. It looks like a football helmet."

When the play started my schoolteacher friend whipped out binoculars that might have seen service on the Westwall.

"She looks scared," she told me.

I was glad to discover that there was really a face on the stage in the distance. From my perch I saw only figures and had an unobstructed view of the part in the hero's hair.

I got a complete running commentary during the show from one side or another.

"She stole that piece of business from Nancy Walker."

"Listen . . . she won't get into bed with him. I seen other plays like this. They get close but honest to God, they never get into bed."

"You'd think at least they'd have paper towels in the ladies room, wouldn't you. For $3.60 I got a right to expect paper. Am I wrong?"

"Oh God! You know the brother is going to come in now. You know it?"

"I thought you said it was a musical?"

"Have an apple?"

"If she remembers to put the orchid in the icebox it'll stay good for a couple of days."

There was a stir from the teachers' side when the suitor made his appearance. He evidently, from their seat, with the aid of the binoculars, bore some physical resemblance to the gym teacher. It added a rooting interest for them and every time the suitor moved they sighed.

"He dances just like him."

"He has a blazer just like that one."

"You don't thing it could be, do you?"

"No. He'd have said so. You know he can't keep a secret."

"I'll say he can't."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Ha."

At intermission, the teachers went down to the lobby to see the celebrities and climbed the Cort Matterhorn back. My other seat companion didn't move.

"Who wants to see them bums?" she asked.

Then she added, mysteriously, "I see them all the time, anyway."

During the second act the upper balcony burst into screams and applause when a love scene was accompanied by an LP of Frank Sinatra singing.

"Childish," said my teacher.

"He sings good. Don't you want an apple?"

At the final curtain, I discovered a small, interesting footnote to my journey into the past. The upper balcony habitues are not applauders.

U.S. Leadership In Musical Plays

Edwin Lester, general director of Civic Light Opera Assn. on the Pacific Coast since its founding in 1938, recently wrote some program notes in "Curtain Calls" on the musical stage. There have been, he estimates, some 10,000 musicals since the inception of the form, usually dated from John Gay's London "Beggar's Opera" of the 18th Century, the same libretto, substanially, as is still extant in "Threepenny Opera" with music by Kurt Weill added. Quoting Lester:

"Popularity of this as an entertainment form did not really begin to develop on a broad scale until about the middle of the 19th century—in Paris with the era of Offenbach. Leadership moved to Vienna with Johann Strauss. There it remained for a generation of great composers of whom Lehar is the best known to us. Toward the end of the century, a new challenge came—from London with Gilbert & Sullivan. For the first time the librettist became important. Around these major influences other composers and authors developed. As we study the musical theater literature, it is obvious how the tides changed in different countries at different times, according to the strength of the creative leaders and the vogues which they inaugurated.

"America 'got into the act' just before the turn of the century. Practically all of the composers of the American musical shows of that period were foreign born. But their surroundings and the tastes to which they were catering were so American that Herbert, Friml, and Romberg, and other lesser-knowns of that period are regarded as American composers."

Despite innovations in the period between 1910 and 1930, there was a slump in musical comedy creativity after 1930 which persisted until 1943. That is the date of what Lester rates as the great artistic upheaval, the arrival on Broadway of "Oklahoma" by Rodgers & Hammerstein, with their "Carousel" and "South Pacific" following.

Lester believes that the impact of Rodgers & Hammerstein influenced so many changes in the modern musical stage as to have no parallel example in the whole history of the form. Again quoting the Pacific showman verbatim:

Latter-Day Showmen

"Under this influence, new talents came into the limelight with significant works, among them Lerner & Loewe with 'Brigadoon' and 'My Fair Lady,' Frank Loesser with 'Guys and Dolls,' and a host of others too numerous to mention. And a particularly happy coincidence was that two veteran craftsmen came through with the best works of their illustrious careers, Irving Berlin with 'Annie Get Your Gun' and Cole Porter with 'Kiss Me Kate.' There was an about-face in England and in all the English-speaking countries. By 1945, the American musicals took over completely and have continued to dominate ever since. It has been a source of great embarrassment to the British authors. Their own work has so far failed to match or even successfully imitate the American idiom. The London press has evidenced its jealousy by hammering American imports unmercifully. But English theatregoers have paid little or no attention to the critics. The British musical theatres have become home home grounds for American hits."

Nowadays there is little question about Americans dominating the musical stage, says Lester, expressing a view held by many others. He goes on to speculate that of 10,000 musicals concocted in 200 years time the "best 15" of them would surely have been two-thirds written in the last 18 years and by Americans. Of musical show performances round the world he believes 90% would be the works of Americans.

Durability Of London's Plays

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

The day must surely come when this annual review of the West End legit scene will no longer record the sensational run of "The Mousetrap" at the Ambassadors Theatre. But that day is not in sight, and though the Agatha Christie whodunit is now in its 10th year, Peter Saunders, who is presenting it, declines to forecast just how long it will stay on. More than six years ago he was predicting it would still be running in its tenth year, but now he just gives up guessing.

It always takes the exception to prove the rule, but that record-breaking run is indicative of some degree of the stability that is in evidence in the London theatre. Legit management still remains a highly speculative and chancy business, and in the past year there has been no let up in the run of failures—some dismal and others bold.

A quick glance at the West End scene, however shows that there are two musicals currently in their fourth year, a farcical comedy in its third, and another musical just about to celebrate its second anniversary. The two long-running tuners, of course, are "My Fair Lady" and "Irma la Douce"; "The Amorous Prawn" is the long running farcical comedy and the home-grown musical is "Fings Ain't Wot they Used T'Be." And, as further evidence of the staying power of the right type of show, there are ten other productions which opened in the 1960-61 season (ended May 31 last) which are still going strong.

Since the beginning of the 1961-62 season on June 1, more than 50 shows have been presented, but as a switch from the past few years, the new waves, who made such a vivid impression during the past two or three years, have hardly been in evidence. John Osborne, who started the Angry Young Man vogue a few years ago with the smash finpact of the four non-pros who wrote and are appearing in "Beyond the Fringe." The Fortune Theatre has a minimum waiting time of three months, even for matinee seats, and the show, on present performance, could easily run beyond next September when it is due to open on Broadway under Alexander H. Cohen's banner. The other successful revues are "One over the Eight" at the Duke of York's and "The Lord Chamberlain Regrets" at the Saville.

A hit show in London, of course, can earn a substantial profit, but nothing compared with the returns of a Broadway click. So more and more West End managers set their sights on New York and have been greatly encouraged by the increasing two-way traffic between the two countries. In the long run comparatively few make it across the Atlantic, but when they do the potential pickings are substantial. Among the productions currently on the boards in London there are a number already scheduled for Broadway, among them (in addition to "Beyond the Fringe") the Lionel Bart musical "Oliver," Anthony Newley's "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off" and "Ross."

In line with this transatlantic trading, there has also been a heavy upswing in transatlantic travel by managers from both countries on the prowl for new productions. Nowadays most of the top New York importers have their own scouts touring the country with an eye on possible deals, and now London managements are becoming more alert to the situation and are doing more travelling than for years past.

As VARIETY's annual box score indicates, a Broadway import is by no means an automatic success in London, but the record of hits, particularly among the musicals, continues to be most impressive. For the last couple of months, as one example, the Palace Theatre has been advertising the next Christmas arrangements for "Sound of Music."

Apart from "My Fair Lady," already referred to, other U.S. hit tuners currently on view include "The Music Man" at the Adelphi, "Bye Bye Birdie" at Her Majesty's and "Do Re Mi" at the Prince of Wales. The last two named opened during the current season and both look destined for long runs. There have, however, been fewer straight imports from Broadway during recent months and the only one of any significance currently on view is "Critic's Choice," which has been running only during the past month.

On the question of production costs, the London theatre has a tremendous advantage over New York. A good class show can be mounted here for a fraction of what it would cost on Broadway and that has enabled managements in London to take a risk which their New York counterparts could rarely afford. It was these economies, for example, which enabled "Taste of Honey" to be a hit first in London and later in the United States. Ditto for Harold Pinter's "The Caretaker," one of the more distinguished and successful of the New Wave drama school. Few managements, however care to take the first plunge in staging experimental theatre, often preferring to leave the pioneering work to such theatres as the Royal Court, the Arts and the Theatre Royal, Stratford and then changing their luck on a subsequent transfer. This has been a steadily developing process over the years, though of late the Arts Theatre Club has done little of significance.

Compared with the handful of theatres on Broadway, the 40-strong houses in the West End makes a formidable total. That is the strength and weakness of the British theatre. It is overwhelmingly concentrated in the capital and is rapidly dwindling in the provinces. There have been a few courageous moves to open new theatres in provincial cities and some of these ventures have achieved a measure of success. The Belgrade at Coventry is one notable example. Now Sir Laurence Olivier has become associated with the new Chichester Theatre which is to launch a festival season this Summer. Such a project could be a valuable stimulant and may lead to a resurgence of theatrical development throughout the country. And that is something sorely needed.

New Trends In Musical Comedies, Or Are They?

Accenting the Librettist (After the Lyricist Got His Place In the Spotlight; the Composer Always Had It) Is More Evolutionary Than Revolutionary

By STANLEY GREEN

(Author of "The World of Musical Comedy")

Last August, the N.Y. Times compiled a roundup of commentaries on the current state of the musical comedy theatre, containing many illuminating observations by some of the leading practitioners in the field. Of them all, perhaps the most honest and sobering remark was made by Moss Hart who said, "My impression as an old campaigner is that the success of one season is the folly of the next. Anything one says of the theatre in terms of trends can always be revoked the next season."

Stanley Green

True enough. Throughout the entire history of the theatre we have seen so-called trends flourish for a few years, and then quickly become things of the past. We have had the great European operetta influx of the early years of the century; the up-to-date, almost plotless musicals of the 20s; the politically-oriented book shows and revues of the 30s; the historical Americana sagas of the mid-40s. The times were right for those musicals and the successful ones prospered because they were good—not because they were part of a trend. They were never meant to be—nor did they ever become—guideposts for slavish imitations.

The only thing that we can say is constant in the development of the American musical theatre is that—through its feast periods and through its famine periods—it has always shown a general, over-all striving for maturity and quality. At first, through the influence of such giants as Victor Herbert and Jerome Kern, this was mostly apparent in the music. Later, lyricists began to win recognition, and finally, librettists. Today, we find that the songs are more or less taken for granted while all the concern is devoted to the quality of the libretto, or book, and the way in which it is served by the songs and dances. We justly pride ourselves not only on the adult themes with which our musicals are concerned but also their wide variety.

This season, perhaps, there is a greater awareness than previously of the world around us, particularly with such productions as "Milk and Honey," "All-American," "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "Kwamina," and "No Strings." All these shows follow no pattern—just as the memorable musicals of our recent past followed no pattern in dealing with many subjects that were once considered taboo in song-and-dance entertainments. Among these subjects have been psychoanalysis ("Mr. Hart's own, "Lady in the Dark"); juvenile delinquency ("West Side Story"); the struggle for women's rights and Negro rights ("Bloomer Girl"); the unpleasant side of show business ("Pal Joey," "Gypsy"); racial conflict ("Finian's Rainbow," "Lost in the Stars"); tenement living ("Porgy and Bess," "Street Scene"); union activity ("The Pajama Game"); December-June romances ("South Pacific," "Fanny"); the need for international understanding ("The King and I").

Evolutionary Progression

This broadening of the horizons of our musical stage is usually traced to Rodgers & Hammerstein's "Oklahoma!," in 1943. With that show, the creators blended all the theatrical arts with such skill than many accepted it as a revolution in the theatre. Yet, if we study the history of our musicals, we find that what Rodgers & Hammerstein achieved so strikingly was more evolutionary than revolutionary. Rather than inaugurating any trend toward the well-integrated show, what it did achieve was a perfection in technique of a development that had been going on ever since the second decade of the century.

As early as the mid-1910s, Jerome Kern, in collaboration with Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse, attempted this same sort of integration for a series of shows known as the Princess Theatre musicals. At that time, Kern was actually quoted in a newspaper interview as saying, "Musical numbers should carry the action of the play and should be representative of the personalities of the characters who sing them." Seven years later, Oscar Hammerstein 2d wrote an article in Theatre Magazine on the importance of enhancing a strong story with closely integrated songs, a belief that was echoed in the program of his musical, "Rose-Marie," which contained this notation: "The musical numbers in this play are such an integral part of the action that we do not think we should list them as separate episodes." It then listed merely five songs as standing out "independently of their dramatic association."

And just four years after that, Hammerstein's future partner, Richard Rodgers, was associated with a show called "Chee-Chee" that contained a similar program note. To quote collaborator Lorenz Hart in an interview just prior to musical's New York opening: "The songs are going to be a definite part of the progress of the piece, not extraneous interludes without rhyme or reason."

That these early attempts at broadening the horizon of the Broadway musicals were rudimentary is undeniable; the important thing is that there were people in the musical theatre — the most "commercial" theatre of all—who were striving to do things just a little bit more imaginatively than was customary at that time. Surely when we see revivals of "Leave It to Jane," or "Show Boat," or "Of Thee I Sing," we find that the manner in which they were put together has far more significance to us today than the fact that they were—or were not—part of trends.

Classic Sources

Of course, one obvious way to make sure that a musical has a plot of substance is to adapt it from a literary classic. This season is no exception. We have "Kean" (based on a Sartre play based on a Dumas play); "The Gay Life" (from Schnitzler's "Affairs of Anatole"), "All in Love" (Sheridan's "The Rivals"); "O Marry Me" (Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer").

Yet there is really nothing new about transferring a previously-written story onto the musical comedy stage.

This, too, has been going on for some time—ever since 1874, to be exact, when J. Cheever Goodwin and Edward E. Rice produced their hit travesty on Longfellow's poem, "Evangeline." In 1899, Victor Herbert composed the score for a musical version of Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac." Four years later, DeWolf Hopper starred in a musical remake of Dickens' "Pickwick Papers."

Other adaptations presented on Broadway during the first three decades of the century were "Tom Jones" (the Samuel Richardson novel); the Bolton-Wodehouse-Kern "Leave It to Jane" (George Ade's "The College Widow"); Fritz Kreisler's "Apple Blossoms" (from a play by Dumas, fils); Rudolf Friml's "Three Musketeers" (from the novel by Dumas, pere); "Monsieur Beaucaire" (the Tarkington novel); "Phebe of Quality Street" (Barrie's "Quality Street"); the Duncan Sisters' "Topsy and Eva" ("Uncle Tom's Cabin"); Friml's "Vagabond King" (Justin McCarthy's "If I Were King"); Romberg's "Princess Flavia" (Anthony Hope's "Prisoner of Zenda"); Rodgers & Hart's "Connecticut Yankee" (the Mark Twain story); and Kern & Hammerstein's "Show Boat" (the Edna Ferber novel).

Some works have even had more than one adaptation. Tarkington's "Seventeen" became "Hello, Lola" in 1926 and "Seventeen" in 1951. Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Ernest" was made into both "Oh, Ernest!" (1924) and "Ernest in Love" (1960). This season's "Let It Ride" had a predecessor in 1941, "Banjo Eyes," that was also founded on "Three Men On A Horse."

And as for the current tendency toward adapting old movies into musical comedies, this was going on as early as 1919 when Rudolf Friml and Otto Harbach converted the film "Miss George Washington Jr." into a legituner known as "The Little Whopper."

The More Things Change—

Even many original musicals owe their origins to previously-written works—some to previously-written musicals. The theme of "Bells Are Ringing" was pretty close to that of a 1927 Kalmar-Ruby show, "The Five O'Clock Girl," which was all about a worker in a cleaning shop who carried on a telephone flirtation with an unknown man. Daring though it is, "West Side Story" makes no bones about its "Romeo and Juliet" lineage. In 1904, Victor Herbert's "It Happened in Nordland" was all about a woman ambassador to a mythical country, just as Irving Berlin's "Call Me Madam" was in 1950. The stories, however, had nothing in common. Rodgers & Hart's "Peggy-Ann" was set in a Freudian dream world 15 years before "Lady in the Dark." The leading character and the situations in "The Music Man" had a great kinship to the George M. Cohan musicals of the early days of the century, and even took place on Cohan's favorite holiday, the Fourth of July. "Show Boat" preceded both "Kwamina" and "No Strings" by 35 years in depicting the romance between a Negro and a white.

Portraying actual people on the stage, as in "Gypsy," "Fiorello!," "The Sound of Music" and "Kean," has also been part of the musical theatre for many years. In 1908, "Funabashi," which had a book by Irvin S. Cobb, was a thinly-veiled satire on an around-the-world trip made by William Howard Taft when he was Secretary of War. Walter Catlett doubled as President Wilson in a sketch in the "Ziegfeld Follies of 1919," President Coolidge was depicted in the first "Garrick Gaieties" in 1925, and a scene showing President Hoover leaving the White House was in "As Thousands Cheer." And, of course, FDR was the central character in "I'd Rather Be Right." Even LaGuardia, in the person of Philip Loeb, was singing a song on Broadway in "Sing Out the News" long before Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick dreamed up the words and music to "Fiorello!"

Always Cinderella

But of all the themes that have been used on Broadway—no matter how advanced the techniques have become — the hardiest, most perennial one has always been the Cinderella story—or the almost indistinguishable Pygmalion-Galatea legend. Henry E. Dixey started it all in 1891 when he wrote and starred in the marathon hit, "Adonis," which was a deliberate satire on the Pygmalion theme. Since then, we have had numerous variations—from "Mlle. Modiste" to "Annie Get Your Gun"; from "The Firefly" to "Silk Stockings"; from "Sally" to "The Unsinkable Molly Brown." "My Fair Lady," of course, has become the truly classical Cinderella story—complete with Eliza's meeting a prince at a ball.

The most important thing for any aspiring composer, lyricist or librettist to realize is that what is needed most in our musical theatre is not fashions or trends, but the crazy boldness that makes a writer decide to do a show because he alone has faith in his idea no matter what others might say. He may find that it's all been done before, but he will also find that there is always room for someone who can do it better.

Hail, Paradiso Del Union!

Theatre Guild Topper's Sardonic Solution for Legit

By LAWRENCE LANGNER

Having recently returned from Latin America, I would like to recount for those interested in the legitimate theatre, the discovery of a lost theatrical community named Paradiso Del Union which was discovered recently in the Andes near Bogota, and where the theatre is flourishing to a magnificent extent. In the mystical atmosphere of the high Andes, it is said by the soothsayers there that what happens in Paradiso Del Union today will be happening in the United States tomorrow, so that for this reason alone a description of the happy theatre of that country will be worthwhile.

Lawrence Langner

All the legitimate theatres in Paradiso are owned by beer brewing companies, oil companies with gasoline filling stations, automobile companies, and so forth. These magnificent new structures are tremendously successful because theatre tickets have been completely abolished. It is now only necessary to buy a dozen bottles of beer, or a few gallons of gasoline, to receive tickets to plays in these fine new theatre buildings, each of them capable of holding between 1,500 and 2,000, as a result of which practically the entire population has become theatregoers. Progressive as this movement is, however, it is topped by the extraordinary union regulations which have resulted from the fact that several years ago the oldtime theatrical managers there capitulated to the Unions with the simple statement, "If you can't fight them, join them." The surrender of the managerial group took place in the Town Hall where the managers solemnly brought their play scripts down to the Comite Para Encontra los Datos (The Fact Finding Committee).

Maximilian Gordano, said to be the oldest theatrical manager extant, made a speech to the Unions from which we will quote just one sentence. "In turning over the theatre business of Paradiso to you, we ask you to be magnanimous and to remember that we too would like old age pensions, and also the right to be considered when the final accounting is made." Actually every manager in this field, in order to survive, had to have some other business to support him; for example, there was Rogero Stevenso, who was supported by his realestate business; the Teatro del Guildo, supported by an international patent agency; Gilberto Millaire, supported by a banking house; Juleo Shenko, supported by a building firm known as Webbi & Knappo; and numerous others. Since the operation of the new system, these managers have been able to give up their outside activities and are now supported by the Unions in return for their work in creating properties for the theatres.

Unions' 'Casting'

The procedure for producing plays in Paradiso del Union is simple. The plays are submitted to the Stagehands and the Musicians Unions, who read them and select them on the basis of the number of stagehands and musicians employed. Great prosperity has attended all those who work in the theatres as a result of the minimum requirement of 25 stagehands for each play, while every dramatic play is required to have music and to employ at least 10 musicians. As to the scenery, which the parsimonious managers had been trying to cut down in order to save money, the most elaborate sets are now possible, and these in turn have attracted larger audiences, since one-set plays are taboo and practically every play is a spectacular.

The Actors Union was at first rather suspicious of the new arrangement, but upon the other Unions agreeing that the actors' minimum salaries should be at least as high as the stagehands, they readily went along with the new arrangement, especially when it was agreed by the so-called Fact Finding Committee that the star should not be permitted to earn more than 90% of the salaries paid to all the other actors in the play. As to the talent agencies (Agentes Para Vendir Talento), most of whose members were busily engaged in selling stocks in their companies on the Stock Exchange at Bogota, it was decided to help them by arranging that they represent every stagehand and musician, as well as the authors and actors, so that the agents as a whole receive 10% of the entire salaries and royalties of the industry, and are thus not forced to go into other businesses, such as buying and selling studios, realestate, operating television programs, etc.

Scenic Artists

The Unions of Directors & Scenic Artists (Sindicato des Escengrafos), as well as their assistants, resolved the question of whether or not members of the Scenic Artists Union were the employees of the managers, and thus entitled to be a true labor union, or whether the managers were the employees of the Scenic Artists. This was decided in favor of the Scenic Artists. As to the managers themselves, it was agreed that their services were at least as valuable as those of the stagehands, and they were placed on the same minimums. The purpose of this was to prevent one of the managers, an ambitious young man by the name of David Amerrico, from making a deal with the stagehands union under which he produced all the plays and occupied all the theatres.

Professors of economics from Yale, engaged by the League of New York Theatres to study the situation, raised several points regarding the successful operation of the Paradiso theatrical system. It was pointed out that all problems of economics had been solved by the fact that the government paid all the deficits arising from this operation, and that said deficits were partly met by a simple system of taxation, which amounted to barely one-tenth of 1% of the total expenditures of the country on war materials, and its backward country program.

Any further deficit was met by a grant from the United States Government Aid to Backward Countries under the Latin American Foreign Aid Policy. When the President of the Republic was reproached by someone from the U.S. State Department, he replied with malicious glee, "The alternative to the above is Communism—choose, what you want. If our country becomes Communistic, everyone will be employed by the State, and your Foreign Aid will cost you more." Furthermore he pointed out that under the free enterprise system operating in Paradiso del Union the managers were still considered to be necessary, although a disappearing asset in the theatre. Under Communism they would probably all be shot.

With this reassurance the State Dept. has raised no objection to meeting all the deficits referred to, and Paradiso del Union is now assured of having the most flourishing theatre in the world, since practically every citizen is busily writing plays in the hope that they will be produced and he can qualify for a Cadillac car, a five-room apartment and a large old age pension.

The Critics!

The dramatic critic problem which exists throughout the world, has been solved in Paradiso by the simple expedient of making the drama critics pay for their seats out of their own pockets, and waiting three days before writing their reviews. Any critic who writes more than three bad reviews is automaticlaly blacklisted for putting actors, dramatists and stagehands out of work. As a result of this simple expedient, the best dramatic notices in the world are written in this highly successful operation.

One of the great advantages of the Paradiso system is that it has put the theatre scalpers completely out of business. When they found, in order to secure the best front seats, they had to buy thousands of bottles of beer and millions of gallons of gasoline, they regurgitated and took to the hills, where they returned to their earlier but less lucrative practice of highway robbery.

One of the reasons that so much good music is coming out of Paradiso del Union is because no musical plays are produced unless the record companies are able to sell at least 1,000,000 records of each song. In return for this concession, the record cmopanies subsidize the musical theatre, but have the right to veto any song in a musical play which will not sell in enormous quantities when sung by their favorite record artists.

But the best is yet to come. A commission has been sent down to Paradiso by the League of New York Theatres to ascertain whether it is not possible to introduce the same system into the theatres of the United States. And there seems to be no good reason why this should not be possible. Indeed, many people feel that it is already well on its way.

I conclude by repeating my opening remarks: "What Paradiso del Union does today, the United States will do tomorrow! So we had better prepare for a happy future, since we are going to have to spend the rest of our lives in it."

HOW I WONDER WHAT YOU ARE?

By GERARD WILLEM VAN LOON

It's a funny thing, inflation. Not funny ha-ha. Funny distressing. Everything goes up. Milk prices. Theatre tickets. Everything but values. They go down. Elevator and counterweight. Same principle.

There are two kinds of elevators. Express and local. There are two kinds of inflation. Galloping and creeping. In a galloping inflation—when you can't buy a cup of coffee with what you'd sold your house for last week—people get alarmed and push the emergency button. Creeping inflation—which is what we're riding in—is more insidious. It moves so slowly that nobody is supposed to notice or do anything to stop it. But every trip to the supermarket you notice it and every trip to the theatre you notice it, and no place are you more aware of it than on your playbill. That's where the counterweight operates.

Time was when an actor or actress—by dint of durability plus talent plus the quality of being somehow unique—ingratiated him—or herself with the critics and the public to the extent that his or her name sold more tickets at the boxoffice than the title of the show or the fame of its author. They became "stars." Their names were placed above the title because they had proven their ability to create night after night, a type of excitement and an illusive sort of magic that dragged in the customers.

Of course this meant assuming one hell of a responsibility. A star like as not carried a production. The livelihood of a whole lot of people depended on the star's facing the footlights despite domestic disruptions, ingrown toenails or vacationing analysts. Stars were respected. They respected themselves. They knew what they had gone through to get where they were and they made no apologies for being there. Sob-stories to the contrary notwithstanding, they liked what they were doing or they would have quit long ago. They knew what they were doing because they had spent a good long time learning how to do it. Audiences knew what they were coming to see, saw what they expected and went home contented. The show might be lousy but they had seen a star!

Then the elevator got going.

It cost more to live so actors were paid more. If they were paid more they felt entitled to fancier billing. Gradually old terms like "supporting actors" or "subordinate players" weren't good enough. Terms like "also starring" and "costarring" and allied doubletalk pushed the lesser fry up a notch while agents and pressagents were busily seeking ways to sneak the names of their clients up past the title. One set of good notices in a foolproof featured role and bingo! Stardom!

With this population explosion in the star bracket audiences got confused. Who was it they had really come to see? Some smart operator got the idea of insisting on bigger type. Consternation! "Same size type," screamed the other operators. The slide-rule game began. Agents and pressagents ran around measuring billboards, newspaper ads and playbills to insure their clients against "contract infringement." But who was going to insure the theatregoer against paying to see a star and being served a prematurely upgraded tyro? Nobody. Sadly he used the "mad-money" he used to spend on Broadway as down-payment on a tv set. Run-of-the-mill performers he could see at home without getting his feet wet.

If you're a playbill-saver, take a handful from a few years back. Gaze fondly at the names twinkling at you from above the titles of the shows and ponder how few ever graced a playbill again. What happened? Once "starred" they couldn't lose caste by accepting anything short of starring roles. After a few seasons of "resting" that tv soap opera or that big lug from Minnesota with six kids looked good to them. Stars they had never been. Just sputniks. On their way down they dissolved in the atmosphere.

What's the answer? I'm no prophet. I don't know. Maybe producers are reckoning that the old theatregoers are dying out and the newcomers won't know the difference. Expense account and theatre-party audiences already don't. If the critics say a show is a "hit" they like it. Especially that second act—because they slept through the first one. But somehow I cannot help thinking (the wish being proverbially father to the thought) that somebody will come to his senses and his sense of values before the ushers get into the act.

Just recently, after 19 years of devotion and dedication to the theatre, one of our finest actresses finally acquiesced and permitted her name to be placed above the title of her next show. In the hearts of the crtiics, the audiences and her coworkers it had belonged there years ago. In her case the honor of stardom—and an honor it is, boys and girls—was long overdue but bless her for holding out. May others have the brains to follow her example.

In the meantime I am going out to buy a 30c. quart of milk and come home to watch tv.

Exercise In Nothingness

By CLAUDE BINYON

Hollywood.

This is an experiment. I'm sitting before my typewriter without a thought in my bony head; so if you have anything to do go ahead and join me later.

The trouble with writing for the Anniversary issue of VARIETY is that after 29 years they expect something from you whether you're ready or not. As you've already guessed, I'm not ready. Brother, I'm as barren as a 56-year-old bull, which I am.

Claude Binyon

Last summer I thought I had it made for this Anniversary issue. I was in London, and after a couple of Bloody Marys with Leo McCarey at the Savoy I knew what I was going to write. Man, that cat really makes Bloody Marys. I was going to write a piece titled "London is Beautiful in July and August." It would be about what is wrong with England today, and it would be the viewpoint of a man who didn't get more than 100 yards from the Savoy during his first trip to England, which I didn't. Mainly it would be about my unhappy experiences with the head porter, who upstaged me twice in favor of Lord Snowbottle, or some such silly name. I was really burned, because I'm a democratic fellow in favor of my fellow man, and I was going to rip this head porter to shreds while pretending to reveal what is wrong with England today. I'm a real sneak when I want to be.

But I made the mistake of having dinner with Bill Holden and his wife, Ardis, the next night after the two bloody Marys. During a lull in the conversation, which invariably occurs when I am present, I said that I had a great idea for an article about what is wrong with England. They both feigned eagerness to hear about it, and I told them. . . . So here I sit without a thought in my bony head. Like I wrote earlier, if you have anything to do, go ahead and do it and join me later.

I talked to Art Park tonight and he and his wife Merrill had just come back from Mexico City to look at the ashes of their Bel Air home (this is November). They were fascinated by their cars, standing in the area where their garage once was. Their stationwagon was only 18 inches high, and their Thunderbird only a foot high. It was too bad the cars wouldn't run. I asked Art what he would miss most, and he said: "My bed, with my dent in it." That really got me in the heart.

I first met Art when he was a drummer with a dance band, and he asked me what I thought of the band and I made the mistake of telling him. A few nights later he dropped by with all his drums and asked me to take care of them while he found a job. He became an MCA agent and I had to get rid of the drums to keep my wife.

It's funny how you remember one certain thing about one certain person. Mention Sime Silverman to me and I remember the days on VARIETY when I was writing a series called "Inaccurate Biographies." I wrote one about a music publisher, and Sime called me up to his desk and said he'd like to do a little rewriting on it. What could I say? So it was printed, and I couldn't understand a word of it, and people asked me where I got all my inside information.

Say Claudette Colbert to me and I remember when Wesley Ruggles and I stopped speaking to her because of arguments over a script I had written. Finally there was a big reconciliation scene, and as Ruggles walked toward Claudette with arms outstretched her French poodle bit him. I was spared because Ruggles was the director, and as the writer I was second in line for reconciliation.

Say Bing Crosby and I hear one line: "Binny, you're wasting your time explaining the scene to me. I do two kinds of acting—loud and soft."

The name Jack Oakie also brings back one line. It was spoken back in the thirties: "Kid, if you're going to get drunk on a picture, wait until it's half finished so it's too expensive to replace you."

I remember a great actress who fainted at a party. Her husband lifted her limp body and paused beside the hostess on his way to a bedroom. "You're insured, of course?" he said.

Carole Lombard means Canadian Club to me. When I was at her home she would say: "Oh, you're the one who drinks Canadian Club. I'll have it for you next time." She never did, and the routine became so funny I switched to bourbon.

Clark Gable I remember as the fellow who cut me down to size. My stationwagon windows were plastered with stickers of little-known places I had visited, like Weedpatch, Battleground and Punkin Center. And then Gable showed up with his stationwagon carrying stickers from such places as Last Ditch Noplace and Whereyoubeen. I found out later that he had contacted the company which made the stickers and ordered his own batch.

I've got a million of 'em, but still not a thought in my bony head. If you're not back yet I'll wait for you.

Future Of Gilbert & Sullivan

By GLENDON ALLVINE

With the expiration of 1961 and the D'Oyly Carte copyrights, the comic inventions of Gilbert & Sullivan seem destined to keep on "shining right through the 20th century," in the words of William Schwenck Gilbert as he complimented Sir Arthur Sullivan on the music he had composed for "The Gondoliers."

In the half century since Gilbert died on May 29, 1911, while rescuing a drowning girl in the lake on his estate, these copyrights have maintained in Great Britain the inviolate words and staging traditions of the dramatist, but now that Pandora's box has been opened, these restraints are gone and some of the Gilbertian dictums are being kicked in the teeth.

Even back in the 1870s when piratical American producers were rushing unauthorized shows into Broadway and hinterland theatres, they stayed as close as they could to the words and music, but now new topical phrases are being interpolated and gags inserted that would make Sir William gag.

From his Olympian peak in the theatre, Sir Tyrone Guthrie has directed "H.M.S. Pinafore" and "The Pirates of Penzance" as if he neither knew nor cared about the playwright's stylized staging, and directors of lesser taste, with their shreds and patches, are adding to this topsy-turvy.

And how do the Savoyards react to this new look?

From the Journal of the Gilbert & Sullivan Society, founded in London in 1924, and with branches in Buenos Aires, Capetown, Australia, Canada, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and New York, we learn that the Society "hopes that new interpretations will adhere faithfully, without alteration or addition, to Gilbert's words and Sullivan's scores; that the style of the productions will be loyal to the Victorian spirit in which the operas were conceived; that the operas will not be burlesqued and that good taste will be a dominating feature."

Colin Prestige, chairman of the Society dedicated "to play an active but tactful and constructive role in maintaining the artistic conventions of the operas," has written:

"Principles of artistic conscience forbid disapproval of new interpretations just because they are not a la Carte. But principles of artistic conscience permit criticism if new interpretations depart from the fundamental artistic intentions of Sullivan and Gilbert themselves."

Staunch D'Oyly Carte supporters will be severely tested. We may expect some producers deliberately to shock us. There may be unexpected "gimmicks." There may be innumerable modernizations of the libretti. Scores may be extended to permit elaborate dance routines. The wit and style may be forced, or may be swamped, so as to conceal the essentially simple charm which Gilbert and Sullivan designed. Controversy must be handled with discretion. Patience and restraint will be needed."

Current Versions

With the Bridget D'Oyly Carte Co. now maintaining her grandfather's traditions at the Savoy Theatre which he built from the profits of "Pinafore" and "Pirates," and Guthrie presenting his versions of those two early successes, London audiences will have an opportunity to decide, in a welter of innovations, whether they like "God Save The Queen" in an electric light gag curtain to "Pinafore," when all Savoyards know that electric lights first blazed for "Patience" in the Savoy, the first London theatre equipped with Edison's new current just 80 years ago last October tenth.

With Canada and the United States enjoying Guthrie's productions in 1961, the D'Oyly Carte players are being booked into North America late in 1962, and in this cultural exchange new generations are becoming acquainted.

Meantime Dorothy Raedler's American Savoyards are in their third season off-Broadway, and hundreds of amateur groups are singing the songs that have never failed to brighten the English-speaking world every day during the reigns of Victoria, Edward VII (who belatedly knighted Gilbert), George V, Edward VIII, George VI and Elizabeth II.

At the Grolier Club last October Gilbert & Sullivan aficionados had a unique opportunity to see all of the posters and first-night programs, playscripts with Gilbert's annotations, and hundreds of letters from the collaborators and Rupert D'Oyly Carte, the catalyzer who brought them together and, despite tempermental quarrels, kept them creating until Sullivan's death in 1900. This remarkable collection, a lifetime labor of love by Reginald Allen, now managing director of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, may eventually find a permanent home in that cultural environment.

When in 1938 the late great Oscar Hammerstein staged thy Larry Schwab) "Knights of Song," my (allwine's) musical excursion into the lives of Gilbert & Sullivan, at the theatre where "My Fair Lady" is now playing, we adhered to most of the Gilbertian traditions, and made a dramatic point of having the reincarnated Gilbert, on the stage, show exactly how the scenes should be played, succeeding so well that Richard Colett, then general manager of the D'Oyly Carte, told me that Nigel Bruce was more Gilbertian than Gilbert himself.

DICK PLEASANT AND BALLET NOSTALGIA

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

On July 4, 1961 occurred the death at 52 of a man who was apparently entitled to far more credit as a U.S. ballet pioneer than he ever received in life. Richard Pleasant's drive in organizing the Ballet Theatre, 1939 through 1941, is now more generally acknowledged by survivors, though his subsequent quarrel with the wealthy member of his Corps de Ballet, Lucia Chase, who took over the company later and ran it according to her own tastes, has considerably blurred Pleasant's own role as founding father.

It was the season of 1940 on which Pleasant's reputation in nostalgia was reared. A man of strong opinions and open-minded as between traditional and modern dancing he somehow managed to bring under one roof most of the renowned choreographers of 21 years ago, to wit: Anthony Tudor, Agnes de Mille, Mikhail Mordkin, Adolph Bolm, Michael Fokine, Anton Dolin, Andree Howard, Yurek Shobelevski, Eugene Loring, Jose Fernandez, Bronislava Nijuinska.

A feat of considerable fiscal magic was in mounting the new ballet to play in the since-razed Center Theatre opposite the Radio City Music Hall, and to come near turning a profit, which ballets rarely do. Pleasant's soloists of 1940 included, plus some of the choreographers who also danced, the following:

Nora Kaye, Patricia Bowman, Leon Danielian, Dimitri Romanoff, Yurek Shabelevski, Leon Varkas, Miriam Golden, Edward Caton, Vladimir Dokoudovsky, Harold Haskin, Iolas, Karl Karnakoski, Ada Verova, Alexis Kosloff, Peter Michael, Jack Poteiger, Karen Conrad, Viola Essen, Nana Gollner, Andree Howard, Annabelle Lyon, Mona Montes, Nina Stroganova, Sonia Woicikovska, William Dollar and Hugh Laing.

Republic, Zone, City & Folks Underwrite Germany's Active Provincial Legit

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

Recently a one-acter by William Saroyan had its world premiere at the City Stage of Darmstadt, West Germany. Frankfurt the City Stage has commissioned American dramatist Thornton Wilder to write an original three-act play to open its new $2,000,000 theatre next year.

And on the West German stages during the coming 1961-62 winter season, the works of at least a dozen new German playwrights will be presented.

What's the reason? Support from the federal government, from the state, from the city, and from theatrical-minded public have financed rebuilding of the war-damaged legit. Most of all, support comes from the German people themselves. Here, folks still like to go to the theater—and they prove it, in some of the towns and cities, by buying up as many as 80% of the tickets on a seasonal basis.

A couple of years ago, West Germany's theaters had one major complaint—the works they were presenting were mainly re-creations of Broadway hits plus German translations of the most popular French dramatitss. Where were the budding German playwrights?

They were accused of being afraid to write of the terrors of war or the Nazi regime, of turning their talents to the higher-paid television or radio.

This season reveals such German playwrights as Oelschlegel, Hubalek, Ahlsen, Schubel, Matlias Braun, Hey, Moers, Waldmann, Wittlinger, Sylvanus, Asmodi and Dorst having their new works performed.

Jans Rehn, former submarine captain, is the author of "Lust und Leid der Herrn Wehzee" (Lust and Tragedy of Mr. Wehzee) that Boge-slav Barlog is directing in Berlin. The farce by 38-year-old satirist Wolfgang Ebert about marital mishaps, "Harmonien" (Harmony) is being done on the Duesseldorf Stage.

The works of German dramatists are being popularized at home—and that means hefty royalty payments for the once underpaid authors. Erwin Sylvanus' "Korczak und die Kinder" (Korczak and the Children) has now been performed 433 times on 32 stages, and Karl Wittlinger's two-person drama "Kennen Sie die Milchstrasse?" (Do You Know the Milky Way?) Rang down 1,086 times on 63 stages.

Some of the German stages have developed their own authors. Heinz Hilpert in Goettingen, for instance, offers first performances of plays by Sylvanus and Wichmann, while Barlog in Berlin presents plays of Guenter Grass and Jans Rehn. Hamburg's noted director Gustav Gruendgens offers plays by Dieter Waldmann and Siegfried Lenz.

Let's take a look at the way some of the typical German theaters run, as compared to their American counterparts, where outside of New York it's nearly impossible to keep a year-around city theater operating.

BAMBERG—In this town of 78,000 residents, the City Theater, with 700 seats, has an annual budget of about $125,000, half of which is guaranteed by the city, the rest provided by ticket sale. The city maintains a permanent contracted group of 14 male and 6 female actors on salary.

Director-producer Gerd Gutbier, who also acts, offers the public a choice of eleven new productions every year—and 10 percent of the tickets are sold on a seasonal basis. He has a wide variety of old and new works, classics and comedy, with Sartre's "Dirty Hands" and Wittlinger's "Do You Know the Milky Way" along with the classic Gerhard Hauptmann tear-jerker "Rose Bernd" and "Antigone."

HOF ON THE SAALE—With 57,000 residents, this repertoire stage also performs at 14 villages in the area, giving about 56 performances a month and travelling via bus from one town to another.

The theatrical budget of about $400,000 comes from the city of Hof, the Bavarian Culture Ministry, the Bavarian Radio, from several theatrical assistance organizations, and from the villages where the group plays. Faulkner's "Requiem for a Nun" was a big Priestley, Cocteau, Duerrenmatt, O'Neill, Sartre and Tennessee Williams are planned—some pretty sensational productions for the outlying provinces of West Germany!

NUERNBERG—The three houses, Opera House, Lessing Theater, and Stadt Theater Fuerth, provide the public with 2500 seats, under a combined budget of nearly $2,000 a year.

Producer-director E. Pschigode is proud that 900,000 tickets were sold last year, and that his theatergoers no longer expect only the traditional "Meistersinger of Nuernberg" in a classic setting, but also attend avantgarde musical and theatrical productions.

COBURG—The classic theater that formerly belonged to the Princess of Sachsen-Coburg and Gotha is now the City Theater, over a century old and highly elegant, with 1,000 seats. But the 47,000 residents of the town bought 90,000 tickets last year, and some of the season-ticketed seats have been in the possession of the same family for over 50 years!

Despite this tradition (and a slim budget of about $450,000 contributed from the state of Bavaria and the city) there are 30 new stagings each year of opera and theater.

SOMMERHAUSEN ON THE MAIN—This village, ten miles from Wuerzburg, offers "the smallest theater of the world"—a one-man venture of Luigi Malipiero, who is director, producer, writer, set-builder and ticket-seller. In the 450-year-old Tower Gate theater, with just 54 seats, Malipiero with his wife plus now and then a couple of aspiring young actors offers performances nightly except Monday, with a matinee as well on Saturdays. This year he's doing Claude Spaak's "The Windrose," followed by Bernard Shaw's "Beloved Liar" and Kurt Goetz "Two Monalyres" plus Paul Valery's "Faust," set for the winter season.

Malipiero, incidentally, is credited with starting two outstanding young German performers—Monika Wilhelm and Alexander Solms—with their stage careers.

SCHWEINFURT—This town has just invested $1,500,000 in a new 761-seat theater, which will be used exclusively for guest performances, as there is no full-time city stage group as yet. But at least 700 of the seats will be filled by season tickets, with regular drama groups from other cities occupying the stage.

Actors who work full-time under contract to a German theater may earn from 300 to 400 marks a month (from $75 to $100), indeed not a hefty salary. But compared to many American actors who never get a crack at even a minor role and fill out the days as soda jerks and school teachers, Germans offers the performers constant appearances in the classics and in the latest plays by local and foreign dramatists.

And with the city, state and federal government underwriting the costs of most of the stages, tickets are scaled down to where the public can afford to go. At some stages the prices run from a tiny 1.50 marks (about 40 cents) up to eight marks ($2) for the best seats in the house.

"Bertha, The Sewing Machine Girl."

"The Span Of Life" was an annual visitor. In it, three men (Donizetti Brothers) formed a human bridge across a chasm allowing the heroine to escape from the "pursuing villain." Also, we were treated to a series of prison plays: "Escaped From Sing Sing," "The Convict's Daughter," "In Convict's Stripes," "Convict 999," "From Sing Sing To Liberty" and "A Desperate Chance," this one based on the sensational escape of the notorious Biddle brothers. "Tracked Around The World," "The James Boy, In Missouri" and "Wanted By The Police" were among the most sensational productions, requiring (according to billboards) carloads of scenery and special effects. Katie Emmett starred for years in "The Waifs Of New York," while Joseph Santley toured the country in "From Rags To Riches." Estha Williams trouped year after year in "At The Old Crossroads" and "As The Sun Went Down." Other favorites with the gallery gods were "A Thoroughbred Tramp" and "A Ragged Hero" ran a close second. "Little Heroes Of The Street" exploited the heroism of New York newsies. An annual treat was the appearance of Harry Clay Blaney in "Across The Pacific"; his character of "Willie Live" was the first of a light comedian in a leading role in melodrama.

Wedding Bells & Marriage Vows

Lillian Mortimer was a leading actress in the days of plays in which virtue triumphed over wickedness and her wellknown "No Mother To Guide" served her for several seasons, leading to "Bunco In Arizona." Miss Mortimer being the author of both, as well as their star. Wedding bells and marriage vows were heard in the following: "On Her Wedding Morn," "Thorns And Orange Blossoms," "Parted On Her Bridal Tour," "The Fatal Wedding," "Wedded But No Wife" and "Deserted At The Altar." All these may have led to the writing of then popular song "Waiting At The Church."

A few more which had some little success were "The Ivy Leaf," "Just Before Dawn," "The Great Northwest," "A Grip Of Steel," "For His Brother's Crime," "Lost In The Desert," "The Man Who Dared" with Howard Hall, "The Eleventh Hour," "A Working Girl's Wrongs," "Rachel Goldstein," "McFadden's Flats" with Sadie Connolly, "A Life's Revenge," "Her First False Step" and "In The Name Of The Czar." Another group includes "The Man Without A Country," "Woman Against Women," "A Bowery Girl" "The Tornado" (an old Lincoln Carter play), "Remember The Maine," "Cuba's Vow," "The Last Stroke" and "Under The Dome" (again Carter). The last four were productions with the Spanish-American war as a background.

The popular priced circuit of the time also produced an American Indian star, Go-Wan-Go-Mohawk, who appeared in two plays based on Indian history or fiction, "The Indian Mail Carrier" and "The Flaming Arrow."

"The Chinatown Trunk Murder" was based on the Elsie Siegel killing in New York (1912) and just about killed off this type of meller.

The Lambs Wash: Fondly Recalled

By FRED HILLEBRAND

I am a member of The Lambs therefore a sentimentalist. Our clubhouse at 130 West 44th St. in New York City was designed by the famous architect Stanford White. And the theatre where our Lambs Gambols are held may be the finest little theatre in the country. The biggest names in show biz in the last 50 years have appeared on its stage. Check-list: Caruso, Will Rogers, David Warfield, David Belasco, Jack Barrymore and his father Maurice, Raymond Hitchcock, Al Jolson, George M. Cohan, Billy Gaxton, Victor Moore, Frank Fay, Fred Waring, Eddie Foy, Ed Wynn, Victor Herbert. The list would run into hundreds.

I remember Jack Norworth who wrote "Take Me Out To The Ball Game." He told me that when he wrote it he had never seen a ballgame, but after the song became a big hit he thought he'd better go. That brings me to my baseball story. Once a year the Lambs stage what they call a Lambs Wash at the Percy Williams Home at Islip, Long Island. About 400 members attend. A great day it is. We leave from Penn Station in our own private train, our own German Band playing the latest hits until unconscious led by Eddie Weber. Private busses meet us at Islip to take us to the Home. After a five-minute ride we are there and the day starts with the raising of the flag and the singing of the National Anthem, then a speech by the Shepherd of the Lambs.

The year I speak of the late John Golden was our Shepherd and he spoke of this wonderful Estate that the showman, Percy Williams, left to the actors and hoped we would all be coming out here year after year etc. We then had a moment of silent prayer in reverance to Williams, hailed as the best friend the vaudeville actor ever had.

After that the games would start. Pitching horse-shoes, pinning the tail on the donkey, hoop racing, spoon and egg race, golf (there was a lovely nine hole course on the

Grumblings Of A Dramatist

More Shelf Space For Unread Plays

By EDNA AMADON TONEY

As a veteran unproduced playwright I have come to that time in life when I feel I ought to be getting out and telling young playwrights what to do.

First of all, kids, don't bother to send out your script to a producer, be he off or on, if it is not about prostitutes, dope addicts, incest or rape or a happy combination of all, spiced with plenty of four-letter words. This also goes by the name "avant garde" which I took the trouble to look up. It means "advance guard" if that will be any help to you. It wasn't to me. All those topics go back about 8,000 years ago, so where's the advance, and if everything's been picked over and used, what's left to guard?

Still it's no use your sending out plays about plain people's problems, because producers find them very boring except when written by playwrights who have already made their sack of gold, in which case the plays are not boring at all but fraught with hidden significance and wise in the ways of humanity.

Now if you are not going to listen to me about that, kids, at least for heaven's sakes don't make the mistake of sending out your script with a self-addressed, stamped envelope enclosed. For producers with shelves and shelves of unread plays by unknown writers, the temptation to send it right back crisp and clean must be irresistible. Has been, in fact. So just relax and the script will come back to you one day, maybe handsomely packed and by Railway Express, collect, or pushing through a torn grocery bag, tied with a piece of string and marked "Educational Matter" right under the 3c stamp.

And when it does come back don't get sore about the gravy stains and the cigaret burns because they do prove that your script was actually read by somebody and believe me that's something in these times. Besides, if you call yourself any kind of a writer, at this point two or three years later, you should be so deeply involved in your next play that when the package arrives you should have no idea even what it could possibly be until you tear off the gift wrappings or the script falls out of the bag, whichever the case may be.

About Agents: Don't bother contacting one unless you have one of those "avant garde" plays or are related to Huntington Hartford or better yet are Huntington Hartford.

About Broadway Producers: Never met any.

About Off-Broadway Producers: While some of these are a little unstable you will find others who are a lot and still others who show manic-depressive symptoms, but this latter group must be looked at with compassion because they are heavily burdened on account of having their offices in their parents' apartments and being desperate to move the heck out of there and still not have to go to work. This makes for a constant state of emotional imbalance, as we say in the trade, so don't go getting mad at them if they start out being crazy about your great script, then being crazy about your great revisions and then being crazy about how your great revisions fit into your great script and then wind up with the news that they are having trouble getting a director, a cast and a theatre, their capital is $1.25 and they haven't been out to lunch yet. I mean, make lots of notes and use them for characters in your next play instead of hollering things like drop dead etc.

About Play Competitions: Don't enter. I warn you there is nothing as bad for your morale afterwards as those faded mimeographed letters about not you with your sophisticated talents making the $2,000 but a simple man of the soil from Baldeagle Bluffs, Minn., who, between throwing mash at the chickens, plowing up the peapatch and calling the hogs to pasture, also managed to knock off the prizewinning play, his first effort too, about this Existentialist couple doomed to end their days holed up in this Park Avenue penthouse.

As I said, there is nothing as bad for your morale but here is something worse, kids: the postmortem letter, hand typed on a real typewriter and signed in real ink and not being able to tell you in so many words how sorry they are, regretting your unfortunate choice of subject matter since plays about simple men of the soil are pretty well passe, all the same wishing you every success in future endeavors and enclosing a book of Japanese poetry as, so to speak, a spur.

Can you see why I say this is worse, kids? Not only because it will ruin Japanese poetry for you forever. Not only because those creeps are telling you that you could have been in the running but you ain't gonna run no more. No. It's because of what it does to you when you get that kind of letter and what it does to you, if you call yourself any kind of writer, is to make you hit the keys right then and there and punch out a not necessarily short but sizzling rebuttal and when you have finished doing that and you read over what you have written you will find yourself stunned by the confusion, rhetoric, bad spelling, tendency to start every other sentence with, "If you're so positive of that, let me ask you this . . ." and the in-between sentences with, "If you're so positive of that, let me ask you this . . ."and the in-between sentences with, "Not that it has anything to do with my case but . . ." as well as a repeated references to four recent plays about simple men of the soil, the title of not one of which you can recall. And wait, this is only the beginning.

If you call yourself any kind of a writer you are going to spend plenty of hours getting that rebuttal back to its original air of spontaneity but without all that namecalling, with decent spelling and smaller sentences and you are going to have to do without that repeated reference to those four recent plays which turn out to be not about simple men of the soil but simply about soiled men. So you have to fall back on O'Neill but after all that's not such a bad name in the theatre and might turn out to be a better clincher for your argument anyhow. And you finally mail the letter. But wait, you're not through yet.

While waiting for those creeps to try thinking up an answer to that one, since you yourself can't think about anything else you keep busy composing various types of answers to what they may answer you in return and you have already compiled quite a few before the fact that no answer of any kind will be forthcoming begins to dawn on you and when it gets through dawning on you then, if you still call yourself any kind of a writer, you will throw yourself into bed with a terrible stomachache or heartpounding or eardrumbeating or something like that and you will stay there for a week, if your loved ones can stand it, eating and drinking constantly, or only eating or only drinking constantly, whichever happens to suit your particular temperament.

So don't get mixed up in this kind of thing, kids. Life is hard enough.

About Playwriting Grants: Don't apply. They are usually won by playwrights who are recommended by committees which are recommended by other committees on account of they are such great recommenders and if you think you can crack through their complicated setup all I can say is try something simpler first like getting into David Merrick's office and reading your play aloud to him.

A Note of Hope: I cannot leave this subject without saying something positive so, whether the sore heads like it or not, I am going to tell you two sure ways to get your play produced, outside of writing it good and dirty.

Regretfully I have to say I can't try them myself because they are both very expensive and also my loved ones would give me a hard time about wanting to go off like that. But there may be some among you who happen to be unloved at the moment and would care to chance it.

The first way is to go some place behind the Iron Curtain like Irkutsk, stick around long enough to get citizenship papers, then have your script smuggled out of the country and brought to the United States at great personal risk to somebody, preferably a press-agent. Drastic? Yes. But believe me, kids, whatver you've got written there, be it only an Irkutskian version of Chicken Licken, it will be treated like a pearl of greatness and you will be an instant success.

The other way is to go someplace in front of the Iron Curtain like Paris, write your play in French and have it translated into English, leaving out a few pages here and there so that it will be mixed up just enough but not too much. Sooner or later some American agent will grab you off as a real find, the more so because you are a little hard to understand.

Sweden: A Dream

has been able to mix popular and serious modern plays. A characteristic of a Swedish private theatre head is that he is also the producer and Vasa's Per Gerhard, the son of Sweden's popular entertainer Karl Gerhard, usually directs.

Practicalities

Per Gerhard sketched some of the problems of running a private theatre with sincere ambitions to this writer as follows: "The civic theatres and the Royal Dramatic Theatre normally run a play for 30 to 60 performances. At a private theatre a play should run at least 100 to 150 times to break even and a play that is that successful is often good for 300 perfromances. Furthermore, it is difficult for us to get a qualified cast as the actors and actresses are often bound by one year contracts or are lured by the high fees paid by a state subsidized touring company. We can only make a one-month guarantee and if the play fails the actor may go unemployed as the other theatres will have made their plans for several months to come."

Another problem for the Vasa, declares Per Gerhard, is "the theatre has to compete with the modern technical equipment at the Royal Dramatic and the Stockholm Civic. But it doesn't have a chance. The Royal Dramatic Theatre was renovated for $1,600,000.) The audiences' demands on technical standards have increased, but the Vasa can only afford the most essential changes. Furthermore, even if we have a success we can't take too great risks on the next play. Taxes eat up a good part of our profits and the remainder may be large enough to cover one failure, but hardly two." "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" was a big success, but the Vasa lost most of its profits on John Osborne's "The Entertainer." The private theatres have also felt the competition from the Stockholm Civic Theatre's selling season tickets which allow customers to see five plays for the price of 2½ tickets.

A little over a year ago Stockholm got its first Civic theatre. The new house headed by Lars-Levi Laestadius who formerly headed the Malmo Civic Theatre, seats 800. Last year, the theatre staged the better known works in its downtown premises and toured a more experimental production in the new suburban areas. The plan was largely a failure as suburbanites were seldom interested in the more offbeat while the natural audiences for such works often found trips to suburb overly strenuous. Final figures for the first year activities showed a deficit of about $200,000, which taxpayers will have to make up.

On the whole the status of theatre in Sweden conveys a very favorable impression. As a result of the system, the noncommercial theatres, especially, are able to stage extremely well-balanced productions. A star performer will often appear in supporting parts. As actor or actress will normally appear in about three different plays a year. There will be periods, however, when he or she will have little to do, but the pay checks will still arrive.

Agonies Of First Nights, And The Ecstasy Of A Hit

By VERNON DUKE

"Cabin In The Sky" opening night was one of those gladsome, shining things we always pray for, but so seldom get. At the premiere, after the first gloomy 10 minutes, Joe's death, Petunia's despair and religious fervor, the entrances of the Lord's General (Todd Duncan) and Lucifer Jr. (Rex Ingram), came the songs—"Cabin in the Sky", sung by Ethel Waters and Rosamund Johnson's wonderful choir with affecting lyricism, Katherine Dunham's teasing "Love Me Tomorrow", Ethel's "Taking a Chance on Love," which really wrapped it up—and we were in, in, IN!!!

In later years, when flops came in fast and furious, there was no place I dreaded more than the theatre's lobby at intermission time. Any author or composer who hasn't been mortified, petrified and crucified during those heavy-as-lead 15 minutes, hasn't lived . . . beg pardon, hasn't died a thousand ingenious deaths. You spend this dreaded period ducking friends and enemies alike, rightly fearing the solicitous commiseration of the first, the cutting, floating politeness of the second.

Those in between—casual observers—do one of two things. If they're not sure about your show, they'll buttonhole you and screech: "Why, hello Jack! Have a nice summer?"—then you know you still have a chance. But if they peer at you sadistically and say quietly and without a trace of emotion, "Jack—what do you think of the show?"—Brother, get the hearse ready—you're dead.

Neither happened that night. Friends, enemies and casual bystanders told you—and what they said was good to hear. After the opening, having kissed every member of the cast, cried with Ethel and slapped Max Meth, the frenzied conductor, on the back a dozen times, Balanchine, Zorina and I repaired to "21" and sat in a happy haze, drinking Pommery-Greno of the right year, to be joined at 2:30 a.m. by Vinton Freedley (our producer), his eyes shining, who waved the ecstatic Brooks Atkinson's review and then read it to us in a quivering, happy voice.

Here, in part is what he read: "Perhaps 'Cabin In The Sky' could be better than it is, but this correspondent cannot imagine how. For (he musical fantasy is original and joyous in an imaginative vein that suits the theatre's special genius. . . ."

We all slept soundly that night. I don't think anyone connected with the show got up before noon the next day, and by that time all the other papers were in—all the reviews were favorable except John Anderson's in the Journal and John Mason Brown's in the Post. There were some reservations about the book—I only hope to get that good a book again!—but everyone, including Brown and Anderson, liked the dancing and the score. Richard Watts Jr. thought "Taking A Chance on Love' as brilliantly presented by Miss Waters, so gay and charming that one hates to think how the radio is certain to go to work on it from now on". Alas, the radio bigwigs wouldn't meet the songwriters' just demands, and the entire ASCAP catalog soon went off the air in toto, "Cabin" included, leaving the innocent listeners to be saturated with "Jeanie With The Light Brown Hair", and other such public-domain fare. Nevertheless, the songs being authentic, immediate hits—something that never happened to me before or since "Cabin"—they were accepted as such by the "trade" and played all over the country.

The day after the opening I charged into Jack Robbins' office, swinging an ivory-topped walking stick. "Well, what do you say now, Jack?", I asked challengingly. Robbins rose to the occasion — he had a way of sidestepping defeat that was the envy of his ever-loving associates. "Showing off already, eh?", he countered, scowling unconvincingly. "There'll be no talking to you now that you have a half-baked hit. Why don't you dust off the monocle, too?" I told Jack that I couldn't help feeling exhilarated. "Exhilarated?" he intoned pensively, the scowl gone, "Say, I like that word—remind me to use it". He grabbed Henrietta, the frail blond secretary, and executed a new China Doll mambo step. "Not bad, eh? Can Ethel Waters do that?"

I exited rapidly and ducked into the stockroom to find out whether orders for my songs were coming in; they were. Robbins, not having any faith in "Cabin's" future, placed the score with the smallest of his three firms—Miller Music—but that didn't stop it. When the MGM film of "Cabin" was made, my songs were switched to the next biggest firm, Feist Inc., went back on the air with a vengeance, and became hits all over again.

And In Contrast!

"Sweet Bye and Bye" opened in New Haven and played the usual crowded three days, bedlam reigning on both sides of the orchestra pit. Our leading man, Gene Sheldon, a renowned vaudeville mimic, was utterly lost in the wilderness of the musical-comedy stage and had to be replaced after the New Haven engagement. Dolores Gray was a tower of strength and stopped the proceedings with "Roundabout" and "Just Like a Man", transplanted into Bette Davis' "Two's Company" six years later. But even valiant Dolores couldn't carry the whole show on her back, especially a show as incurably sick as ours was.

DIRTY PLAYS

By HENRY SHEREK

London.

Believe it or not, I am against dirty plays, mainly because audiences have no possible means of telling what the play is about until they have paid for the tickets and are inside the theatre, by which time it is too late.

Theatrical entertainments are granted licenses here by the Lord Chamberlain, and I am in favor of this because, being a royal prerogative, judgment is given without any possible political taint; the Crown being above politics. Aren't you jealous?

There is no reason why a play dealing with homosexuals and tarts should not be shown, as long as the audiences are given proper warning, and not embarrassed when they have to view one of these spectacles in company with children. It is true that nowadays children probably know much more about these matters than we do, but it is embarrassing for both them and us to see them together.

In motion pictures the industry itself has its censorship over here, and if the film is deemed unsuitable for young persons it receives an "X" certificate, which means that nobody under 16 can see it. This caused an extraordinary situation when the film of the play "A Taste of Honey" was shown in London and nobody under 16 could see it, yet anybody of any age could see the stage play. The matter was even more absurd because the film was much more innocuous than the play, and could have been seen by anybody of any age without embarrassment.

It is true that plays dealing with offbeat subjects are having a certain vogue both here and in the States, and the result is that the producer makes a nice profit. So does a tart, but it is not a metier which appeals to many of us.

If you go to buy something in a shop, the shopwindow gives an indication of what goods there are for sale. When you go in you are under no obligation to buy what is offered to you, and you can walk out again without having disbursed a cent, but this does not obtain in the theatre.

If there is a public for dirty plays, by all means let us have them, as long as people are warned. I am not against immorality as such, in fact I do not care what people do as long as they don't do it in the street and frighten the horses.

To show that there is a much bigger public for plays to which the whole family can come, I need only point out that the two biggest hits in London can be seen by anyone of any age without embarrassment. I refer of course to "Oliver!" and "The Affair."

Beauty and Brains, or Vice Versa

Death recently of London actress Gertrude Norman at 83 recalls a condition of her correspondence with longtime fiance Gordon Craig that it may not be read in his lifetime. Craig is son of actress Ellin Craig which, in turn, recalls the GBS-Mrs. Pat Campbell correspondence which formed the theme of a "reading" play.

It also recalled an anecdote concerning Miss Craig and the Irish playwright which, apocryphal or not, has had some circulation. It had to do with Miss Terry suggesting that a child with the famed dramatist would be a superb specimen considering that "it would combine my beauty and your brains". To this, GBS supposedly responded, "But suppose the child were born with my beauty and your brains".

Miss Norman had presented the N.Y. Public Library, in 1955, the Marcia Van Dresser-Gertrude Norman collection of theatrical and musical scrapbooks, containing photographs, programs, letters etc. relating to the American, English and German stage where she and Miss Van Dresser appeared. In 1959 the Library's Theatre Collection received the entire Gordon Craig correspondence from approximately 1898-1958.

Miss Norman was the last living actress to have appeared with Sir Henry Irving. She played in his company at the Royal Lyceum Theatre, in London, as one of the little princes in the tower in "King Richard III" in 1896. She was brought to the U. S. by Julia Arthur for her production of "A Lady of Quality" in the seasons of 1897-98-99. She appeared in repertory with Mrs. Fiske in "Becky Sharp" in 1900 and in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," and later with Viola Allen in "In the Palace of the King." In 1902-03 she was with Otis Skinner in "Francesca da Rimini." Miss Norman also was a contributor from London to the old Theatre Magazine from 1905-1916 and was extremely active in support of the Musicians Benevolent Fund of England up to the time of her death.

How Talent Follows Spenders

Herewith, for historic curiosity, a list of performers playing in Dawson City, Yukon, during the Gold Rush era, 1899-1900. The point is perhaps obvious: talent is seldom deterred by primitive conditions or geographic distance. As to the "Camille" (sic) listed below, read also the accompanying press account, quoted from the Klondike Nugget, of its married leads who were not on speaking terms.

The following checklist is provided by the Dept. of Northern Affairs of the Canadian Government at Ottawa. It will be noted that the gold miners were edified by a Dawson Philharmonic.

The Aesthetics Of Mammon — And Vice Versa

Unlike the Pop Song, the Best Things In The Theatre Are Not Free— Boffo Plays Begot Boffo B.O.

By PROF. JOHN McCABE

(John McCabe is Chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, New York University, and the author of the recent successful book, "Mr. Laurel and Mr. Hardy.")

Take out a coin. Look at it carefully—at what it is and what it does.

The theatre is very much like that coin. It is beautiful and it is commercial. It is perdurable and it is evanescent. It is permanent and quickly expendable. It is an art and it is dross.

Prof. McCabe

Sir Henry Irving once observed that the theatre must flourish as a business if it is to survive as an art, and somehow or other that remark has never stimulated much argument over the indisputable fact. little remembered, that the greatest stuff in the theatre has usually been solid boxoffice.

Why is that so? In looking at the coin one sees on it the eagle of inspiration and the boilerplate trivia of commercial transaction. Maybe it is an essential of art in the theatre that it have carrying charges? Are we faced here with a comparison of the little known (in fact downright fictitious) Belching Goats of the Himalayas who leap from precipice to precipice belching at every bound? The natives hold hot disputation as to whether it is the leap that makes the goat belch, or the belch that makes him leap. Is gold the precious added ingredient that gives the playwright his ultimate facility in communication of his meaning?

That too much concentration on lucre is invidious need not be questioned. We have but to look around us. Harold Clurman pointed out recently that the greatest thing wrong with our theatre today is the tendency to equate merit with profit. This is solemn truth. The stop-clause-driven economics of Broadway have put countless good shows into the warehouse and it is, practically-speaking, a miracle on 44th or any other street that "All the Way Home" had at least a fighting chance to survive for as long as it did. Maybe, as Gilbert Miller has suggested, the prime thing wrong with the theatre is that there are just not enough theatres, or, functionally, it may be that the stop-clause has imbedded itself in the consciousness of most Broadway creative people with the result that their artistic consciences are maimed by the dollar mark.

But these, certainly, are unusual times. In the longrange view of the theatre, the fabulous invalid somehow or other pulls out of the long-suffering spasm of falling-down sickness and experiences a period of fairly robust health before the doldrums set in again every two centuries or so. It is during those not infrequent periods of health that we can observe that the theatre's liaison with business is a natural and in most cases rewarding one.

We believe that it is a strength of our American way of life that a competitive economy produces the best total product over the greatest range of time. Mousetraps, automobiles, girdles and vitamin pills are better than ever because men work in free competition in an open market to produce them. The buyer usually settles for the best among the selection available and it is this fact which I think sharpens a playwright's appreciation of his task at hand. Writing for an open market probably induces in the creative playwright a keen awareness that one of the basics of all good art is its universality. Beauty is really only as good as the extent to which it is seen and appreciated, and the commercial instinct to expand and offer the widest range of view is, in a sense, a handmaiden of the creative artist in the theatre. It can restrict him from the parochial and guide him into lines of the larger view.

The Bard Was B.O. Too

I have always felt that the impact of the commercial aspect of an artist's work in the theatre has always been seriously undervalued. Shakespeare did not write his plays to be embalmed in books; he wrote them not to be read but to be people who paid.

Shakespeare and his partners spoken by men who were seen by were business men. They ran the most successful playhouse in London, offering their clientele a very wide range of entertainment from sophisticated love comedy to deep tragedy to bouncing farce. When their supremacy as moneymakers was threatened by the sudden success of a boys' company across the river at Blackfriars, they did what smart business men the world over have done under similar circumstances—they bought up their rivals and found themselves the operators of the two most successful playhouses in London. These then, were vital conditioning factors of Shakespeare's dramaturgy and the fact that he was among other things a man very much interested in money (for example, he dabbled in realestate, both in London and Stratford), and the facts foregoing, suggest strongly that he wrote with at least an eye-and-a-half on the boxoffice. And the results would suggest that this was not exactly a bad thing.

Alexander Pope once wrote that Shakespeare "... for gain, not for glory, wing'd his flight." That this is altogether true is certainly debatable but I recall seeing "Henry V" at Stratford, Ontario, some years ago in the company of a friend who was then (as I was) a writer of industrial plays and films. He admitted to me somewhat sheepishly that he had never seen Shakespeare on the stage although he certainly knew him in the study. Following the rousing and stirring performance, he walked out into the night, visibly moved. After a bit, he came out of his ponder and said feelingly, "My God, that man is commercial." It was, for him, the ultimate tribute—and, to my mind, a very fine one.

Pleasing people—all of the people you can—in the best way you can: this is a part of the guts of art.

Chautauqua Heritage

It was back in the days of Chautauqua and the Big Brown Tent. I stepped off the train at the depot. The few stragglers soon vanished and I found myself looking at a small barefoot youth of about 10. His eyes and village manners said "let me carry your baggage, Mister." But I always did that, a trooper habit. I struck up a conversation however. "Little boy, do you know where the big brown tent is?" "Oh, yes sir" came the instant reply. "I can take you right to it."

We started off, through the dusty dog-day streets, which I noticed were sort of at random, no directional lanes. To make conversation, I dropped this homely question: "Little boy, what makes the streets so crooked?" He looked at me with those wondering blue eyes a few paces, then came up with this: "Well Mister, you see they have to be crooked to get to where they're goin'."

"Crooked Streets" is still in print. Last report, doin OK!

Backstage Heartbreak: Even In The Yukon

Reeking of present era, a publicity story on behalf of the Palace Grand Theatre in Dawson City, the Yukon, was unearthed by the Dept. of Northern Affairs at Ottawa, in connection with Canada's restoration of the theatre as a future tourist attraction. Bearing the caption "A ROMANCE OF THE STAGE" and two news banks: (1) "Husband and Wife Brought Together After Separation" and: (2) "They Play Camille and Armand Duval On the Same Stage Though Not On Speaking Terms".

The Klondike Nugget account, offered here for historic perspective and flavor, then said as follows:

"The peculiar demands which the histrionic art imposes upon its disciples and the unquestioned obedience which generally follows, constitute a spectacle which forms one of the principal charms of the modern drama. These demands often play upon the most sacred sentiments and require sacrifices of personal feeling rarely otherwise imposed. These reflections are suggested by a romantic episode now being spun by two histrionic artists prominent on the Dawson stage —George L. Hillyer and Babette Pyne.

"To go back a few years, it is learned that Miss Pyne is the daughter of Jack Sutherland, a famous cow king of San Joaquin valley and owner of the 'scizzar' brand so well known among the Western stockmen. Babe and Dot were heirs to a large fortune when Jack passed in his checks, but his thousands have long since disappeared, the girls having remaining of the fortune only a beautiful home at Kingston, California. But this is digression.

"George Hillyer met and loved Babe and four years ago they were married. After two years of married life they separated—it is no business of ours why—and have since been following individual paths, though, by one of the inscrutable plans of fate, continuing in the same orbit. When Frank Simons began to organize his present company he had for his assistant Mr. Hillyer, and among the actresses engaged were Babe and Dot Pyne. Thus the two were again thrown into close association, making the long trip to the Klondike in each other's company, and were together when the company opened.

"During all this time, however, two held no communion with each other. Whether it was obstinacy or whether the grand passion which once enthralled them had lost its warmth is another thing which belongs to them alone. Suffice to say, 'they never spoke as they passed by,' and George finally left Simons' employ to take the position of stage manager at the Grand. (NOTE: Palace Grand.)

"Then came the interesting incident which laid the foundation for these reflections. Charlie Meadows needed a leading lady and needed her badly; he wanted to cast 'Camille' and the success of the venture depended upon the qualities of the leading lady. His choice finally resolved upon Babe Pyne, and by offering a salary of most tempting proportions, he secured her services. 'Camille' was finally presented to the public, and the spectacle was seen of George Hillyer playing Armand Duval, the lover, to the Camille of his former wife, though neither had spoken to the other off the stage for two years.

"No one observing the skill of the two could possibly guess at the relations between them and of the consummate art with which they cover their real feelings; but much could be guessed at by one whose privilege it must be to see the actress, as some have, leave the stage in a condition of nervous prostration as a result of the strain, and possibly indulge, woman-like, in a sudden flow of tears. What is the real story these tears tell and how do they effect (sic) the man on whose account, it is said, they are shed?"

Only Two Permanent Yiddish Legit Cos., Paradoxically, Are In Communist Warsaw & Jassy

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Paris.

There are only two permanent Yiddish theatre companies in the world today, both in the Communist part of the world and both state-subsized. This is startling, from a number of standpoints, not the least of which is the subsidiary fact that this would seem to be in contradiction to the Soviet line. The Yiddish theatre in Jassy (last), Romania, is a smallish company about which not much is known. But the Kaminska Theatre of Warsaw has considerable international recognition, works all year around with a large company, a full repertoire, and makes frequent forays to London, Paris and other cities in Europe.

There are very few Jews left in Poland (official figures for the Warsaw area vary from about 4,000 to 20,000, as opposed to several million prior to the Nazi invasion); the government claim that the theatre draws a goodly percentage of non-Jewish customers is, therefore, probably true.

Ida Kaminska, a fine actress, is still the star and leading production factor. She tries to employ modern European technical knowledge for scenery, costumes, etc., but is far behind the Western world in know-how, of course. The only permanent theatre company in any Communist country which is truly modern, technically, in this observer's opinion, is the East Berlin Brecht company—and that has nothing to do with the present essay.)

About half the plays (or more?) there are no exact statistics available) are "modern," meaning recently fabricated and hewing to the government's political line. This is also true in Jassy. But the language spoken is Yiddish and a goodly percentage of the plays are from the old Yiddish theatre repertory. (When your reporter attended a performance in Warsaw he was saddened to see good actors wasted on a political tract. When he went to a performance by the same troupe in London he was heartened by an exciting performance of the company in an old Goldfadden standby. To be honest, neither play had much as dramaturgy. But for the sentimental, and most of the London audience seemed to be, the Goldfadden was the most successful of the four plays the company brought to London. A Sholom Aleichem play was the most successful of three played by the company in Paris. When the company manager was asked whether this same tendency was true in Warsaw's home base, no answer.)

Where Has It Gone?

What has happened to Yiddish theatre? At one time, within the memory of many, it was a vital force in the world's theatre. There were a dozen or so companies on New York's East Side and an equal number spread throughout the U.S. Many of its stars made international impact, and quite a few created legendary international careers. Where has it all gone?

Why is there no permanent Yiddish theatre in the U.S.? Or in Israel? It is difficult to put one's finger on an exact answer. The nearest one can come to it is that the Jew in every country tends to be a citizen of that country; culturally he is tied to that country—with Yiddish as a second language. If at all. Second and third generations don't use the language at all, or rarely, and have no sentimental ties with it. This is true even in Israel, where Hebrew is the official language, not Yiddish.

The Anderson Theatre on New York's 2d Ave. is returning to Yiddish theatre this year, after being the home, for several years, of the Phoenix group. This house was the home of the Maurice Schwartz troupe—the Yiddish Art Theatre, the last try at a permanent American Yiddish company. The late Maurice Schwartz was a fine actor, a great director, and a stirring personality. He tried Hollywood a couple of times and once had a longterm MGM contract, which he tore up because he preferred to "stay with my own." The march of time and economics chased him from New York but he kept his valiant little troupe battling around the world until the very end, a couple of years ago.

Molly Picon

It is good, too, to note that Molly Picon is on Broadway, in a major musical. She is one of Second Avenue's brightest contributions to show biz. She was born and brought up on Second Avenue; she was appearing in shows, singing and dancing in Yiddish, at the age of eight or nine. This explains, partially, why she has been able to make an undentable impress on Broadway and the West End. It was largely her performance that made possible a long run for a so-so play in London a year ago. She is bilingual, as comfortable in Yiddish as in English. Many other great stars of the Yiddish theatre could not move "uptown" comfortably because they were hampered by language.

Even so, it is startling to realize how many Yiddish theatre actors (by which is meant bona fide graduates of Yiddish language theatre) have been seen on Broadway or in Hollywood. The most important picture names who fall into this category are probably Paul Muni, Edward G. Robinson and Jules Dassin. There were many others, of course, who came a-visiting but didn't stay. Or didn't impress.

Jennie Goldstein

The recent death of Jennie Goldstein robbed the Broadway stage of one of its most accomplished actresses (remember her in Tennessee Williams' "Camino Real?") at the same time as it robbed the Yiddish theatre of its greatest living dramatic actress. Celia Adler has played both sides of the street successfully, though other members of the fabulous Adler family—Stella Adler, Luther Adler, Francine Larrimore, et al., were strictly Broadway. Annette Margulies came from Second Avenue to be the toast of the town as Tondeleyo in "White Cargo." She still plays an occasional bit role on Broadway. Menasha Skulnik has made a couple of successful forays into the Broadway theatre. Anna Appel has played in quite a number of English language plays. Joseph Buloff could have been a star in any theatre of the world because of his innate talent and imagination, but has been restricted by his heavily accented English to comic or character roles on Broadway or in television—in both of which fields he is frequently present, when not taking bows during forays to the Yiddish theatre, where he is appreciated as a great dramatic actor. Leo Fuchs (current on Second Ave.) is another Yiddish theatre star who makes frequent excursions into English-language theatre, films and niteries.

One of London's most popular character actors at the moment is Meier Tselmicker, who first came to attention as head of London's Yiddish Art Theatre, a group which disappeared along about 1950, though it was aided by the British Arts Council.

There are still alumni of the Yiddish theatre in almost all the English-language showshops. Importantly. But the days of Jacob P. Adler, Bertha Kalisch, Yanker Kalich (Molly Picon's husband and a fine actor but no relation of Bertha), Ludwig Satz, Boris Thomashefsky, Aaron Lebedoff (the "perpetual juvenile"), Max Gabel, Rudolph Schildkraut (his son, Joseph didn't do so bad on Broadway, either), David Kessler, Samuel Goldenberg, Miguelesco, Yablakoff, Maurice Moscovitch are gone.

But turn on the radio and you may hear a song written a couple of decades ago for a Second Avenue musical comedy by Sholom Secunda — "Bei Mir Bist du Schoen."

Wha' Happened?

A trade news story, June 10, 1922, was specific along the lines that New York was to have a "New Municipal Opera House For 59th St.", according to the headlines. The story:

"New York will be the home of one more beautiful opera house. Work will be started at once on the erection of three buildings by New York City, one of which will be an opera house, another will house the musical and dramatic arts and conservatory of music, and the third will be donated (sic) to the plastic art.

"The proposed location is at 59th Street, south to 7th Ave. The City will furnish the land and the cost of construction will be at least $15,000,000."

(That site sounds like what became of the Jolson Theatre, recently the Videotape Centre. It also sounds like a forerunner for today's much more realistic Lincoln Center redevelopment which is in actual construction for 1963-64 debut. —Ed.).

On Being First To Sing the Role

By DOROTHY COULTER

On April 10, 1961, when I made my debut at the Metropolitan Opera in "La Boheme," it was that well-known dream come true. For although I had previously sung in musical comedy roles at the Kansas City Starlight Theatre and other houses, I had always set my sights on grand opera and had worked constantly toward this objective.

My great worry in my "Boheme" debut, as well as in my performances in other classical operas I've since done at the Met, was that other singers have played the particular role before. Operagoers fondly remember, as they should, the great singers of the past who have made a particular role a famous one. People come to the performance of a standard opera with cherished memories. Thus it is by no means an easy task for a new artist to create a fresh and valid impact.

There is an entirely different sort of a challenge confronting the artist who is given the rare opportunity of portraying a new role for the very first time. In 1958 I was given just such a pioneering opportunity when I sang the title role in Menotti's "Maria Golovin" at the Brussels World Fair where the work received its world premiere. And more recently, on Oct. 12, 1961, I was able (by special arrangement with the Met) to portray the role of Milly Theale in the N.Y. City Opera's world premiere of Douglas Moore's "The Wings of the Dove," at the City Center.

In this tragic opera based on the early Henry James novel of the same name, I played the young, rich, ill-fated heroine. It was a most exhilarating experience to be the first person to step into the role. As in the case of the Menotti work, I did not have to worry that somebody else was identified with the role! Consequently, within bounds of the text, I was able to interpret Milly Theale with tremendous freedom.

I am a staunch advocate of more opera in English, whether through new works such as the above-mentioned or through suitable translations of standard works. I am of the opinion that if we did more operas in English our audiences would be considerably broadened.

In "The Wings of the Dove" there is a most perfect wedding of Ethan Ayer's libretto and Douglas Moore's music. And in approaching the role of the charming but doomed Milly I was acutely conscious of the great value of pronunciation as a major aid in getting across my character conception of the turn-of-the-century Henry James heroine—to establish her innate gentility without traces of artificiality.

Pronunciation

There is such a thing in singing as over-pronunciation. The greater sin, however, is faulty pronunciation.

I have noticed that often enough foreign-born persons sing English more perfectly than Americans. When an American singer is to perform a role in Italian or French he studies the pronunciation of each syllable with the greatest of care, and when the foreign-born singer is learning an English role he does the same thing.

I contend that English is inherently singable in opera and that it is not more difficult to sing than other languages. But alas, it is often sung in a manner which leaves much to be desired by an audience. This is because the American artist frequently feels that speaking the language is sufficient unto the task. Singing in English means hearing in English, and many Americans have formed the habit of talking carelessly in daily speech. A singer should cultivate the art of listening to himself, for then, and only then, will he learn to hear in his mind what he wants to sound like before it is sung. By learning to listen to himself, he will learn to correct himself. The instrumentalist spends much time in learning to do this, and so should the singer.

Needless to say, in approaching the role of Milly Theale in "Dove," I read and re-read the Henry James novel and also, of course, Nathan Ayers' libretto which so ably captured the basic framework of the story about a betrayed heiress doomed to die.

The character of Milly is one that strikes alternate notes of ecstasy and pathos, and she is possessed by physical weakness, with a tendency to faint and take to bed. My great objective in approaching this role was to make it a convincing one. In doing so I was greatly helped by the eminently workable script, the sustained emotional tension of the score, and the natural melodic lines of conversation.

The critics hailed "Dove." It was called, by one, the "best U.S. opera," and another said, "American opera has come of age." Assuredly it will be given new performances, and I will be most anxious to view these—to see how someone else will play the role I had the very good fortune to debut. And I wonder how the critics, in their reviews, will compare a new Milly with the first Milly . . . me!

How To Go On The Stage

[Circa 1910]

By SAM STARK

San Francisco.

Recently I became fascinated with several "How to Go On the Stage" booklets that have been gathering dust on my bookshelves. I realize now that the theatre would be as dead as vaudeville had aspiring actors taken these books seriously.

In my youth I had assiduously mailed away stamps or coins for the jokebooks, minstrel guides, "Madison's Budgets" and laugh skits that were advertised for those wanting to go on the stage. One that I have before me that cost a quarter opens with the paragraph:

"To go on the stage it is best to enter through the stagedoor, which is usually located at the rear of the theatre, hall or auditorium. You will be met there by an attendant or stage doorman and you should be affable and courteous in expressing your business to him. Other methods of going upon the stage are by way of the stairways which rise from the audience floor, on each side of the orchestra pit and to the sides of the proscenium. In some theatres entry may be had by way of a small door that opens from a stage box."

This pertinent information was followed by a page of "Valuable Dictionary of Stage Terms." Definitions were given for tormentors, battens, ginger (to perform in a lively manner), stage screw-eyes, olio, footlights, ad lib, etc. I'll bet you didn't know that ad lib meant "at discretion."

An additional chapter carried several pages on "How to Produce Stage Effects" with sub-paragraphs on colored fires, thunder, lightning, wood crash, horse, wind and rain.

"Red fire is produced with 8 ounces of strontia, 4 ounces of potash, 2 ounces of shellac and 1 ounce of lycopodium. These fires are burned on an ordinary coal shovel or pan and can be ignited by a quick match, or a cotton cord soaked in oil, if a quick match cannot be obtained. Hold the pan over the head (honestly it says that) as the fire is burning; this will illumine the surroundings much better."

I was never able to try this pyrotechnic display because, although my family did not put their united feet down, the druggist absolutely refused to sell me any of the ingredients. In fact, he could have won an acting award with the expression on his face when I told him to what use I intended those chemicals. That he was a spoil-sport might have been influenced by the proximity of our house to his drugstore.

I like the method given for obtaining a "wood crash" which reads: "Numerous bits of old lumber thrown violently will produce a wood crash." (Don't forget I paid a quarter for this booklet).

Stage Don'ts

Another handy little pamphlet I have before me lists "Stage Don'ts." Here are a few of them: "1) Don't cross your legs in the first part." (2) Don't make visible efforts to recognize your friends out front. (3) Don't pull out your watch (if you have one) to note the length of time. That will be regulated by the stage manager. (4) Don't leave the stage unless it is your duty or necessary to do so. (5) Don't expectorate upon the stage, gentlemen, during performance. Carry 'kerchiefs for that purpose. (6) Don't turn around and giggle if anybody makes a mistake or a string breaks on an instrument. You wouldn't like to be laughed at in public, would you? (7) Don't monopolize all the hooks, nails and space in the dressing rooms. (8) Lastly, always know your part perfectly. If you are a gentleman this is particularly important as a gent cannot have his lines written on a fan as quite a few of the lady performers are doing."

I am intrigued with the definition given for Straight Business: "This is a part wherein the genteel character 'feeds' the comedy, and it is generally the educated man enlightening the ignorant intruder or companion in the sketch or farce. The genteel character is also known as the 'walking gentleman' of the dramatic stage. Needless to say, in a male and female act there is never a 'walking gentleman' as no lady should be made the butt of comedy or crude remarks." (Is George Burns listening?).

One of the booklets concludes with about 200 songs to be sung on occasion. Most of them are long forgotten but one fascinating title is "Back Side of Albany Stands Lake Champlain."

The word "proscenium" spelled pure theatre to the amateur and it was used as often as possible to impress those not in the know. I recall during a rehearsal for Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks, that was taking place in a church basement, on a square platform resembling a boxing ring, hearing a director yell, "What are you doing on the proscenium?" This quickly restored order out of what had been chaos.

In one of the books telling how to go on the stage the author evidently ran out of ideas and threw in a few chapters on the circus, one of which was titled, "Developing and Managing a Freak Show." The word "Developing" was a misnomer as the neophyte was not told of any market where the freaks listed could be obtained. Perhaps the author assumed that anyone foolish enough to pay a dollar for his book might by chance have been born into a family of freaks.

There were various suggestions offered for "Rube" tents with a sign over the entrance marked, "For Men Only," but it was left to the imagination of the amateur as to what startling display would be seen on entering such midway attraction.

An idea that I liked was for a tent, outside of which hung a sign reading, "See the horse with his tail where his head ought to be." After buying a ticket and entering the customer would be shown a horse placed in a stall backwards. Research might prove that the circus riot call, "Hey Rube," originated when this hoax was pulled on the public.

These comedy classics have enjoyed encores for 43 of Variety's 57 years. We feel proud and privileged to bring them back for more bows.

estate) diving for greased watermelons. There was also a barker yelling out "Step this way folks and have yer picture took by the Miracle TinType Co." Over a thousand prizes that year . . . everything from a suit by Earl Benham to a 10 pound box of lollypops donated by Jimmy Savo.

'Don't Hurry He!'

This is a long preface to my baseball story, but long prefaces are not unknown at the Lambs. The point is I had been captain of one of the baseball teams (the big day always ended with a game) in 1944 and was repeating in 1945 but worried about a pitcher because my former pitcher, Roy Roberts, was now the rival team captain. It's typical of being a Lambs Clubber that instead of worrying about being out of work nothing occupied my thought but who I could line up to pitch.

A young fellow came over to me and said "I'm Jimmy Wilkinson, a new member and I've been anxious to meet you I hear you're the Pool Champ of the Lambs." We shook hands and I said "yes I am but that was kind of an accident all the good pool players were away working when I won the tournament." He laughed and said he'd like to play me a game, I said "O.K." I broke the balls and he ran 45 on me. I said, "Boy, you're a whiz. If I only had a guy that could pitch the way you play pool, I'd be set." He asked me what I wanted a pitcher for and I told him about the Wash coming up and Roy Roberts being so good. He said, "well your troubles are over. I'm your pitcher." I said, "can you pitch?" He said, "way better than I play pool. I pitched in the Eastern League." I said, "If this isn't a rib you're my man." Well, I tried him out and it was no rib . . . he was sensational.

We were on the train going to Islip. I was sitting with Joe Laurie Jr. and Jack Norworth telling them about the new member that I had discovered was a great pitcher. I told 'em I was going to pick only three men for my team: pitcher, catcher, and I said to Joe "I'm putting you in center field and you just sit there in a rocking chair." Joe said, "that will be funny alright but if they get a hard bunt down the first or third base line it would be a home run. Norworth said he was for it. It would be a load of laughs. Roberts came over and said "let's choose our teams." I picked Jimmy Wilkinson. Roberts chose Jack Whiting. I took Jack Smart for my catcher. Roberts said I'll take Mercer Templeton. I said, "Laurie will be my Center Fielder and that's all the team I want."

Well it was quite a laugh later on when my team took the field with only three players. Laurie sat behind Second in the rocker with his big cigar steaming. First he and Jack Norworth sang a a chorus of "Take Me Out To The Ballgame" with German Band accompaniment . . . the whole crowd joined in. Not good but loud. Then Norworth cried "play ball."

Senator Ford umpired behind the plate, Harry Hershfield was on first, Bobby Clark on second and Al Schacht on third. Well, this Jimmy Wilkinson was a real pro. Trio took their positions and after every inning I would go out to Laurie and hold a conversation with him. Then send him out deeper into center field. Nobody could touch Wilkinson. Not even a foul ball. In the third inning Laurie called for time and came in from deep center to talk to me. I switched him to first on a hunch Roberts would bunt. Wilkinson threw a few hot ones for practice and Laurie took off his glove and blew on his hands.

Roberts worked Wilkinson to a three and two count. The pay off pitch he blazed straight down the middle. Roberts snapped it to Laurie and Roy was out by 20 feet. What a laugh. Laurie then left the mitt on first base and trotted out to his rocking chair in center field. Al Schacht was lying on third base. In the fourth inning, Laurie played seven positions. Between pitches he would run to third base, then to left field, then to short stop. What a sight he was with his big cigar and seven gloves tied on his rocking chair which he would bring along with him.

As the fifth inning started my team was ahead one to nothing. One run came on a homer by pitcher Wilkinson. He hit it way out in the bay. By now I had Laurie so far out you could hardly see him. He ended out of sight in the corn field.

William Faversham

Like I said, we're sentimental about the old days and the big laughs (for us). The clowning gained in humor naturally because these were pros. The Actors Home was the ideal setting. In the evening we always put on an impromptu frolic for the guests there, all of us using our best-rehearsed ad libs.

One memory stands forth, that of William Faversham. I don't suppose the modern generation can imagine what a matinee idol he had been, how many money he had made, and thrown away. He was living then at the Williams estate and he made a little speech that had us all in the misty-eyed condition which, I suppose, easily follows horseplay.

Picture this once-great Broadway and screen star rising to speak to the Lambs Wash crowd with all his elegance, elocution and polish, recalling the vagaries of show business and his financial shipwreck. He spoke with delightful irony of foolish investments, misplaced confidences, false friends along the way and of thinking he was going down for the final count when the Actors Fund rescued him. It was a trailer seldom equalled for the Fund and the Home and as convincing a reading of genuine gratitude as you'll ever hear.

We gave Faversham a standing ovation, while the German band provided oompa-oompa. It may have been his final one. It must have been one of his best. We then staggered onto our special train headed back to the Pennsy Station. And I hope you get the idea now—why I say we're sentimental, nostalgic and, perhaps, a bit long-winded.

OBITUARIES

CARLO DE ANGELO

Carlo De Angelo, 66, actor and oldtime radio director, died Jan. 2 in Cornwall, N.Y., of a heart attack. For the past 10 years he had been producer-director of the "Ave Maria Hour," a religioso program on behalf of the Graymoor Friars, Garrison, N.Y.

On Broadway he appeared in the revival of "The Bells" in 1926 and "Ringside" in 1928. In 1956 he was seen in "The Best House in Naples," and in 1957 he staged "Run Thief Run." He directed early Buck Rogers and Perry Mason radio series as well as "The Gibson Family," Eno Crime Clues" and Jack Benny in his first radio show in 1932.

Surviving are his wife and two sons.

FLORENCE T. MALEY

Florence T. Maley, 90, former soprano, concert singer and voice teacher, died Jan. 2 in Point Pleasant, N.J. She was the widow of Stephen Maley, a legit character actor. She was injured when struck by a car in New York Nov. 2.

She studied voice and piano in Paris and London. She later sang at the old Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Temple Emanuel and at the Brick Presbyterian Church, all in New York.

She debuted at Carnegie Hall, later singing with the old New York Symphony, the Musical Arts Society, the Mendelssohn Glee Club, the Cincinnati Orchestra and the Arion Society. She also composed several concert songs.

Comics—Like Firms—Need 'Image'

wwww-ell, and the arched eyebrow; the look of umbrage, the slight swishiness, and . . . But nothing more is needed, for it is all there—the image of Benny.

There are so many who, unfortunately do not own it but we shall dispense with naming them. Instead, we shall think of, besides Berle and Durante and Benny, the likes of Gleason as Ralph Kramden; and Phil Silvers as Bilko; Skelton as a handful of hams; and, naturally, Joe E. Lewis, who could say, after seeing "My Fair Lady," "I don't care what anybody says—I liked it," which everything considered, is as deft a one-liner as Hermione Gingold's dismissal of Elsa Maxwell with, "Just another pretty face."

Folk Frivolity

These people, having established their images, are part of our frivolous folklore. As for certain others of imposing credentials—well, a fussy critic can take them or leave them. Didn't Samuel Johnson hate immersion? I, for example, am as bored by so-and-so as I am delighted by, say, Irwin Corey and Jackie Miles, both of whom make me laugh, which is what, after all, I ask of a funny man. As for favoring any school of humor, those who enjoy Berle are also amused by Mort Sahl—as unlike as they are.

Sahl is of the so-called new school — leisurely, gently-barbed, an I intellectual. His observations are often out of Jung rather than Joe Miller, a source not untapped by Berle. In both cases, however, what endows them with their appeal is the almost surgical skill with which they fashion their material to their own particular styles. Of itself, of course, not untapped no moment. Only what a creative artist—be he comedian, writer, sculptor, or what-not—does not it is of any importance. Thus, the charge that Berle appropriates his colleagues' jokes is, even if proved in a court of law, irrelevant.

Is "Hamlet" any less a masterpiece because its plot originated with a 12th century Danish chronicler named Saxo Grammaticus? Or Chaucer's "Monk's Tale" to be dismissed because Boccaccio utilized the story earlier in "De Casibus Virorum Illustrium"? Is "Butterfield 8" inferior because there once lived and died a girl named Starr Faithful? Or, for that matter, is any roman a clef spurious merely by vice of its being a roman a clef? Is Hemingway to be rated less highly because his style had its seeds in Sherwood Anderson? Shakespeare, Chaucer, O'Hara, Hemingway, and, if you will, Milton Berle, too, have all been more masterly than their material. Indeed, a case could be made that Mort Sahl would have to close up shop if suddenly there were no more news. Certainly, one of his most memorable one-liners would never have been possible had there been no problem in Little Rock. "Orville Faubus, is a nice enough fellow," said Sahl, "but I wouldn't want my sister to marry him." And if Adlai Stevenson had not made something of a career of running for the Presidency, could Sahl have remarked, "Some Democrats feel he could be elected, except he can't get nominated." Or, without an H-Bomb, could Sahl caution, "There's no appreciable increase in radioactivity, but don't plan a large family."

The mere fact of Sahl's employing a new approach to the tools of his trade is no indication of a superiority to Berle. Each, after his own fashion, is magnificent. Berle is funny, Sahl humorous; the one campy, the other cerebral; Berle fairly ancient, Sahl a mere apprentice; and so on. The difference — the chief difference—is that Berle has withstood the withering of the years.

So far, which amounts to something less than 10 years, Sahl, for his part, has done marvelously well. But a decade is but a day, at least in terms of a career. The people who somehow suffused their short spells with splendor, with a tiny but far from trivial body of work —the Thomas Chattertons, the Bix Beiderbeckes—are almost negligibly few. Only a handful—Hank Williams, dead of drugs but nevertheless very much alive, and for all time, in his country music; Sam Cobean, the life crushed out of him in his twisted Jaguar, but the life of him still living in the grace and wit of his cartoons in old New Yorkers; Brooks Bowman, scarcely out of Princeton and six feet in the ground, but haunting every generation ever to come with the plaintiveness of his "East of the Sun"—are immortal. They achieved permanence. So as gifted as he is, and he is abundantly gifted, Mort Sahl has a long way to go in point of time before he can assume a place in the annals of American humor. Moreover, he will forever be tried by his topicality. Punctuality does not always make for posthumousness. For with every tomorrow, today's is suddenly yesterday's paper.

But, be it said, over the years what makes people laugh has not changed so very much. William Shakespeare was a nimbler punster than, say, Peter DeVries. Thus, it is no new vogue—as some people believe—for comedians to make phonograph records. Moran & Mack, "The Two Black Crows," were doing so some 40 years ago. Nor is there anything so radical about Shelley Berman's employing the telephone to engender mirth. Not only "Cohen on the Telephone," but George Jessel, too, got there ahead of him. But you couldn't care less. What matters is the measure of the mirth a man inspires.

Lecture Circuit

chairman that I wonder if I can get there at all.

These are the times when I wish not only that I had Mark Twain's wit but his schedule as well. You see, all is not chicken and green peas on the lecture circuit any more than it is all brisket and mashed potatoes.

Right in the centre of the hard core is the bane of all lecturers: the three speeches for the price of one. Three gardenia-ed ladies meet me as I deplane. They are the welcoming reception, euphmistically so-called. This welcoming reception is so small that, as I approach my hostess' house, I spy two policemen directing the cars.

This is speech 1. Speech 2 is the speech I am paid to deliver, after the banquet. I have no objections to speech 2. But it is speech 3 that sometimes gets me down. Halfway through the dessert one of the fellows sitting with me on the dais conspiratorially tugs my sleeve and in muted whispers, as though he were passing top secret stuff, tells me there is a little gathering to which I am invited to meet "a few important people of the community."

By the time I reach this little gathering I realize those two cops directing traffic are getting as tired as I am.

Speech 3. After which comes the pity and commiseration. The folks begin telling me I shouldn't work so hard, that I ought to take it easy and relax. What they mean is relax tomorrow night at the other guy's shindig, not tonight at theirs.

Every occupation has its occupational hazards. There are such things as bunny stuffer's lungs and welder's warts. As there are hazards so are there joys. The welder puts things together, let's say, and the bunny stuffer makes children happy at Christmas. And I get to address a sea of contented faces and to tell the folks what I think while they spend all the time digesting the brisket or the chicken, whichever the case may be.

A Sad Ending For D. W.

ard Barthelmess, Monte Blue, Charles Chaplin, Cecil B. De Mille, Sid Grauman, Jean Hersholt, Walter Huston, Jesse L. Lasky, Louis B. Mayer, Hal Roach, Mack Sennett and Adolph Zukor.

Lionel Barrymore, in speaking to one of the other mourners, gave the most personal touch. He said, "A gold monument should be erected at the corner of Vine Street and Hollywood Boulevard to D. W. Griffith, Hollywood's greatest."

The body was flown back to Kentucky and taken to Mount Tabor Cemetery and there he was buried within two miles of where he had been born.

Two years later Hollywood wanted to express its memory a little more feelingly than it had done, so through the efforts of the Screen Directors Guild the body was taken up and moved about 200 feet to a new grave where a stone was set in place over the grave, with a symbol at each end of the Screen Directors Guild. Three of his stars loved him enough to come. They were Mary Pickford, Lillian Gish, and Richard Barthelmess; also present was Al Rogell representing the Guild. His widow, Evelyn Griffith, was also there. Fence rails were taken from the old farm and placed around the grave; and there they are today, very fitting and appropriate.

On top of the gravestone is carved:

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH
Born Crestwood, Kentucky,
January 22, 1875
Died Hollywood, California,
July 23, 1948

As I write, two immediate members of his family still live, and I again want to thank them for the great help they've been to me. His brother Albert L. Griffith lives at 325 West Avenue, Medina, New York. His widow, Mrs. Evelyn M. B. Griffith, lives at 535 East 14th Street, New York. He has six relatives living in Oldham and Jefferson counties, Kentucky, and he has eight relatives living in or near Los Angeles.

The inventory shows that he left a gross estate of $25,039.97. There were many bills which he had run up the last few months. He mentioned 10 people in his will, all relatives; the money that was left was divided among them.

As I finish this story, I think to myself: What will be his place in history? Will he continue to be the Forgotten Man of the entertain industry? Will greater figures appear and stalk across the entertainment stage? I doubt it. And, some way or other, I hope there won't. He came at the very birth of a new and mighty art! It can almost be said that he made an art.

There is something touching and poignant about a man who yearns to do something and fails—and then, in a kind of I'll-show-you way, makes a commanding success of something he secretly looks down on. It has, it seems to me, the element of the Greek theory of drama: that every man has within him seeds that make him and seeds that destroy him—sometimes the same seeds.

26th St. Way Uptown

I did not altogether evade the theatre. I joined Alice Minnie Herts' Children's Theatre in the Educational Alliance and played in "Little Lord Fountleroy" and in "The Prince and the Pauper." My father equated an actor with a bum. As long as I stuck to the Educational Alliance, I managed to get away with it, but once I hooked up with some Hindu players who were doing a season in the old Madison Square Garden and that ended my theatrical career. My father could not understand what a Hindu was, and [the old] Madison Square Garden was on 26th St., way up town. Who could tell what would happen to a boy uptown?

Irving Berlin was also a cantor's son. I did not know him back in those days. He must have lived in another neighborhood. Besides, he must have come a little later because Herbert Swope always claimed that he found Irving in Nigger Mike's. But back in the days I am talking about, we did not know anything about a Herbert Swope. We knew the name of Arthur Brisbane who wrote Hearst's editorials against the trusts.

We all hated the trusts, although truly it made very little difference to us if there was a trust or not. Nobody had any money and a cent more or less for ice or for coal made little difference. Only the rich can save pennies; the poor have nothing to save.

The theatre was the beginning of professionalism. A fellow who could not sing or dance or tell a story in dialect or make an audience laugh or cry could only become a pants presser, a millinery salesman, or a salami cutter. It cost money to learn to be a doctor or a lawyer, but if God gave one a gift for the theatre, who needed money?

Cradle of the Movies

And many of these children of immigrants were gifted and became stars on Broadway. Or they went into the business side of the theatre and eventually into the movies. I remember the Penny Arcade on 14th St. which was the forerunner of the movie industry. I think it was run by William Fox who came out of one of the garment industries or furs or something like that.

Movies were made at Fort Lee, N.J., on the other side of the Hudson River, from 125th Street. We all used to go there to get $5 as an extra and some stayed. It cost a nickle to see a movie and those who charged a nickle became millionaires which is more than can be said about those who are today charging $1 or even more to get into a movie house.

And we loved the old silent pictures. It was the first chance kids had to go to the theatre and sit in the dark without their parents telling them to be quiet. Kids went to movies to laugh. There was enough trouble at home without paying a nickle to watch some more. Of course, Pauline White and Theda Bara were not exactly for laughter but then they were different from anybody we knew. They aroused our imaginations. Pauline White was a heroine who was always being chased by villains. This was as good if not better than the shows on the Bowery where the hero always saved the girl from a life worse than death. We used to get tired of some of those plays because when the villain came to collect the mortgage money, he had us way out in left field. We had no mortgages; we paid rent. And if we failed to pay rent, the landlord put our furniture on the sidewalk and everybody cried until the Tammany politician came around with the rent money.

We did not need to go to a theatre to learn about the tragedies of life. We knew tragedies everyday. But in the movies, it was possible to laugh, to laugh even at the cops. That was truly something. And when Charlie Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, and their ilk came upon the scene the movies became a ritual in every child's life. Then, as now, reformers complained that movies were vulgar, but we were vulgar—so the movies were real life.

Art & Commerce

New York Film Critics, in their annual "best" vote, just about utterly neglected Carl Foreman's "Guns of Navarone," Columbia release. This is the production that registered the most amount of money in VARIETY's annual tabulation.

However, the Gotham scribes voted "West Side Story" the tops and this is not included in the VARIETY list because the United Artists release is not yet in sufficient circulation to provide the basis for a boxoffice forecast.

LAS VEGAS: LIKE BROADWAY

Gleason & Partners in Unique Setup With Touring TV Shows

Jackie Gleason and some partners have started a new enterprise called Circuit-Television Productions to tour major television shows from city to city across the country. Touring tv stanzas has never been done before, certainly never on a regular basis.

Gleason, who is not going to appear in any of the video shows, is teamed up with Jack Philbin and David Gordon's Carlton-International Ltd. Gordon calls it a "new industry."

Plan is to produce "network calibre" tv specials for given major advertisers who'll purchase prime time layouts in each city and then actually move the stanza from market to market and show it live. William Morris is repping the deal, which shapes up as directly competitive to network prime time offerings.

Each advertiser, according to Gordon, gets a different production and each production will be tied to an advance three-month promotion warmup before airtime. Show will be put on in various markets at the rate of three a week, allowing time between for cast and production crew to knock down, ship and rehearse in new surroundings.

Some portions of the tv "road show" will be taped, although the touring unit will consist of full orch, staff and the name talent to be used. Purpose for keeping much

Jay Robinson Comeback; Exoneration Unstressed

Miami, Jan. 16.

Ruth Foreman at Studio M here in Miami is starring Jay Robinson in "Caligula" and plans later to use him again in a new, untitled play of Richard Llewellyn who wrote "How Green Was My Valley." Dramatist is in Florida polishing the script.

Robinson has been a hard-luck case for some time. Some years ago he appeared in a number of abortive plays on Broadway, financed with family wealth, and then went on to attract trade notice as the mad emperor in "The Robe," which inaugurated the CinemaScope era. Afterwards: grief.

Arrested in Los Angeles on a narcotics rap from which he ultimately was exonerated in a 62-page decision of 1959 censuring the conduct of the original trial, the legal exoneration news got scant notice in the press and the first rap stopped his California career cold. His father had dropped dead at the time of his conviction and his mother gone to a sanitorium.

Having crowded some pretty weird experiences into his life, the 31-year old actor has since married and has a small son. He hopes gradually to rehabilitate his career.

PHONY STOCKBROKERS

'Babes In Wall Street' To Roll as Feature

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Plans are underway to expand "Babes in Wall Street" segment of "Target: the Corruptors" into a full length feature, it was revealed by Leonard Ackerman, who would coproduce picture with John Burrows. Pair now coproduce "Corruptors" series, for which seg is now filming.

Feature would be same package as the episode, with Harry Guardino and Barbara Eden starring and William Conrad expected to remain as director. Harry Essex would expand his own screenplay.

Picture would start shooting in the spring, Segment being filmed for mid-March release. It deals with phony stock brokers.

Tea at 25c Means Little Cafe Life For Hong Kong

By ERNIE PEREIRA

Hong Kong, Jan. 16.

Hong Kong has been called many things—a refugee city, a vice capitol, one of the world's most picturesque tourist places, a developing textile center bidding for world markets. But from the entertainment side, this Colony, with a bulging population, is sadly lacking in live entertainment, notwithstanding the efforts being made by Rediffusion TV to introduce more locally-produced live shows on its sole channel for a bi-lingual (Can-

PLOT MUSICAL COMEDY REGIME

By JOE COHEN

Las Vegas, Jan. 16.

The Las Vegas nitery managements are now thinking along what can be designated revolutionary lines. The current success of "The Flower Drum Song" at the Thunderbird is veering operators into new thought patterns. This show, which has thoroughly revitalized a moribund hotel into record-breaking business, is now sold out for its dinner shows beyond February, and on the basis of its early acceptance has been booked for a minimum of 32 weeks. Spot is contemplating other Rodgers & Hammerstein productions.

The Thunderbird is now considering building a theatre (sans tables) with a regular proscenium arch and theatre seats in which musicals and dramas will be shown as originally presented. It is now going after other R&H layouts and is presently negotiating for "Carousel" and "South Pacific." In addition, it is looking about for others which include "Pal Joey" and others considered to be the top of the Broadway crop.

The extreme optimism is based

Asks Capital Gain

Washington, Jan. 16.

Another attempt to secure capital gain coverage for literary works, now orphans to oil and gas, has been made. Rep. John V. Lindsay (R-NY) has introduced legislation which would help writers, composers and dramatists, if enacted.

He made the charge that talent was being discriminated against. A patent holder got what a copyright holder was denied!

1962 Looms Big In Tax Reform; Americans Slaves of Auditing

By J. S. SEIDMAN, CPA
(Seidman & Seidman)

In "Kwamina," with a background of an emerging new African nation, Dick Adler wrote a stirring freedom song where the lyrics start with a choral chant that "something big is going to happen, and it's going to happen this year." Let's now shift scenes from Africa to Washington, and make the background an emerging new tax law. The chorus can chant the same lyrics: "Something big is going to happen, and it's going to happen this year." It sure is high time. There's obviously something dead wrong in a setup where taxes instead of commonsense run our personal, business, and professional lives. Just look at what we have permitted our tax laws to do to us.

Taxes rather than good judgment are in the driver's seat in deciding for us what we do with our time and money while we're around, and what we say in our wills for the hereafter. Taxes play a significant role in determining whether we work, when, where, and how much we work.

Taxes even enter into such intimate, personal matters as whether we marry, when we marry —and how we unmarry.

The stock market is steeped in taxes. The securities we buy, how long we hold, and where we sell, are frequently dictated by taxes.

In business, taxes and not the market place are kingpin. Taxes rule the roost in determining whether we do business on our

ALLITERATIVE B TROUBLES

'Bosoms, Bellies and Bottoms' Draws Another B-Ban

Baltimore, Jan. 16.

An ad for "Eve and the Handyman" showing at the Rex, sometime art house, ran only one edition of the Evening Sun before it was yanked never to return.

Ad featured pressbook review of film by Buddy Harak saying it was a "bust. At least you see plenty of 'em in this 'sexovision' item."

It added that film was "definitely a "Three B' film (bosoms, bellies and bottoms) of peep show variety."

Ronald Freedman, manager of the Rex, was told Sun would not run any more ads for "Eve." When he changes bills, he gets back on the page.

A 10%-10½% slice of the gross on "Leonard Sillman's New Faces of 1962" will be split among the authors of the revue, Sillman and Frank Productions Inc. Sillman, general partner in the limited partnership setup for the Carroll and Harris Masterson presentation of "New Faces," is in for 3½% of the gross on the venture.

As overall director of the production, which is currently playing a pre-Broadway tryout tour, Sillman gets a $5,000 fee, plus 2% of the gross. In addi-

Ethel Griffies on Stage 81 Years Next Feb. 28

Ethel Griffies, costar of "Write Me a Murder," at the Belasco Theatre, N. Y., corrects an item in a story in the Anniversary Issue about longrun shows and lengthy personal careers in legit. The piece said that the British actress made her last appearance in the U. S. in a revival of "The Royal Family" in 1951, bringing her stage career to 70 years.

Miss Griffies points out that she came back from England in 1954 to tour with Ruth Gordon in "The Matchmaker." She will mark her 81st anniversary on the stage Feb. 28, having made her debut on that date in 1881 in the moppet role of Willie Carlyle in "East Lynn," at Whitehaven, Cumberland, England.

The actress will be 84 next April 26.

If World To Save Egypt's Antiquities, See Nubian Art-Flood Film Needed

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Because of Egypt's bad relations with the United States, and secondarily with the Hollywood film colony, a desperately-needed feature film dealing with the flood-threatened art treasures of the 300-mile Nubian strip of the Nile River may never be made. There are diplomats, archeologists and showmen who feel that the present world appeal for funds to rescue the priceless antiquities against the waters of the new high Aswan dam is not making appreciable impact upon world opinion. Partly this is a failure of communication. The opinion grows that what is lacking is a screen "epic."

Egypt, of course, has a film industry of its own which turns out a fair number of features for Arab markets. It is doubted that the Cairo producers have either the finances or the know-how to make the great Nile drama which is called for. A tie-up with Italy has been mentioned as a possibility. France, too, is close to Egyptian excavation projects.

Only about five to six years remain before the great art-and-temple strewn area of central Egypt is to become a vast lake which will make much of the Sahara flower like California's Imperial Valley, beside creating vast electrical power. The Aswan story promises to be one of the stupendous engineering feats of all time but meanwhile at a ghastly cost in statues, temples, crypts, and so on unless some $30,000,000 can be raised to cut away the sandstone blocks and move them to

Sharp Decline in Yank Tourist Trade, From Alltime Peak of 1960, Hurts European Show Biz at B.O.

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Jan. 16.

Past year's vanishing American was a serious problem for Europe's nightclub, pub, restaurant and hotel owners. And the European airlines and fest promoters were likewise crying the blues at the serious dropoff of American tourists overseas.

Hotels which formerly were jammed for the luxury trade, nightclubs and bistros that catered to the wallet-fattened Stateside traffic, and even the so-called dives, that counted on American sightseers to poke around, felt the pinch.

At the Salzburg Music Fest, tickets that used to go for double price with the scalpers went begging for the opening night performance. At Munich, the top hotel the Vier Jahreszeiten reported bookings of Yanks were only about half of what they were in 1960, and that the class of Americans coming over was much lower, with decidedly decimated spending power.

In Germany alone, the first seven months of the year showed that the U.S. tourists were about 20% fewer than in the same period last year, according to word from the German Central Tourist Assn. While there were 207,500 Americans counted in May 1960, this year's May census proved there were only 196,300 paying guests from the States.

Particularly unhappy was the German-run Lufthansa Airline, which was running to only about 72.3% capacity in its jets in June, while the same planes were 100% booked the same time a year ago. Lufthansa blamed some of its off-business on the bad publicity given Germany, once again, via the Eichmann trial.

'Buy American' Policy Blamed

Generally, though, the feeling was that several factors had contributed to the tourists staying home. President Kennedy's "Buy American" policy kept some loyal Yanks at home on their vacations, and the headlines on the Berlin crisis meant that others felt safer back in the U.S. The plastic bomb exploding in the vicinity of the George V Hotel, entertainment biz hangout in Paris, and the one cast along the femmes' favorite shopping street, Rue Fauberg St. Honore, kept other scared Americans from skimming over the Atlantic to France. Add to that the revolution in Algeria and the crisis in Tunis, and you can easily subtract thousands of visitors.

On the other side of the tourist ledger, 1960 was scored as the biggest year for American flocking to Europe. Attracted by the added 1960 tourist bids of the

Gallows Humor

Los Angeles, Jan. 16.

Expiring L.A. Examiner's last edition carried a boxed obit on Victor Frisbie. To knowing newsmen downtown it was the only chuckle that pierced the gloom of two big dailies folding. Frisbie was a fictitious character invented by newsmen for sidebar features to big events. He was called "well known sportsman and world traveler."

The staffers buried him with the sheet.

Hannen Swaffer, London Litterateur, Dies, 82: Ex-Variety Contrib

London, Jan. 16.

Hannen Swaffer, 82, one of London's colorful figures of journalism, criticism, spiritualism and egotism, died today (Tues.) after a fortnight illness.

His body will be cremated Friday (19) and a memorial service conducted Jan. 24 at St. Margert's-In-The-Field Church.

Loved Controversy

Swaffer's career spanned all of the present century and ranged most of the areas of entertainment and public events. Familiarly known as "Swaff" he was the skilled controversialist in the capital-I kind of London press writing. His Sunday column was nationally circulated. During the lifetime of VARIETY's founder-editor, Sime Silverman, Swaffer did a column for this paper. Sime did not refrain from kidding him editorially for his rampantly opionated ways. VARIETY had a further connection in that the unkempt bachelor lived upstairs for decades in the Dickensian structure on St. Martin's Lane above the longtime London HQ of this paper. With its demolition, VARIETY went fancy on St. James Street, but Swaffer was the proverbial uprootee who hated being deprived of his comfortable if seedy setting.

Martha Raye On Today's Faster Lensing Skeds

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Martha Raye has been set for a top role in Stanley Kramer's comedy project "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad World," with probability looming of comedienne reteaming with Jimmy Durante for picture. Kramer is talking to Durante about a role in the picture, which is to feature some 50 comedy performers. Milton Berle has already been set.

Miss Raye and Durante are currently together in "Jumbo" for producer Joe Pasternak at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Collectively, picture marks the end of a 25-year screen absence for the two performers. Miss Raye last appeared with Charlie Chaplin in 1947 in "Monsieur Verdoux" for United Artists, while Durante's last film was "The Milkman" in 1950 for Universal.

25-Year Old Station Operator Runs Afoul Of Inside Judaism Feud

By GUY LIVINGSTON

Boston, Jan. 16.

Another of the now-familiar feuds between pro-Zion and non-Zion Jewish spokesman has given a radio station operator in nearby Lynn a hard time. Harvey Sheldon, owner of WUPY, volunteered to provide a balanced discussion after reading Rabbi Elmer Berger's "10 Commandments For Mass Media," the gist of which was, "Thou shall have no other gods but readers and listeners" — in other words, no sacred cows.

Sheldon offered Berger of the American Council of Judaism and Dr. Carl Seltzer of the Zionist Council of New England a "debate," but it turned out to be Berger alone as the opposite camp declined to join in any discussion on the issue. A good deal of bitterness was generated behind scenes. The Council charged a boycott of its spokesman and a campaign to get the station to cancel its invitation. From Manhattan to investigate the incident, apparently unreported in any Boston publication, came William Gottlieb of the Council.

Gottlieb filed a detailed series of alleged pressures put upon Station WUPY, including the invoking of his sentimental regard for Rabbi Samuel Zaitchik of a Lynn synagogue who had performed his Sheldon's wedding service only a few weks earlier.

Various congregations took sides, some remained neutral, and a good deal of feeling was the net. Sheldon stuck to his guns, aired a taped talk by Berger three times, though unable to secure a Zionist spokesman. Sheldon, 25, is a former disk jockey from Philadelphia, perhaps the youngest station owner in the Greater Boston area.

Concerning 'Variety'

By CARL SANDBURG

Who reads VARIETY? Nobody—that is nobody reads all of it. It is a weekly cyclopedia rather than a newspaper. When it arrives at my desk on a Tuesday, I believe if I should read it all, I would have finished about midnight Wednesday. So I skip around. All readers of VARIETY skip around. Those who have work to do know that if they read all of VARIETY they will get no work done.

Of course, there are people, and I have met them, who read VARIETY for its vocabulary. Here are niteries, stripperies, diskeries, execs, veeps, tv pix and on radio you can meet gabbers. It is nice that I am not doing a doctoral thesis on VARIETY, wherefore I quit here in a pleasant allegation to the fact that I have read pieces by Frank Scully which I could argue are true literature, he having style.

When Snow-Ice Come, Southerners Act Horrified, Helpless and Hurt

Atlanta, Jan. 16.

Amusements were crippled when the Sunny South got caught with its thermometers down last week (Atlanta had a seven-degree low Thursday) and subfreezing weather stuck around through Sunday (14).

Cold wave extended into South Georgia, which, of course, borders on Florida, which did not escape freezing temperatures. The Carolinas were hard hit, so was Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi.

Towns like Atlanta (in Deep South) have no equipment to combat snow and ice and when a blizzard hits just about everything grinds to a halt. The snow just lies there and when it melts the slush turns to ice.

As a rule it is impossible to purchase antifreeze and chains for automobiles are sold out before nightfall of the first day the mercury begins to tumble.

(One indignant woman motorist returned to a store where she had purchased chains and said she had not been able to negotiate a small hill slick with ice. Said the chains were no good. Clerk took a look-see and found out she had had chains put on her front wheels.)

Theatres, hardtops as well as driveins, lost practically three days and nights of business. Clubs, niteries, lounges, dancerias and eateries, too, were devoid of patrons.

Touring company of "The Miracle Worker," in for a three-day stand at Tower Theatre on Atlanta Theatre League series, did very little business at Wednesday matinee and night performance.

Department store clerks were lonesome, utility bus drivers who couldn't get to work, ditto office workers, airline service was curtailed and practically every highway in Georgia was blocked by State Patrol to hold down accidents. This meant that there was no bus service in or out of Atlanta —or any other place.

By Monday (15) the weather picture had brightened and, barring a recurrence, Dixie will soon be abloom with blazing azaleas and colorful camellias.

Starving Novelists

Late Novelist John P. Marquand worried about U.S. writers inability to make a living from novels. Hence, it is in his name that the Book-of-The-Month Club, which does make a living, bestowed a $10,000 prize. Winner is Joan Williams whose "The Morning and the Evening" was published by Atheneum last May.

Marquand was long a B. of M. judge.

'Show' Adds Fine Arts; Hefner Reveals Fiscal Data of His Firms

Show, monthly priced at $1 published in N.Y. by Huntington Hartford, will branch out with its April issue to include the fine arts of painting, sculpture and architecture as well as the performing arts. The publisher's own art museum on Columbus Circle is meanwhile nearing completion, sure to be one of the town's unique spots.

Coincidentally, Show Business Illustrated, the Chicago periodical, also founded in 1961, is undergoing changes of editorial format and accent. It will become a 50c monthly, after originally appearing twice monthly.

Although not compelled to, personally holding most of the stock, publisher Hugh Hefner (of Playboy and SBI) is yielding to the "curiosity that has been focused" on his publishing rise with a financial report. Statement also touches on his so far click entry into bonifacing via a string of Playboy key clubs, but this part of report doesn't disclose profits.

On the dollar-and-cents of his two mags, Hefner has worth-crowing figures re the Playboy phenomenon, but candidly admits early SBI miscues, though forecasting the showbiz mag can dupli-

IT'S MUTINY ON THE BUDGET

Ross Hunter Finds Craft Unions Resist 'Infiltration' of Newcomers

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Ross Hunter Productions has embarked on an expansion of personnel program, seeking to utilize new talents in the creative fields, but producer Hunter said he's already run into some union opposition.

Hunter disclosed he wanted to sign Buck Hinshaw to handle the sets on his upcoming films, but said the set decorators' union wouldn't accept Hinshaw as a membef. As a result, Hunter signed him to a company contract, and, he adds, "I don't think they (the union) can object."

Hunter commented, "They are always talking about bringing new talent into Hollywood. But the unions don't want what they consider an infiltration of new people. I'm trying to bring in new talent and the unions say why not put their people to work first. I will use those people but I also want to be able to use new talent."

Hunter said that his company, in association with Ralph Fields, has signed Peter Fonda to a 14-picture deal and a seven-year contract. He is also negotiating for a reader who will go to N.Y. to read plays before they are presented on Broadway. In addition, Hunter is discussing contracts for new, young acting talent.

The producer is now negotiating for Harry Keller to direct "Tammy Takes Over" and "In the Wrong Rain." Keller, while a vet director, hasn't been given an opportunity in the feature field and he wants to give him this chance, he said. Similarly, Carl Reiner, known mainly as a comedian, penned his first screenplay, "The Thrill Girl," for Hunter.

The producer said he also plans to test new thesp talent for his "If a Man Answers," starring Sandra Dee and Bobby Darin.

Producers should be highly selective of their subject matter for films, and try to give the public something of a nature they can't possibly see on tv, he commented, pointing to his "The Flower Drum Song" as an example.

Mex Gov't to Finance Yank III Task's Pic On Cortez Conquest

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

III Task Pictures Ltd. is prepping a Mexican coproduction on "Conquest of Mexico," story surrounding Hernando Cortez, for the end of this year, it was revealed by Saul Swimmer and Allen Klein, partnered in the company with Tony Anthony. Klein said they have a signed commitment from the Mexican Government, which owns the Mexican film industry, to wholly finance the picture, which he will produce. Swimmer will direct and in which Anthony will star. Swimmer and Anthony are now completing the original screenplay. Mexican government and Task will share in the profits.

Partners also said they have been partially financed on past and current projects by Pathe-America, for which they give Pathe lab work. Pathe-America is also currently releasing their "Force of Impulse," which stars J. Carroll Naish, Robert Alda and Jeff Donnell and features first motion picture score by jazz vibist Lionel ampton.

Also on tap is "Sowbelly," tentative title for an original western

Robbins Heads Pioneers

Herman Robbins, National Screen Service chairman, this week was elected president of the Motion Picture Pioneers, good-works film industry group founded by the late Jack Cohn. He succeeds Simon H. Fabian, president of Stanley Warner.

Other officers include Marvin Kirsch, v.p.; William J. German, treasurer, and John J. O'Connor, secretary.

RESIST SALARY VICTORY

James Garner Won Though Studio Idled By Strike

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Warner Bros. has asked the California Supreme Court to hear an appeal of lower court decision favoring actor James Garner in salary dispute with studio.

Former "Maverick" star won court actions in Superior Court and District Court of Appeals that contended he was entitled to back salary from studio despite Screen Writers Guild strike in 1960 that idled the industry.

In petition, Warner Bros. attorneys said that ruling was "dangerous and wholly without precedent."

India Rising As U.S. Film Market

Long recognized as a great potential market for American films, India is now beginning to show signs of realizing that potential, according to an annual report on the Indian situation prepared for the Motion Picture Export Assn. homeoffice by Irving Maas, MPEA veep for the Far East, and Charles E. Egan, rep in Bombay. India is now in fifth position among the Far Eastern markets for Hollywood pix.

American major company billings in India in 1960 were 23% higher than in 1959, and in the first nine months of 1961 had already exceeded those of 1960 by 18%, with the three most profitable months of the year still to come.

U.S. film company managers are particularly optimistic about the future, for a number of reasons. They feel the country's third five year plan is paying off, and as the living standards are raised generally, specific businesses, including motion pictures, are bound to improve. They also feel that a liberalization of the present rules handicapping the building of new theatres is due in the near future.

They base this forecast on the fact that since 1957 India has climbed from 24th to 18th position in the MPEA's table of master markets. In the Far East area, embracing 16 political divisions, India is now in fifth position, coming closely behind New Zealand in volume of billings.

While the American companies have been increasing their share of the Indian market, the Indian government has been seeking to obtain a larger market in the U.S. for its product — however, without much success as yet. Problem, according to the MPEA report, is that Indian producers, who have a big and ready market at home, understandably tend to stick to the kind of format which pays off there instead of trying to find material suitable for international audiences.

REISINI, YOUNGSTEIN CONFER WITH MG EXECS

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Cinerama prexy Nicolas Reisini and his new veepee Max Youngstein are in from Gotham for seshes with MGM Studio execs on "How the West Was Won" and "Brothers Grimm," in which both companies are partners. Youngstein's visit will mark his first since joining Reisini's companies. In addition to Cinerama title, Youngstein is prexy of Cinemiracle International, recently acquired from National Theatres & Television.

Following his visit here Reisini plans to fly to Paris for the preem of remodeled Empire on Jan. 18 with "Windjammer," wide screen pic Cinerama acquired from NT&T along with its other assets for $1,250,000.

OR CZAR-ARRAHAL IN STUDIO HEAD

By GENE ARNEEL

Resignation of Sol C. Siegel as production v.p. of Metro on the coast and his replacement by Bob Weitman, heretofore head of MGM television production, provoked a spate of comment in Manhattan within the trade. But apparently not mentioned anywhere is the fact that "it's hard to be a winner as head of a studio nowadays."

This comment comes from the vicepresident of a major company who functions on the business end of theatrical production.

He spoke the obvious in saying that the days of the Hollywood "czar" are over. One man control at any given studio is exemplified historically by Louis B. Mayer (and then Dore Schary) at Metro, Harry Cohn at Columbia, Harry and then Jack L. Warner at Warners, Henry Ginsberg and then Y. Frank Freeman at Paramount, the Spitz-Goetz combo at Universal, Darryl F. Zanuck at 20th-Fox, and so on.

In the wake of such major domos went the business men — those who would make the participation deals with independent producers—just as Weitman will be doing at MGM and Sol Schwartz is undertaking at Columbia.

For these so-called business men the pitfalls, even though psychological, are apparent.

Culver City under Siegel in the west and Joseph R. Vogel in the east did an almost phenomenal job in getting MGM back into the production black after several years of fiscal bad times. This had gone on to the extent that the entire welfare of the corporation was in a state of jeopardy.

Despite this, Seigel is now bowing in a qualified blaze of glory. The financial and artistic heroics which had been attributed to him are somewhat militated against by the uncertainty of a couple of productions.

One is "Lady L," which has been fabled after a production investment of $2,000,000. Another is "Mutiny on the Bounty," with

Broadway's Own Weitman Bosses Metro Studio As Siegel An Indie; Vogel Will Be Much On Coast

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Like prexy Joseph R. Vogel, Robert M. Weitman, who today assumes new duties as vice-president and studio administrator of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, comes from the ranks of exhibition.

Weitman, who will be 57 next Aug. 18, is, a native New Yorker. As managing director of the Broadway Paramount, he introed the big name band and big name entertainer policy in the mid-1930's which stimulated business in film houses following the decline of the customary stage show supplementary attractions.

Appointment of Weitman in the wake of the step down by Sol C. Siegel as MGM production chief was forecast here. Official confirmation came over the weekend in a statement by Vogel who also confirmed report that he would spend most of his time at the studio in coming months and work in close association with Weitman.

In his new post, Weitman, who joined MGM in May, 1960, as veepee in charge of television production, now will have responsibility for the studio's over-all operations. Under his direction MGM has spurted from a back to a front runner among the major studios in telefilming.

It has 12 in Works

"Weitman in the past two years has made an important contribution to MGM in the field of television production," Vogel stated. "With a consistent background of achievement as a creative production executive his combination of showmanship and business ability will mean much to MGM's future."

Few in the industry today have as wide and intimate knowledge as Weitman does of theatre operations and of the station, selling and production phases of tv. He was veepee in charge of programming and talent for ABC-TV from 1953 to 1956, then joined CBS-TV as veepee in charge of program development, later supervising all independent production.

A product of the Paramount training school for managers, which he joined in 1926, Weitman did a two-week trek as doorman during the opening of the Broadway Par Theatre. He worked as assistant and manager of the old Rialto and once while managing the Brooklyn Paramount he had to send for the fire department to help lower a crane on which crooner Bing Crosby was perched out over the audience.

At the time of the consent decree separating Paramount Theatres from the picture company, Weitman was managing director of both the N.Y. and Brooklyn houses as well as veepee of the company's deluxe houses and in charge of its

Substance, Not Shadow

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

As prexy of Cinerama, Nick Reisini's stock holdings in the triple-screen company total $4,000,000. Recently, he picked up an option on 300 shares at $2:60. Before that he bought in open market 150,000 at $18.50. And before that, he purchased 350,000 shares at $4. He started off with 4,500,000 shares for which he paid $1,400,000, when he was elected prexy less than two years ago.

Fiscally speaking, there are few execs in the pic or theatre biz who have invested anywhere near $4,000,000 in the company they're identified with.

In other words, Reisini is Cinerama.

General Artists' O'Seas Expansion

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

General Artists Corp. looks to expansion abroad, according to vice-president Ingo Preminger who said he will try to establish offices and/or affiliations in London, Paris and Munich during a two-month trip to Europe. Preminger leaves tomorrow, accompanied by the agency's acting dept. head Marty Baum.

Preminger said his chief interest will be in the story department, which he created when he joined GAC. Baum will check possibility of setting up acting dept. affiliations in same areas, Preminger said.

Two execs will also check operations at the new GAC office set up in Rome while abroad.

Project III Starts 'Great Race' Pic For Mirisch Co. in '63

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Project III, joint company formed by Freddie Fields Associates (Fields, David Begelman and John Foreman and Blake Edwards' Homeward Productions, moves into feature production with "The Great Race," to be done for the Mirisch Co. on a one-picture deal. Film gets underway in the spring of 1963 on a budget between $6-$8,000,000. Fields said he has been negotiating with Paul Newman to play Dr. Leslie and Jack Lemmon and Danny Kaye for role of Dr. Fate. Two characters instigated the 1901 auto race from New York to Asia via Paris on which picture is based.

Fields also revealed he has had talks with Audrey Hepburn, Shirley MacLaine and Natalie Wood to play femme lead, with picture to be made in vein similar to

Biz Offish After Holidays; 'Song' Champ Again, 'Story' 2d, 'El Cid' 3d, 'One, Two' 4th

Business in key city firstruns this stanza is reflecting the usual post-holiday seasonal influences. Severe cold weather plus heavy snows in some spots has been cutting deeply into trade for two weeks in a row. However, a few keys covered by Variety indicate that more favorable weather in last few days has improved trade.

"Flower Drum Song" (U) again is champion by a wide margin, being more than $100,000 ahead of its nearest competitor. "Song" is doing better in its fourth week in many spots than it did in third week, and is the leaning pic in numerous cities.

"West Side Story" (UA) is winding up second, a position it has held several times. "El Cid" (AA), just launched over the holidays, is pushing up to third place, playing in some nine keys.

"One, Two, Three" (UA) is capturing fourth place although it's in only eight key cities. "King of Kings" (M-G), currently quite spotty, is dipping down to fifth.

"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) will finish sixth despite being on the uneven side. "Roman Spring" (WB), comparatively new, is copping seventh money.

"Babes in Toyland" (BV) is slipping to eighth place, now that the youngsters are back in school. "Second Time Around" (20th) is finishing in ninth position. "Twist Around Clock" (Col) rounds out top 10 films.

"Bachelor Flat" (20th), just getting started; "La Dolce Vita" (Astor), long high on the lists, and "Call Me Genius" (Cont) are the runner-up films in that order. "Flat" likely will be heard from in the future.

A whole batch of new picture, just launched or out for only a few weeks in scattered playdates, hints promise in next few weeks. "Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA) shapes as a potentially great grosses. It still is capacity in N.Y., where first launched at Palace, and sturdy in L.A. "Majority of One" (WB) shapes big in N.Y. (at Music Hall) and L.A.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" (Astor), still big in N.Y., looks great in Detroit and fast in Washington. "The Outsider" (U) continues lusty in L.A.

"Lover Come Back" (U), next film due at N. Y. Music Hall, continues socko in L.A. "The Innocents" (20th) shapes best in Chi, L.A. and Philly where smart.

"Children's Hour" (UA) is rated good in L.A. "Purple Noon" (Times), hot in Baltimore and Pitt, looms big in Washington and okay in Minneapolis, playing arty theatres. "Summer and Smoke" (Par), just getting around, looks big in Philly, hotsy in L.A., and good in Chi and N.Y. "Happy Thieves" (UA) so far shapes spotty.

France Tops Legion's Sin-Film Group; Most-Condemned Sex Symbol: Bardot

By VINCENT CANBY

In addition to being the United States' favorite supplier of perfume and champagne, France also seems to be this country's biggest supplier of "immoral" pix, at least if you take the Legion of Decency's ratings as the criterion.

According to the Legion's Jan. 18 bulletin, 27 of the 62 C-rated (condemned) pix are of French origin. The U. S. follows with 10, though only two of these ("The Moon Is Blue" and "Baby Doll") were distributed by major companies. Other suppliers of sin: Britain, six pix; Italy and Sweden, four pix each; Greece and Germany, three each. One other C pic is a French-Italo work and four are unidentified as to nationality.

100% Pure Reds

It might also be noted that if the Russians and her Iron Curtain partners are trying to subvert us, they obviously are not trying to do it via "suggestive situations and costuming" or through the flaunting of "traditional morality." There are no Red pix on the Roman Catholic C list.

Also using Legion standards: if the French can be described as dominating the transAtlantic traffic in immorality, then French star Brigitte Bardot can be called the Queen of the Cs. Of the 27 French imports which have been condemned by the LOD, seven are BB starrers beginning with "And God Created Woman" and winding with her most recent release here, "The Truth." One industry wag has suggested it might be easier if the Legion simply condemned BB and

Disney Shares at $40

Common stock of Walt Disney Productions was at the $40 level last week, thus gaining ground. The issue had been $46 high and $26 low for 1961-62.

Disney has been among the most traded stocks in the amusement field—MCA is another. In the case of Disney there has been some discussion in Wall Street about the producer's high returns on certain theatrical features, including "Parent Trap," "101 Dalmations" and "Swiss Family Robinson." These three especially have turned the theatrical corner from red to black.

The $40 level was reached last Thursday (11) concurrent with a downtown Manhattan meeting of stock analysts who visualized a rise in profits.

Roger H. Lewis, Philip Langner In Producer Co.

Roger H. Lewis, who resigned in 1961 as ad-pub veep of United Artists, and Philip Langner yesterday (Tues.) revealed their association in the future production of five motion pictures, starting with the screen version of Edward Willant's novel, "The Pawnbroker." Negotiations are now in progress for Dan Petrie to direct the pic, getting underway in June.

Langner, son of the Theatre Guild's Lawrence Langner, also is an officer of the Guild and was associate producer of Stanley Kramer's "Judgment at Nuremburg." Presently he is acting in the same capacity on Kramer's "A Child Is Waiting."

Vogel Points to Quarter Earnings Sans Last Year Windfall From O'Seas

Metro had earning of $2,173,000 for the first quarter of the current fiscal year, compared with a net of $2,177,000 for the corresponding period in 1961, president Joseph R. Vogel informed stockholders this past week.

This, on the surface, would represent a slight drop. But the accounts on foreign money indicate that actually an improvement was noted in the most recent period. In the 1961 quarter MGM realized $974,000 on previously-blocked overseas earnings. This item from abroad was listed at only $186,000 in the new period. Company as of Nov. 23, 1961, had net assets of $3,300,000 overseas, subject to outside participations and U.S. federal income taxes, compared with $3,000,000 the year previous. All of this is to be realized on the books when converted into Yank dollars.

Net in the new period amounted to 85c per share, compared with 87c a year ago.

Former Film Staffer to Handle Seattle Expo Publicity

James P. O'Neill, whose publicity credits in show business include 20th-Fox, United Artists and Hecht-Lancaster is to serve as publicity director of the 1962 Seattle World's Fair. He'll report to J. R. Rockey, who has the PR post. O'Neill has also worked at Young & Rubicam.

O'Neill is already on the job int Seattle. The fair opens on April 21.

Light Due As To Ace Films Future

Insiders look for some word on makeup of Ace Films management at today's (Wed.) daylong meeting of the American Congress of Exhibitors' executive body. Composition of the production arm's managerial echelon has been the subject of much trade rumoring ever since the entity was created in an effort to stimulate more product. For a time, hottest prospect to head up Ace was thought to be Max Youngstein, who since has gone to Cinerama as a veep after his exit from United Artists.

Ace Films was uppermost on today's agenda, but a number of other topics were also listed for discussion. Meeting is in the Stanley Warner board rooms.

George Stevens, Jr., Joins Murrow on 'Image' Work; Dad Rolls 'Story' Soonest

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

With the appointment of George Stevens Jr. as head of the film division of U.S. Information Agency under direction of Edward R. Murrow, the son of the prominent producer-director is expected to rep Murrow in future meetings to project the American image in pix made by U.S. producers.

Prexies of four guilds and A.F.L. Film Council recently invited Murrow to revisit Hollywood and explain in detail what is expected of filmakers on the image question. To date no word has been received from Murrow on invitation for a second meeting sent Dec. 18. The first sesh was held here Nov. 5.

Since Murrow has been spending past few months traveling in foreign countries on goodwill trips, the importance of Stevens Jr. as spokesman on the future of the image becomes more apparent. At

Is Fakery Ruining U.S. Dream?

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Truth has been more subtly perverted in the United States during the past 40 years, and the public relations shops are to blame. That, over-simplified, is a principal point of a new book by a U. of Chicago professor, Daniel J. Boorstin. In "The Image" (Athenum, $5) he piles up an impressive array of "pseudo-events" created by PR, leading to "The Self-Deceiving Magic of Prestige." He documents the endorsement dodge, the travel package, the absurdity of the celebrity, the shallow modern substitute for the person of renown.

Boorstin writes well and has obviously done a lot of library research, the latter activity containing the germ of its own "pseudo-event," a contrived decline of civilization, as well as its own admirable and surprisingly wide-read scholarship. If in the end the book promises more than it performs, leaving the reader fortified in the familiar but without antidotes, this is perhaps typical of the latter day "angled" book, a la "Organization Man" treatises.

Word-magic as a solution for problems and a substitute for reality certainly surrounds us. The author quotes Edward L. Bernays' 1922 instance of the languishing hotel which needed more business. Bernays did not survey the service, the cuisine or the beds but instead organized a civic celebration of the hotel's 30th anniversary and made the place fashionable by phoney accolade.

Boorstin speaks much of a hunger for dreams but there are old-fashioned folk who would call it a national complex to seek more profit on less merchandize. That's the basic sin. Public relations was invented as cover-up for the complaints.

New York Sound Track

Notice to all destitute Princeton Tigers, Class of '17: 20th-Fox will give you a free ticket to the "Tender Is the Night" preem at the Paramount Theatre tomorrow (Thurs.) night. Apply to the homeoffice Literary Department. However, as the 20th press release points out, "proof of graduation will be required." (There's nothing that spoils a film premiere more than a lot of phoney Princeton graduates.)

United Artists reports that "Judgment at Nuremberg" already has taken in $1,500,000 at the b.o. in just seven U.S. dates . . . Continental Distributing has Robert Dhery and Colette Brosset in tow promoting "La Belle Americaine."

Fernando Ayala, veep of Argentina's Mar Del Plata film fest, returns to New York next week from Buenos Aires to spur plans for increased U.S. participation in this year's fest . . . Murray J. King, who is associated with Gilbert Miller in the release of the Italo "La Notte Brava," has just returned from Europe with a package of 62 features for Canadian tv distribution and three pix for theatrical distribution here . . . TV producer Bill Hobin has formed Mizpah Productions to make theatrical features as well as tv shows.

Arlene Francis' biog as given in playbill of Billy Wilder's UA release "One, Two, Three" considerably foreshortens her career by stating it began with "Doughgirls." This drops out a lot of appearances with Orson Welles in the old Mercury troupe. About 10 credits predate "Doughgirls," to wit: "One Good Year" (1936); "Horse Beats Hat" (1936); "The Women" (1936); "Angel Island" (1937); "All That Glitters" (1938); "Danton's Death" (1938); "Michael Drops In" (1938); "Young Couple Wanted" (1940); "Journey to Jerusalem" (1940); "Walking Gentleman" (1942). Latter was the same year as "Doughgirls."

Continental Distributing will host a special midnight screening of "A View from the Bridge" for Broadway legit players at the Sutton tomorrow (Thurs.) . . . Nine months after its American preem, the Italo "L'Avventura" has been given a C (condemned) rating by the Legion of Decency, just in time for the pic's city-wide art house break which starts today (Wed.) . . . Epic Records has the musical score for "Les Liaisons Dangereuses."

Attorney Milton S. Gould, 20th-Fox board member, is at Dorado Beach (P.R.) for two weeks . . . Noelle Gillmore, who did the English language script for the dubbed version of Alain Resnais' "Hiroshima Mon Amour," is now prepping the subtitles for Resnais' upcoming "Last Year in Marienbad," which Astor will open here at the Carnegie Cinema March 1. Pic is also repping France in this year's foreign language Oscar derby.

Jennifer Jones was guest of honor at a cocktail party thrown by 20th at the St. Regis Monday (15) evening. Not so incidently, her "Tender Is the Night" opens at the Paramount Theatre tomorrow (Thurs.) . . . After winding up his stint as unit publicist for "Requiem for a Heavyweight" for Mike Merrick Associates, Greg Morrison has returned to 20th-Fox's homeoffice publicity department as rep for national mags and book publishers. Before he went to Merrick, Morrison was 20th's trade press contact.

MPEA execs in from the field: Robert J. Corkery, director of the Latin American division, and Harry Stone, rep in Brazil.

AIP prexy Jim Nicholson and exec veep Sam Arkoff have returned to their Coast headquarters after winding up a series of franchise meetings around the country with a gala lunch in New York last Wednesday (10) . . . Producer-director Marion Gering back in New York after completing the shooting of "Meeting With Japan" in, of course, Japan.

Salah Hassanein, Skouras Theatres prexy plans to build a new theatre in Oyster Bay. House will be build by Glen Cove attorney James M. O'Connell and operated by Skouras Theatres.

Sam Boverman, film industry lawyer and copyright expert, joined Warners' legal department. Had been with Paramount 25 years and then Cinerama . . . Leo Jaffe, Columbia 1st v.p.-treasurer, accepted a special citation from the Treasury Dept. for company's part in annual Savings Bond drive.

Bill Davidson, profiling Spencer Tracy in the current Look, says the actor has agreed to do another for Stanley Kramer, a comedy chase yarn, "Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World." Scribe also recalls the first meeting of Tracy and Katharine Hepburn (in '41, when Metro paired them for "Woman of the Year"), with the actress reportedly telling Tracy, "You're not as tall as I thought you were." His retort, "That's all right, I'll cut you down to my size."

BRONSTON'S PIX COLLECTIVE

Mike Todd Jr. Applies 'Omit Flowers' And His Old Smellie May Recoup

With "Scent of Mystery," made in 1959, Mike Todd Jr. bowed as a film producer with a picture that literally smelled—thanks to a network of under-seat jets to simulate redolence of flowers, pipe tobacco, etc. The gimmick only proved b.o. repellent. A tongue-in-cheek, Hitchcockian mystery, it involved Peter Lorre, Paul Lukas, Diana Dors and Denholm Elliott—plus the Spanish landscape. Oh yes, it featured a "surprise" last-reel appearance by young Todd's partner in the project, his former step-mom, Elizabeth Taylor.

Put out on hardticket, it played only three dates—Chicago, New York and Los Angeles. The dull grosses convinced Todd he didn't have a roadshow product, despite the olfactory additions, so he withdrew "Scent" and bided time. Recently, under a percentage deal with National Theatres, the pic preemed again—in Toronto—as a Cinemiracle attraction sans odors and retitled "Holiday in Spain." The reincarnation, reports Todd, now smells of a hit, his figures to date having it outpacing the only other Cinemiracle attraction, "Windjammer," in the same house.

The reprise is also on a hardticket policy, and suggests that the difference is in the three-panel process, which apparently is enough to command upped scale for a pic that was deficient as a 70m roadshow.

His computing suggests to Todd that the negative cost (assertedly over 2,00,000 originally, plus another $65,000 to convert to Cinemiracle) can now be recouped, and perhaps even permit a modest profit. Plainly, it will have to go some, since even the global playoff that Todd projects doesn't encompass much more than 100 dates, a limitation enforced by the three-panel process. Foreign distribution deals still pend, while for the U.S.-Canadian market, National Theatres is gunning for every available Cinerama situation it can get. Last report, via Todd, had at least four or five U. S. dates virtually set.

Todd, meanwhile, is prepping two more film properties, both comedies and more modestly scaled than "Holiday." The one expected to be first before the cameras is a sci-fi frolic titled (for the nonce) "Creature from the Bronx," with Leonard Gaines co-producing and Larry Gore, theatrical pressagent, scripting.

The other project is due to be a "silent"—no dialog—called "Bumpkin's Holiday," based on a headlined incident of a man who stole a bus. Coast tv scribes Bernard Kahn and Arthur Weinberg are screenplaying, and while Todd is reticent about cast possibilities, it's understood he'll pitch the lead to either Buster Keaton or Sid Caesar.

DICK ZANUCK SANGUINE ON 'CHAPMAN'S' SEAL

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Now that lensing on "The Chapman Report" has been completed, producer Richard Zanuck doesn't "forsee any serious problems" in getting a Code Seal from the Motion Picture Producers Assn. He plans to submit the finished product with music—scoring hasn't been started yet—in four or five weeks to Code Administration of MPPA.

Producer planes to Paris Jan. 15 with "Chapman" print to show his father, Darryl F. Zanuck, who is filming "The Longest Day" in France. At the same time, Richard will see footage so far on "Longest Day." He will be gone about a week.

On his return from abroad, Zanuck will concentrate on scoring the Warner Bros. release to enable him to spend full time on the 20th-Fox lot for "Fate Is The Hunter," his next. Until then he is commuting between both Burbank and Westwood studios, same as George Cukor who directed "Chapman" and awaits start of "Something Is Got To Give," to star Marilyn Monroe for producer David Brown.

Joseph A. Adelman has been appointed west coast legal rep of United Artists. A member of UA's legal department since 1958, Adelman began his new duties Monday (15), working with Robert F. Blumofe, veep in charge of west coast operations, and Arnold D. Burk, exec assistant to Blumofe.

In addition to being a member of the Motion Picture Assn. of America's copyright committee, Adelman has also been UA's rep on the MPEA title committee.

Stanley Warner's Happy Quarter

Stanley Warner Corp. opened fiscal '62 with some cheering figures, good enough to notch the second best first quarter in the diversified company's history. Consolidated net for the period ended last Nov. 25, as disclosed by prexy Simon H. Fabian at the holders' meeting last Thursday (11), reached $1,312,700, equal to 65c per share of common stock. This compares to the record initial quarter, in 1960, of $1,470,600, or 73c a share.

As expected, the meeting approved new five-year pacts for Fabian and exec vicepresident Sam Rosen, both of whom had served under two-year contracts. Re-elected to the board for two years were veepee Harry M. Kalmine and Dr. Charles F. McKahnn, with veep-treasurer W. Stewart McDonald also being voted to the board as replacement for late zone manager Moe Silver. Fabian, Rosen and Nat Lapkin, first veepee, are in the middle of two-year board terms voted a year ago.

Corporate income for the first quarter, Fabian reported, was over $35,000,000, a gain of almost $2,000,000 over the corresponding 1960 period. However, expenses as between the comparable periods, rose by even more than $2,000,000 in the latest report. Company's

NYU's Gessner Researches Reasons Why on 'Guns'

In what might be termed the anatomy of a film boxoffice hit, a professor at New York U. is underway with a project to determine why Carl Foreman's production of "Guns of Navarone" scored so well with the public.

Robert Gessner has asked 300 exhibitors as well as his own students for their ideas. He's going to the theatremen because they're likely to weigh the commercial values, while, for balance, the scholars expectedly will consider the aesthetics.

Gessner sent out questionaires recently and so far has gotten about a 30% return. His inconclusive impression at this point is that the students are particularly aware of the pacing in "Navarone" while the exhibs underlined the screenplay.

Partly cuing the survey is an essay written in 1929 by late Russian director Sergei Eisenstein. In this the famous filmaker noted that when a picture is a success no one bothers to evaluate the artistic merits; it's simply concluded that the picture is a hit and that's all.

Gessner wants to find out why a given production succeeds. He's asking the exhibs and students to evaluate star names and performances, script, production values, music, pace and individual sequences.

Gessner said he went to see "Navarone" expecting simply a spectacle. Instead he found the picture reaching his inside. The emotional appeal was such that his "intellectual judgment was cancelled out."

CULTIVATES OWN AREA PARTNERS

Samuel Bronston, in New York from London over the past weekend, states he's "very happy" with his latest two productions, "King of Kings" and "El Cid," twin roadshows currently on Broadway. Most significantly, he adds: "The bankers are very happy, too."

Visited at his new offices at 505 Park Avenue, Manhattan, producer Bronston offered communiques from associates showing that the two pictures were going well—very well. The impression drawn by a reporter is that of the two films "Cid" is the klondike. But, yet, "Kings" also is a click, particularly overseas where records have been established. In certain areas this MGM release is going ahead of "Ben-Hur" in terms of revenue notably in Tokyo, Manila and Buenos Aires and in the class with the best of everything in Cairo. (where "Ben-Hur" has yet to be played). It's strictly capacity in Catholic Spain.

On the other hand "Kings" in the States has been mostly up but then there are weather conditions in New York and Los Angeles which influence the boxoffice. (Apart from Bronston's observations is the independent statement by MGM president Joseph R. Vogel that "Kings" is proving "a profitable picture.")

"El Cid" actually was the costlier of the two, having been brought in at a little over $9,000,000 according to Bronston. "Kings" was entered "at a little over $8,000,000." Knowledge of the releasing and financing arrangements for both productions, as imparted by Bronston, leads to important trade angles.

"Kings" was taken over by MGM in the course of production as both partial financier and global distributor. Metro thus became a partner in both production and distribution. "Cid," on the other hand, saw Bronston as sole producer (no partners) with distribution and financial participation taken by local global operators.

Bronston is now on the verge of making two other epics and he doesn't want any more major company partnerships. He says he feels "100% in favor with MGM" with the way "Kings" has been handled but still would prefer to make his own pictures wholly on his own. He says in effect he has faith in his own people, notably directors Nicholas Ray and Anthony Mann and writer Philip Yordan, and there's a mutuality of confidence, so why anybody else?

Bronston's next two are to be made, mainly, in the Madrid area and the two combined are budgeted at about $16,000,000. Specifics must await casting but one, "The

Producer-Distrib Not Punished, But Rewarded, Under Consent, But Looks Like Theatres 'Stuck'

Doubling as Ike

Paris, Jan. 16.

Henry Grace, supervising set designer at the Metro studio in Culver City, is here to take on a new role.

He's on leave of absence from MGM to enact the part of General Eisenhower (the resemblance is remarkable) in Darryl F. Zanuck's "The Longest Day."

N.Y. Stock Market Very Perky in '61

By GENE ARNEEL

The New York Stock Exchange over the past year was an unusually active trading centre for most issues. The buy-sell activity was the heaviest since 1929. The historic highs were numerous. But this was the market generally; some film issues showed power but amusement industries (the plural is used as a singular in Wall Street and banking circles) was mixed.

The strong gainers included: MCA, which started out the year at $38.50, and bolstered by anticipation anent film company backlog buyouts and entry into its own theatrical production, jumped to $83.25 and closed at $79; Loew's, up from $15.87½ to a closing of $42.75, as investors got behind the Tisch clan's free-wheeling financial enterprise; and Warners, up from $53 to $82.75, beautifully propped by a 400,000-plus share tender and a proposed four-for-one split (up for a vote at the Feb. 7 annual meeting).

Paramount closing at $55.75 was close to the year's leadoff price of $56.12½. But this was an erratic stock, having been up to $85.75. Bullishness waned as, among other things, Par's Telemeter home toll system unveiled as being possibly a longrange but certainly not near-future winner.

Twentieth-Fox began the year at $41.75, gained to $55.25 and closed at $35.36¼. Investors ran for cover as 20th had only sizeable production losses to enter on its

Resentful elements in exhibition continue to plump for tight enforcement of the Paramount consent decrees, suspecting laxity and lawbreaking all around; but increasingly the trade hears, contrarily, from other showmen urging that the decrees be either revised or vacated outright. This latter argument contends that the film producing companies, and not—as first envisioned—the exhibitors, have benefitted from the consent situation.

Whatever the merits either side—and able observers say they are to be found in both viewpoints—it may serve to look beyond the pro-con to the realistic prospects for amending the decrees from the vantage of the judiciary which would have the ultimate say.

Herman N. Levy, as general counsel for Theatre Owners of America (wherein the dominant view inclines to favor repeal), is at hand with a parallel that suggests the Par decrees would stick even if one of the parties to the case (as required) should petition for revision. For the latecomer, this automatically precludes exhibition from the initiative, since the theatres were not party to the original suit (except for the limited involvement as an amicus curiae). On the basis of past performance, the Dept. of Justice is not likely to broach modification, and, as Levy emphasizes, distribution, as the paradoxical unintended beneficiary, has maintained an understandable silence.

At any rate, Levy's discouraging analogy concerned the major Chicago meatpackers. Following a Federal antitrust action in 1920, the meat companies signed a consent agreement which they have twice sought unsuccessfully to have repealed. The last attempt was in 1956. In denying the petition, the Chicago Federal Court harked back all the way to the view, expressed in 1932, of the late Justice Cardozo of the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled the decrees reinstated after a lower court revoked them two years before.

As Levy points out, Cardozo's opinion is instructive as a portent for the film industry. Quoth the jurist:

"No doubt the (meatpacker) defendants will be better off if the injunction is relaxed, but they are not suffering hardship so extreme and unexpected as to justify us in saying they are victims of op-

MY ACHING BACK!

By ART MOGER

Boston, Jan. 16.

Are movies too long? Many think so, regard three hours or more as a pain in the sacroiliac. A great deal depends on the story being told, of course. D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," of 1915, ran about three hours. Woodrow Wilson remarked about the film that it was "like writing history with lightning." Engrossing subject matter makes the difference.

Average release today runs between 105-120 minutes. Motion pictures which have run longer, recently, include the Academy Award winner, "The Apartment," "Bells Are Ringing," "Fanny," "Can-Can," "The World of Suzie Wong," "Rocco and His Brothers," "Inherit the Wind," "Hell To Eternity," "The Dark at the Top of the Stairs," "King of Kings," "The Story of Ruth," "The Sundowners," "Swiss Family Robinson" and "Scent of Mystery," a gimmick picture which gave off odors in the theatre which produced a soporific effect on the viewers, thus easing the strain on their backs.

Add the long-sits for "The Bridge on the River Kwai," 161 minutes; "Song Without End," 141; "Cimarron," 147; "Elmer Gantry," 162; "The Alamo," 190; "Spartacus," 203; "Ben-Hur," 212; "From the Terrace," 144; "10 Commandments," 219 and "Exodus," 220.

Just a couple of decades ago, the average film was only one hour 13 minutes—73 minutes. That was back in 1941.

Ten years later, by 1951, the mean average running time for a motion picture feature was one hour and 20 minutes. In 1956, it has been upped to 91 minutes. Predictions of things to come were being forecast by experts in the movie mecca, Hollywood. Even European makers took a leaf out of the American producers' notebooks. Films from Japan, Italy and France began to filter into the U.S.A. with times increased from previous productions, was recorded by statisticians.

N.Y. IMPORTERS GALA FEED AT ASTOR HOTEL

Approximately 500 persons were on hand last night (Tues.) at annual dinner of the Independent Film Importers and Distributors of America at the Astor Hotel in New York. Dinner will see presentation of a special award to Dick Brandt, prexy of Trans-Lux Distributing and former member of the IFIDA governing committee, for his contributions to IFIDA as well as to the cause of foreign films in the U. S.

The occasion also featured the presentation of the annual IFIDA film awards, including the Burstyn award to Astor Pictures' "La Dolce Vita" as best foreign language picture of the year. Also cited were Continental Distributing's "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning" as the best English language import; dubbing expert Peter Riethof for his English language version of Times Film's French import "Purple Noon," and George K. Arthur's "Praise The Sea," as best short subject. A special short subject award was also made to Kingsley International's "Children of The Sun," a John Hubley animated subject.

A combination of attractive, intelligent performers and consistently interesting, De Luxecolorful photography of interiors and exteriors—mostly the French Riviera—provide big plus qualities in this 20th-Fox adaptation of "Tender Is The Night." This may not be a 100 proof distillation of F. Scott Fitzgerald. Such is not possible of achievement since the essential beauty of the novel is the literary artistry of its prose. But "Tender Is The Night" is nonetheless on its own filmic terms a thoughtful, disturbing and at times absorbing romantic drama. Since the basic appeal is sufficiently broad to satisfy both younger adult and older audiences, its boxoffice prospects are bright and with a strong selling campaign aimed at stimulating both groups this Henry T. Weinstein production could well become an important moneymaker.

It has been some time since the screen has delivered a profoundly romantic film of this nature, thankfully devoid of the dark and baser sex connotations. This alone should come as welcome relief, even though scenarist Ivan Moffat has not succeeded altogether in clarifying the elusive meanings of the drama and director Henry King has been more resourceful in capturing atmosphere than in dissecting the principal characters. "Tender Is The Night" has been produced on an elaborate scale. Obviously a lot of painstaking care has gone into the mounting and carving. It is evident that the film's creative team has striven for physical authenticity and fidelity to plot, and these are important values. They provide a basic strength, which, however, might still be made even stronger by some judicious last-ditch trimming. A number of minor scenes might be sliced out altogether, others refined to expository essentials, to sharpen and accelerate the flow of the drama.

Novel and film depict the decay and deterioration of a brilliant and idealistic psychiatrist (Jason Robards Jr.), whose love for and marriage to a wealthy patient (Jennifer Jones) ultimately consumes, dissipates and destroys him by engulfing him in the meaningless motives and glamorous leisure of upper social class Americans adrift in Europe in the prosperous 1920's. Moffat's screenplay emphasizes the point of transference of strength from doctor to patient, traces the reverse process in which heroine and hero travel in emotionally opposite directions as a result of their tragic relationship. That the climax, the wife's decision to divorce her husband, emerges less plausible in the film than in the novel is attributable to the less dimensional, less incisive examination of the two characters and their kinship within the necessarily naked form of drama.

Jennifer Jones, is the picture's strongest marquee value, although this outing is bound to boost Robards tremendously when word-of-mouth gets sufficient circulation. In short this looks like a film which should build at theatres. Miss Jones, absent from the screen since "A Farewell to Arms" in 1957, emerges a crisply fresh, intriguing personality and creates a striking character as the schizophrenic Nicole, Robards whose non - matinee-idol masculinity makes him an ideal choice for the role of the ill-fted doctor-husband, Dick Diver, plays with intelligence and conviction. John oFntaine is convincing as Nicole's shallow, older sister, performing with the right manifestation of frivolity and bite that her part requires.

Tom Ewell is believably wry and boozily doomed in a somewhat watered-down version of the expatriate Broadway composer Abe North. Paul Lukas delivers an excellent portrayal of Dr. Dohmler, the discerning mentor who warns Diver of the pitfalls of marriage to Nicole. Jill St. John plays the role of Diver's youthful actress-admirer with a bit too much naivete. Cesare Danova is suave as the adventurer who eventually lures Nicole away from her husband. Especially notable in the generally satisfactory supporting cast are Charles Fredericks, Sanford Meisner and Bea Benaderet. Moppets Leslie Farrell and Michael Crisalli are attractive as the Diver children.

Cameraman Leon Shamroy has captured some invigorating panoramic views of Continental locales, though occasionally the scenery tends to overwhelm the human factor, and Pacific Title has contributed a mood of mixed light and sombre tone in the attractive main title. Sets by Jack Martin Smith and Malcolm Brown are elegant and true by geographical, social and period standards. Bernard Herrmann's score is rich and expressive, and the rhapsodically romantic and melancholy title song by Sammy Fain and Paul Francis Webster not only haunts the mind but plays a part in the drama. The refrain has a bright commercial future, and very likely will contend for the 1962 Oscar. Pierre Balmain's gowns for the three leading ladies—Misses Jones, Fontaine and St. John—are flattering and accurately stylish for the period. Tube.

L'Oro di Roma
(The Gold of Rome)
(ITALO—FRENCH)

Rome, Jan. 9.

Lux Film release of Sancro Film-Ager Film-Cirac (Rome)-Contact Organization (Paris) coproduction. Stars Gerard Blain, Anna Maria Ferrero, Jean Sorel; features Filippo Scelzo, Paola Borboni, Andrea Checchi, Enzo Petito, Umberto Raho, Ugo D'Alessio, Rainiero di Cenzo, Luigi Casellato. Directed by Carlo Lizzani. Story and screenplay, Lizzani, Lucio Battistrada, assisted by Cesare Zavattini, Alberto Lecco; camera, Enrico Menxzeri; editor, Franco Fraticelli; music, Giovanni Fusco. This film reenacts the 1943 episode in which the German commandant of Rome offered the Eternal City's Jewish population their lives in exchange for 100 pounds in gold. Has good export possibilities in various areas on the strength of human conflict involved, and the underplayed way in which it's told. But some cuts are suggested for to help the pace.

Rather than on Nazi repression, the pic concentrates on efforts and internal conflicts of the Hebrew colony faced with what most feel will prove a life-saving barter, despite the warnings of (later proven correct) of a rebellious shoemaker who joins the partisans when the Germans go back on their promise and deport the Jews.

Inserted for good measure, but not nearly so effective, is the romance of a Jewish girl and a Catholic schoolmate. She becomes a Catholic in order to marry him, but at the fadeout joins her people and is deported.

Carlo Lizzani's direction is almost painstakingly detailed, with a resultant loss in pace and excitement which this needs. However, he does manage several vital points. Anna Maria Ferrero is the most believable character in the film, well backed by Andrea Checchi, as her father and Filippo Scelzo, as the head of the community. Gerard Blain is good as the shoemaker while Jean Sorel does his best with an insipid role as the girl's aristocratic suitor.

This production has semi-documentary flavor, and at its best (perhaps this was not in authors' intentions) when it depicts the community plight of Rome's wartime Ghetto. Other production credits are top level. Hawk.

Moon Pilot

Another Disney moneymaker, likely to gain b.o. momentum as it goes along. Amusing, frequently uproarious comedy-fantasy about a reluctant astronaut.

Hollywood, Jan. 12.

Buena Vista release of Walt Disney production. Stars Tom Tryon, Brian Keith, Edmond O'Brien; introduces Dany Saval; features Bob Sweeney, Kent Smith, Tommy Kirk. Directed by James Neilson. Screenplay, Maurice Tombragel, from SatEvePost serial by Robert Buckner; camera (Technicolor), William Snyder; editor, Cotton Warburton; music, Paul Smith; assistant director, Joseph L. McEveety. At first gulp, Walt Disney's "Moon Pilot" is a marvelous mixture of absolute nonsense, a thoroughly intoxicating, high-spirited and full bodied blend of moonshine and monkeyshine. A careful analysis of the ingredients, however, uncovers a more significant reason for its potent kick. For within the frivolous surface merriment of its stohy lurks a most disarmingly irreverent spoof of the current morbid preoccupation with reaching various heavenly bodies before anyone else beats us to it. It's a healthy country that can take time out to laugh at its most sacred, troublesome issues, and a healthy industry that supplies the tonic to ease such excess anxiety.

Filmgoers in general will accept this picture as light, gay, infectious diversion. For those, who probe deeper and detect something more significant at the core, so much the better. The upshot, at any rate, appears to be another moneymaker for Disney, though sans surefire marquee names.

Maurice Tombragel's screenplay, based on a SatEvePost serial by Robert Buckner, jovially scans the earthbound predicament of an unwilling, altitude-shy astronaut-to-be on a three-day pass prior to his junket to the moon. Under strict orders not to divulge the nature of his mission, the young man (Tom Tryon) instead becomes embroiled in a see-saw struggle between a comely miss (Dany Saval) from a superior society in outer space and a frustrated government security agent (Edmond O'Brien) who is convinced the mysterious lady is a spy.

"Moon Pilot" is an excellent piece of screen writing by Tombragel, especially uproarious when it is being most disrespectful. For example, in a top level conference room full of logical, strapping young candidates for the maiden moonshot, not a single one is willing to volunteer. Tombragel's script has an inclination towards repetition, and it tends to get missile-bound in its rather flabby romantic midsection, but its virtues far outweigh its faults. The picture is even more notable for its calibre of performance and direction. Every comic nuance is explored through James Neilson's deft, inventive direction.

Tryon accomplishes a winning portrayal of the reluctant spaceman. Here's an actor on the way up in filmdom, one of the few likely to bridge that historically discouraging gap between television and motion picture stardom.

For Miss Saval, a Gallic comedienne here making her U.S. film bow, it is a striking showcase. But the picture is thespically dominated not by the romantic leads but by two of Hollywood's most polished, versatile actors—Brian Keith and Edmond O'Brien. Keith, as a bombastic, hot-tempered Air Force general, plays with a sense of comic perception. His reactions to a stream of wild beatnik girls unconcernedly passing through a police lineup (one of the film's juiciest scenes) are worth the attention of any acting aspirant. O'Brien, as the exasperated govt. man, consistently gets the exactly correct flavor into his lines, occasionally turning an ordinary exchange of dialog into a wildly funny moment.

Others who perform with skill include Bob Sweeney, Tommy Kirk, Kent Smith, Simon Scott, Bert Remsen, Sarah Selby, Dick Whittinghill, Nancy Kulp and a most cooperative chimp who emerges unexpectedly from a space capsule at the climax of the film's elaborately clever opening scene.

The slick, attractive production is a reflection of filmmaking savvy in all areas, encompassing the compact, colorful art direction of Carroll Clark and Marvin Aubrey Davis, adroit photography of William Snyder, smoothly progressive editing of Cotton Warburton and vivid soundwork of mixer Harry M. Lindgren. A special joy is Paul Smith's score, which, by playing it straight, enhances the comic flavor. Had Smith attempted to compete by inserting his own comic musical comment, his score might have intruded. An additional bow to coproducer Bill Anderson and associate Ron Miller for a job well done. Tube.

Murder She Said

Margaret Rutherford out-Sherlocks Scotland Yard in an amiable, if improbable, murder mystery with a whimsical streak. Fine supporting item.

Hollywood, Jan. 10.

Metro release of George H. Brown production. Stars Margaret Rutherford, Arthur Kennedy, Muriel Pavlow; James Robertson-Justice; features Thorley Walters, Charles Tingwell. Directed by George Pollock. The spectacle of a grandmotherly amateur criminologist outsleuthing the skeptical, methodical professionals provides most of the fun in this somewhat unconvincing, but nonetheless engaging, murder mystery manufactured at Metro's British Studios in Borehamwood. Since the aged distaff Sherlock happens to be Margaret Rutherford, one of filmdom's foremost character comediennes, the thread of humor weaving through the whodunit is in good histrionic hands. The upshot, insofar as U.S. exhibition is concerned, is a choice item for double billing purposes, though distinctly shy the voltage and lustre to carry the meat end of the bill.

According to the David Pursall-Jack Seddon screenplay, from an adaptation by David Osborn of the Agatha Christie novel, "4.50 from Paddington," Miss Rutherford witnesses a murder transpiring in the compartment of a passing train. Since the police do not believe her story, and being an avid reader of mystery fiction, she takes it upon herself to solve the case, planting herself as maid within the household of the chief suspects. After considerable personal jeopardy and two follow-up homicides, she brings in the killer—a medic (Arthur Kennedy) with a greedy eye for the family inheritance.

The George H. Brown production is weak in the motivation area (Kennedy's mercenary vendetta and his campaign tactics register as pretty implausible and farfetched), and there's a sticky and unnecessary parting shot in which Miss Rutherford nixes an absurd marriage proposal from the stingy, irascible patriarch of the house (James Robertson-Justice), but otherwise matters purr along at a pleasant clip.

In addition to Miss Rutherford, who simply does what comes naturally (to comic actresses of her stature, that is), others who play prominent roles with flavor and assurance include Kennedy, Justice, Muriel Pavlow, Charles Tingwell, Thorley Walters, Conrad Phillips, Joan Hickson, Stringer Davis, Ronald Howard, Michael Golden and young Ronnie Raymond.

Giorno per Giorno, Disperatamente

(ITALIAN)

Rome, Jan. 9.

Titanus release of a Titanus-Vides (Franco Cristaldi) production. Features Tomas Milian, Nino Castelnuovo, Madeleine Robinson, Tino Carraro, Franca Bettoia, Riccardo Garrone, Isa Crescenzi. Directed by Alfredo Giannetti. Screenplay, Giannetti, Guido de Blase, from story by Giannetti; camera, Aiace Parolin; music, Carlo Rustichelli; editor, Ruggero Mastroianni. Previewed in Rome. Running time, 100 MINS.

This is strong stuff, served up in uncompromising fashion by a promising new director, Alfredo Giannetti, and his first film. Pic will need a hard sell, both in Italy and abroad, to overcome initial resistance to its central theme: insanity, and to its downbeat approach. Paradoxically, word-of-mouth should prove a help.

Writer-director asks his audience to picture the plight of a family burdened with a desperate problem. This is that of putting up with a partially insane son whose presence and tantrums, condoned by an almost fanatically devoted mother, have made victims of the two other members of the household: the father and the demented boy's brother. The mother day by day hopes that after each fit her son will recover. When, after one final attack of fury, she realizes that this will never be, she dies in his arms.

Director, unfortunately for the film's unity, never chooses to concentrate on one or other of his two main themes: the mother's clinical attachment, and the father's mental suffering at his family's disintegration. Either one would have made for a top-notch picture.

As it is, the effect is diluted, though total impact, especially of mad scenes, is frighteningly brutal and chilling.

Thomas Milian is excellent as the insane brother, one of the most realistic renderings of its sort. He gets fine support from Nino Castelnuovo, as his brother, and from Tino Carraro as his father. Madeleine Robinson tends to overstrain her role at times. An interesting cameo is provided by Isa Crescenzi, as a girl friend of the father's. All in all, Giannetti displays a fine hand for his story and its setting, and should be heard from in the future.

Technical plaudits go to lenser Aiace Parolin, working on largely real-life settings, and to Carlo Rustichelli for his apt musical scoring. Hawk.

Tale of a well-to-do boy's moral dilemmas about God and love is too full of aphorisms and surface characterizations to make much point. Static direction and talkiness tag this mainly a local item with foreign chances somewhat chancey.

A teenage boy and his sister see their parents breaking up. The boy comes into battle with a new teacher in the Jesuit school he attends. When he is thrown out for writing a blasphemous editorial in a student paper, he tries to commit suicide but is saved by the teacher's words.

This is the main fault of the film. Everything is done by dialog instead of being revealed through visual aspects and the comportment of the characters. It makes this production add up to soapy fare since it lacks the insight into the dilemmas which are just sketchily presented.

Direction does not help build this drama and the shallow characters are helped to become somewhat real by some good but undirected actors. It is technically okay but another in the literary, verbose type of films springing up here. It makes this questionable export fare. Mosk.

Light In The Piazza
(C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Novel, touching romantic drama about a mother's struggle to locate happiness for her mentally retarded daughter. Artistically framed vs. lush Italo backgrounds, and skillfully enacted, especially by Yvette Mimieux. Good b.o. contender.

Hollywood, Jan. 3.

Metro release of Arthur Freed production. Stars Olivia de Havilland, Rossano Brazzi; Yvette Mimieux. George Hamilton, Barry Sullivan; with Isabel Dean, Moultrie Kelsall, Nancy Nevinson. With "Light in the Piazza," first item out of its 1962 hopper, Metro has hit that elusive bull's-eye at which picturemakers inevitably aim—the film that achieves the rare and delicate balance of artistic beauty, romantic substance, dramatic novelty and commercial appeal, the latter being the natural end product of the first three. Discerningly cast and deftly executed under the imaginative guidance of director Guy Green, the Arthur Freed production, filmed in the intoxicatingly visual environments of Rome and Florence, is an interesting touching drama based on a highly unusual romantic circumstance created in prose by Elizabeth Spencer. The film has its flaws, but they are minor kinks in a satisfying whole. This is an especialy enticing picture for people who like pictures, and will be a special favorite with more mature distaff audiences.

Julius J. Epstein's concise and graceful screenplay, from Miss Spencer's story, examines with reasonable depth and sensible restraint the odd plight of a beautiful, wealthy 26-year-old American girl (Yvette Mimieux) who, as a result of a severe blow on the head in her youth, has been left with a permanent 10-year-old mentality. It is, too, the story of her mother's (Olivia de Havilland) dilemma—whether to commit the girl to an institution, as is the wish of her husband (Barry Sullivan), who superficially sees in the measure a solution to his marital instability, or pave the way for the girl's marriage to a well-to-do young Florentine fellow (George Hamilton) by concealing knowledge of the child's retarded intelligence. The lad is no mental pride himself, but he is a warmhearted, responsible boy. The mother pursues the latter course. As the newlywed couple leaves the church, she muses, "I did the right thing. I know I did." And the audience cannot help but feel the same way.

Lovely Miss Mimieux leaps to thespic stature and prominence with her enactment of this novel, afflicted character. Histrionically, it's her picture. Her career takes a resultant giant stride forward. The role requires an aura of luminous naivete mixed with childish vacancy and a passion for furry things and kind, attractive people. That's precisely what it gets from Miss Mimieux. Hamilton acceptably manages the Italian flavor and displays more animation than he normally has in the past. It's a good job.

Miss de Havilland's performance is one of great consistency and subtle projection. It is a pleasure to see her back on the screen after an extended absence. However, there seems to be a slight distortion in the concept of the character, for which the director, moreso than the actress, may be responsible. She is depicted as just a mite too endowed with bloodless aplomb in her own affairs of the heart, with a kind of pseudo-sexual oneupmanship that strips the character of the latently essential warmth indicated. It leaves gaps, question marks and discrepancies in the film's secondary romantic relationship, Miss de Havilland's with Hamilton's very-much-married father, Rossano Brazzi, who nevertheless plays with his patented Continental charm and persuasiveness. Sullivan is sound and true as the shallow husband, and there is top-notch support from Isabel Dean, Moultrie Kelsall and Nancy Nevinson.

Outside of that one reservation of character concept, Green's direction is outstanding. His, and cameraman Otto Heller's, regard of the two Italian cities is rich in scenic splendor and aesthetic perception. And Green's device of observing the development of love in the young couple through the eye-view of the mother brings the affair the right note of idyllic poetry, and avoids dull romantic shop talk. Frank Clarke's brisk, tidy editing is a plus, as is Frank White's discerning art direction and Mario Nascimbene's pleasing score. Christian Dior's gowns for Miss de Havilland are stylish and chic, but not always ideally suitable and complimentary to the durable prettiness of the vet actress. The concern, lamentably, seems more for fashion than for subject. Tube.

Mainly a moppet pic, this brings to life for the first time on the screen the most popular comic strip character in Europe. It has color and simplicity even if it lacks the snap and inventiveness in direction for more depth possibilities abroad. But this could serve for kiddie shows.

Tintin, a cowlick-haired teenager, his dog and friend Captain Haddock, a cantankerous sea captain, go to Turkey to pick up a boat the latter has inherited. It turns out to be a leaky scow. But mysterious attempts to kill them have them keeping it and finally finding a treasure. Pic has colorful Greek and Turkish backgrounds.

Direction takes advantage of scenic aspects but lacks the briskness to give this a more adventurous drive. Technical aspects are okay and supporting cast is adequate with a plus in Georges Wilson's sputtering Captain. The dog is also good. Mosk.

Film satire looks at the type of charity that comes once a year and more from rote than actual human feelings. It walks the tightrope of good taste but comes out ahead via adroit direction and pacing. But this thin tale looms mainly a specialized entry abroad with foreign language house chances more probable than for arty house.

A poor truck owner, who has bought it on credit, works for a group in a small Spanish town. He is in danger of losing his truck because he is behind on his payments. He spends the time trying to get these arranged while getting mixed up with the charity drive backed by a local cooking utensil manufacturer.

The various troubles of the poor, such as one dying, another getting drunk and another oblivious to the good being ladled out to him, background the truckdriver Placido's finally regulating his payments.

Director Luis Berlanga could have used more bite. But he has the saving grace of doing clever characters and he depicts a tender but accusing humanity. He makes his points but sometimes the plot seems repititious.

Acting is homogeneous. The slaps at unctuousness and false charity and its lack of sentimentality kept this out of the Venice and London Film Fests this year where it was invited. But it is allowed export. Technical qualities are good. Mosk.

"The Happy Thieves" belongs to that popular genus of film comedy depicting the zany misadventures of a band of lovably daring crooks who attempt to execute a bold, ingenious heist. In recent years, some notable screen success stories have been concocted out of this formula, generally of English origin and specifically several for which Alec Guinness attained international renown. Regrettably, this latest cinematic toast to th comic facets of larceny does not measure up to the standards and requirements of imaginative inspiration that must be realized by such a film in order for it to spur the enthusiastic word-of-mouth that attracts the more selective picturegoer.

As the first novel of former United Artists' overseas publicist "Oldest Confession" was notable for its bouncy prose style and grim moral implications, a life sentence for the hero, tragedy for everybody else. As a film the adaptation is an unpretentious, frivolous fresco-pade, with vivacious performances and the names of Rita Hayworth and Rex Harrison to adorn the marquee. Result should generate a mildly comfortable response.

Where the picture, filmed in Madrid, slips is in its instability of basic concept and in its misguided willingness to overlook and/or disregard important secondary plot ramifications, leaving the audience suspended, bewildered and frustrated and certain vital aspects of the story unresolved and ill-explained. In a film concerned with scientific criminal ingenuity, such lack of neatness is proportionately more disastrous.

John Gay's frequently amusing but rather awkwardly constructed screenplay, from Richard Condon's novel, "The Oldest Confession," describes the aborted operation of a trio of art thieves to pilfer an 8x11 Goya masterpiece (feet, not inches) from the Prado Museum in Madrid. Failure of the scheme to materialize as planned results from some unscheduled homicide and from the inescapable fact that the crime, like the picture, is anything but perfect.

In his best diabolically debonair tradition, Harrison carries off with aplomb his central role—the pro thief who rationalizes away the disfavor of his profession with the cozy philosophy that "there's a little touch of larceny in all successful men." Miss Hayworth, durably pleasing to the eye, is agreeably spirited as his unwilling spouse-accomplice, but the character introduces a serious overtone to the proceedings that is out of concert with the prevailing mood of farcical fun. Joseph Wiseman is endearing and amusing as the third member of the party, and especially effective aid is supplied by Gregoire Aslan, Virgilio Texera and Alida Valli, latter's presence missed in recent years by American screen audiences.

Director George Marshall has made the most of the merrier moments, but the film's basic uncertainty and tendency toward confusion and over-involvement have not been refined, a possibilty through more adroit direction. Art, photographic and technical contributions are adequate. An infectious theme ditty by Mario Nascimbene, featuring a whistler and the odd comic tones of a jews-harp or some such "Boing-boing" sound-producing instrument, weaves purposefully and consciously through the film to punctuate and comment on the action. It is used so extensively that it lingers obtrusively in the mind long after one leaves the theatre. That's one way to get on the Top 40 Tunes list. Tube.

Gaumont release of Jean-Jacques Vital-SNEG-Cineriz production. Stars Louis Jourdan, Yvonne Furneaux; features Pierre Mondy, Franco Silva, Bernard Dheran, Claudine Coster, Henri Guisol, Henri Vilbert. | Monticere | Jean-Claude Michel |
| Faria | Henri Guisol |
| Father | Franco Silva |
| Girl | Claudine Coster |
| Dantes | Henri Vilbert |

The old filmic war horse of Alexandre Dumas gets another production ride with this pic. This time it is somewhat overlong, with a tendency to bog down action with chatter. It looms mainly a local item with playoff possibilities abroad if pic is well sheared. It has the added assets of the Louis Jourdan name and color.

Young seaman Edmond Dantes (Louis Jourdan) is again railroaded to prison on his wedding day in early 18th Century France by three wily men each acting on his own. One for venal reasons, another because of his love for Dantes' wife, and the third to cover up his father's political activity. Dantes spends 17 years in prison and then escapes, finds a great treasure, and comes back to revenge himself on his three enemies.

Script gets grandiloquent in its messages about vengeance and honor. It appears to be trying to make a modern parallel. But its lack of character depth, the forced coincidences, and the missing action fillip to make the melodrama more telling are against it. Jourdan is made to seem somewhat pompous in his posturings and posings.

Color is good but Claude Autant-Lara's direction is too beavyhanded to give this well-worn story the gait and racy mounting it calls for. Supporting roles are good. This was made as a big major production, but does not seem to measure up. Mosk.

The "Michael Strogoff" film, based on the Jules Verne novel, did sock biz here a few years ago. This is a sequel having the same cast and producers. It is played simply, with action aspects passable. Production emerges a good moppet pic with foreign playoff possible on its color, scope and the Curt Jurgens name.

Strogoff here is attached to a Russian Prince's company to protect him in a campaign against a border Tartar country in the days of Czarist Russia. He manages to turn the headstrong Prince into a man of honor, get a girl who belongs to the Tartar group though of Russian strain, and emerge the stalwart hero.

Jurgens, somewhat puffy, slogs through his role with the right scowlicy and righteousness while Capucine deadpans the enemy.

Remainder of cast is good. Also this gets nice production dress and technical assists from producer Emile Natan. It also has the right workmanlike direction from W. Tourjansky. Like any western, this has its black and white characters, obvious action and skullduggery. It might repeat the success of its predecessor over here, but remains mainly good as dualer fare in the foreign field. Mosk.

This picture about the man, "who can't take it with him," Everyman, should do good biz in German language countries for which it is intended. But it's a dubious entry for the U.S. This is a German make with mostly Austrian stars.

Film revolves around the presentiments of death which Everyman, played by Walther Reyer, experiences. He finally repents, although at times he is not bad at heart. Reyer, who will be remembered for his excellent acting at Salzberg last season, repeats his performance in this. He is at his best in the scene when all his friends desert him. Kurt Heintel is "Death," and very good.

Ellen Schwiers' performance as "Paramour" is flawless as is Wolfgang Gasser as "Journeyman." Heinrich Schweiger plays the "Devil" with a human touch and really steals the pic. Alma Siedler as Everyman's Mother is impressive.

Director Gottfried Reinhardt is responsible for the actors looking into the camera too often. In legit this is okay but not in pictures since on the stage talking to the audience is common practice in this play.

The original Hofmansthal manuscript was used. The actors speak only in rhymes. Some of the rhymes are worse than rock-and-roll lyrics.

Ernst Krenek contributed lots of music, and there's a dance song that even has a melody.

Cameraman Kurt Hasse did a nice job. Heinz Rosen in charge of the choreography had a difficult task in getting his excellent dancers moving to the dance music by Krenek.

No new sets were used, which makes this seemingly high budgeted picture, a middle-budgeted one.

The Minister of Education gave this the top ranking classification but film patrons may not. Maas.

One cannot help feeling sorry for Helmut Kaeutner. Despite all his ambition, one failure follows the other. Germany's film director seems to have lost the knack of doing a good film. He appears to have tried too much and achieved too little. His latest, "The Dream of Lieschen Mueller," shows ambition and even imagination, but the outcome is neither fish nor fowl. And its a dull picture. Domestically, the attractive cast and film's title may provide sufficient playdates. However, this is a very dubious export item.

Los Angeles, Jan. 16.

Firstruns continue to shine here this stanza. Lineup is brightened by the first general run of "Breakfast at Tiffany's", which shapes wow $31,000 in four situations. Three other openers are fair to mild. Best of these is "Happy Thieves" which shapes okay at four hardtops. "Bachelor Flat" is fair in two spots while "Devil's Hand" is modest in two also.

Among regular holdovers, "Flower Drum Song" leads with a soeko $21,000 likely for fourth week at Warner Hollywood followed by "Majority of One" aiming for big $15,000 in third at the Village.

Both "Lover Come Back," fourth at Warner Beverly, and "One, Two, Three" in fifth at Hollywood Par, should hit $12,000 each, both big.

Several hardticket pictures look especially strong, "West Side Story" being torrid in fifth Chinese frame, "Judgment at Nuremberg," rich in fourth at Pantages, and "El Cid," socko in fourth Carthay round.

Estimates for This Week

Crest, Baldwin, Hillstreet, Pix (State-Metropolitan-Prin) (750; 1,800; 2,752; 810; 90-$1.50) — "Happy Thieves" (UA) and "Have to Run Fast" (UA). Oke $17,000 or near. Last week, Crest, Pix, "Pocketful of Miracles" and "Fastest Gun Alive" (UA) (2d wk) $8,800; Baldwin, "Bachelor in Paradise" (M-G) and "Bridge to Sun" (M-G) (2d wk), $7,000; Hillsfreet "Babes in Toyland" (BV) (3d wk) and "Untamed West" (Indie) (2d wk), $3,400.

'Roman' Fair $11,000 In Denver; 'Song' 12G, 4th

Denver, Jan. 16.

National Western Stock Show usually brings huge crowds into this Mile-High city but severe weather this year has kept many at home. Biggest coin total is being racked up by "Seven Wonders of World," in 13th round at the Cooper, largely because so many out-of-towners had advance reservations. Standout showing is being made, however, by "Flower Drum Song," still socko in fourth stanza at Centre. Lone newcomer, "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" is rated fair at Orpheum. "Pocketful of Miracles" shapes nice in fourth Paramount week.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (900; $1-$1.25) — "Mysterious Island" (Col) (4th wk). Fair $2,500. Last week, $5,500.

'Clock' Rugged $7,000, Port.; 'Song' Hot 7½G, 4

Portland, Ore., Jan. 16.

City is bogged down with long-playing holdovers and first-run biz currently is starting to hit the skids. About the best bet of those playing at regular scale is "Flower Drum Song," which is rated lusty in fourth round at Broadway. Lone newcomer, "Twist Around Clock" looms fine at Orpheum. "Babes in Toyland" is good in fourth session at Fox.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (4th wk). Loud $7,500. Last week, $8,700.

'2d Time' Brisk $10,000 in K.C.; 'Song' Lusty 6G

Kansas City, Jan. 16.

Picture business is rambling into the new year largely on holdovers here. Only the Paramount has a new bill this session with "Hey, Let's Twist" and "Too Late Blues," rated fairish. Big holdover is "Second Time Around" which looms brisk in third in two houses. "Pocketful of Miracles" continues good at Roxy, and "King of Kings" sturdy at the Capri. "Flower Drum Song" is holding a nice pace at the Brookside in fourth. Last week saw the season's worst weather with sub-zero temperatures following a 10-inch snowfall, severely buffeting weekend trade.

Estimates for This Week

Brookside (Fox Midwest-Nat. Theatres) (800; $1-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (4th wk). Good $6,000, comeback after last week's storm. Last week, $5,500.

Capri (Durwood) (1,260; $1.25-$2.50)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (10th wk). Nifty $8,000; holds. Last week, $7,500.

Empire (Durwood) (1,200; .90-$2) —"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (reissue) (9th wk). Surprising $6,000. Last week, $6,500.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 90-$1.25) —"The Truth" (Indie) (4th wk). Handsome $2,500. Last week, same.

Fairway (FMW-NT) (700; $1)— "Watch Your Stern" (Magna) (2d wk). Lively $1,500. Last week, $1,800.

Paramount (Blank-UP) (1,900; $1-$1.25)—"Hey, Let's Twist" (Par) and "Too Late Blues" (Par). Fairish $7,000. Last week, "Roman Spring" (WB) (2d wk-5 days), $2,500.

Plaza, Granada (FMW-NT) (1,630, 1,217; $1-$1.25)—"Second Time Around" (20th) (3d wk). Bright $10,000 or near. Last week, $15,000.

Roxy (Durwood) (850; $1-$1.50) —"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (4th wk). Steady $5,000. Last week, $7,000.

Rockhill (Little Art Theatres) (750; $1-$1.25)—"Devil's Eye" (Indie) (3d wk). Oke $1,500. Last week, same.

Uptown (FMW-NT) (2,043; $1-$1.25)—"Babes in Toyland" (BV) (4th wk). Lean $4,500, but ahead of last week's $4,000.

Minneapolis, Jan. 16.

Local boxoffice continues to contend with the handicap imposed by the worst winter weather in years. Temperatures as low as 20 below zero at night when the bulk of showhouse patronage must be corralled, strong winds which make the cold much more intense, icy streets and daily snowfalls undoubtedly are keeping many potential filmgoers home.

Lone newcomer, "Twist Around Clock," shapes good at Lyric. "Flower Drum Song" is rated socko at the Mann in fourth session. "One, Two, Three" looks neat in fourth at St. Louis Park. "Second Time Around" looms good in third at State.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.75-$2.65)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (10th wk). Winds up a successful engagement. Good $5,000. Last week, $4,000.

Cold Weather Sloughs Chi Albeit 'Innocents' Socko 20G, 'Roman' Oke 12G, 'Song' Whopping 25G in 4th

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Firstrun biz this round is shaping as a repeat of last week's winter-blitzed tallies. "The Innocents" is opening to a sock $20,000 at the Woods. The debut of "Rocco And His Brothers" looks socko $5,000 at the World. "The Joker" is taking nice first round coin at the Carnegie. Monroe pair of "Breathless" and "Wicked Go To Hell" should do okay.

"Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" is notching an okay third week at the Roosevelt. "Summer and Smoke" rates solid in its Esquire third. "The Mark" is firm for the same session at the Surf while "Call Me Genius" looks to post a tidy third round at the Cinema.

Fourth termers are showing the most strength, with "Flower Drum Song" nailing an excellent session despite the cold. "Babes In Toyland" is shaping slight in State-Lake fourth. "One, Two, Three" is rated slick at United Artists also in fourth. "Pocketful of Miracles" shapes good at Oriental for fourth.

On hardticket scene, "El Cid" is registering a socko fourth canto at Cinestage while "King of Kings" is modest in 13th Todd round.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (495; $1.25-$1.80)—"The Joker" (Lope). Happy $4,200. Last week, "Don Quixote" (M-G) (3d wk), $3,900.

'Clock' Big $8,000 In Omaha; 'Flat' Fast 8½G; 'Song' Okay $6,000, 3d

Omaha, Jan. 16.

Biz is uneven at downtown first runs this stanza with new entries shaping best. Excellent weather break on weekend, when another snow was predicted, aided greatly. "Twist Around Clock" is rated big at three houses, while "Bachelor Flat" is solid at the Omaha. Third week of "Flower Drum Song" at Orpheum is okay but "Babes in Toyland" has been disappointing at State in all four rounds. Hard-ticket "Seven Wonders of World" continues to amaze in its ninth session at Cooper.

Estimates for This Week

Admiral, Chief, Skyview (Blank; 1,239, 1,000; 1,200; 75-$1)—"Twist Around Clock" (Col) and "Weekend With Lulu" (Col). Big $8,000. Last week, "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) and "Flight That Disappeared" (UA) (2d wk), $5,500.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

'Kings' Boff 20G, St. L.; 'Song' 11G

St. Louis, Jan. 16.

Sub-zero temperatures knocked firstrun biz into a cocked hat last week but trade is picking up somewhat this session. Aside from arty theatre entries, there is not a single newcomer this round. "King of Kings" is perking up way past the total of a week ago at Esquire.

Top biz is being garnered by "Flower Drum Song," still smash in fourth week at Ambassador. "Second Time Around" looms good in third at the huge Fox. "Babes in Toyland" shapes fair in fourth at State.

Estimates for This Week

'Story' Wow 17½G, Philly; 'Song' 17G

Philadelphia, Jan. 16.

Pleasant weekend weather jammed midtown area and boosted grosses all along the line. City is 100% holdover or extended-run, but some houses are actually topping last week's totals. "Innocents" is rated tidy in second week at the Trans-Lux while "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" looks okay in third at the Viking.

"Flower Drum Song" is pushing ahead of third week to land a lusty session in fourth round at Stanley. Pic is getting top coin in town for regular-scale pic. "West Side Story" is wow in 10th at Midtown on $2.75 top while "El Cid" looks great in fourth at Goldman. "One, Two, Three" looks neat in fourth at Randolph.

Estimates for This Week

B'way Uneven But 'Majority'-Stage Bright $150,000; 'Flat' Fancy 17G; 'Judgment' Wow 37G, 'One, Two' 25G

There are only two new bills at Broadway firstruns this stanza outside of arty theatre entries, which leaves the burden on numerous holdovers, most of which are showing the strain of being held too long. Usual post-holiday week letdown at the wickets plus some extremely cold weather also will be reflected at the boxoffice in the current week.

"Majority of One" with new stageshow looks to land a solid $150,000 opening session at the Music Hall, and is holding. "Bachelor Flat" is heading for a nice $17,000 in initial round at the Forum.

"One, Two, Three" shapes big $25,000 in fourth stanza at the Astor and a great $16,000 at the arty Fine Arts. "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" looks like okay $21,000 in third week at the Capitol. "The Innocents" held with good $20,000 in third session at the Criterion where it is now in its fourth week.

"Pocketful of Miracles" finished its fourth stanza with an okay $15,000 at the Victoria. "La Dolce Vita" held in amazing fashion with a boffo $32,000 in fifth session, daydating the Embassy and Beekman.

Paramount is bringing in "Tender is the Night" tomorrow (Thurs.) night, with regular run starting on Friday (19). Par is winding fairly successful four-week run of "Second Time Around."

"Judgement at Nuremberg" continued with capacity $37,000 in fourth week at the Palace. "West Side Story" shapes near-capacity $46,000 in 13th week at the Rivoli. "King of Kings" still is socko with $30,000 in current (14th) session at the State.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" continued big with $20,300 in fourth round at the Henry Miller. "El Cid" held at smash $40,000 in fourth stanza at the Warner, now being in fifth week.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)—"One, Two, Three" (UA) (4th wk). This week winding today (Wed.) is heading for big $25,000 after $27,000 for third, way below estimate. Stays on.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk). This session ending today (Wed.) looks to hit okay $21,000 after $24,500 in second.

Criterion (Moss) (1,520; $1.25-$2.40) — "Innocents" (20th) (4th wk). Third stanza ended Sunday (14) was good $20,000. Second week was $20,500. Daydating with 72d Street Playhouse.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; 90-$2.75)—"Summer and Smoke" (Par) (9th wk). This stanza ending today (Wed). looks like nice $13,000 after $16,000 in eighth week.

Embassy (Guild Enterprises) (500; $1.50-$2.50)—"La Dolce Vita" (Astor) (6th wk). Fifth session ended yesterday (Tues.) was wow $20,000 after $20,800 for fourth. Daydating with Beekman.

Henry Miller (Gilbert Miller) (800; $1.50-$3)—"Liaisons Dangereuses" (Astor) (5th wk). Fourth round completed Sunday (14) was big $20,300 after $22,500 on third week, playing three-a-day, hardticket policy.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1.50-$3.50)—"Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA) (5th wk). Fourth week finished last night (Tues.) was capacity $37,000 on 10 performances after capacity at same figure for third week, and like number of shows. Stays on, with advance now around $250,000 and tickets printed until July.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th). Opened last Friday (12), with nice $17,000 loming for first week. In ahead, "Wonders of Aladdin" (M-G) (3d wk), fair $8,500.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Second Time Around" (20th) (4th-final wk). This week winding looks like fair $15,000 for 6 days after $22,000 in third. "Tender is the Night" (20th) opens Thursday (18) night, daydating with Plaza. Regular run starts Friday (19).

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75)—"Majority of One" (WB) and new stageshow. Opening week ending today (Wed.) looks like solid $150,000, good for time of year. Holding. In ahead, "Babes in Toyland" (BV) and Christmas stageshow (4th wk), dipped sharply to nice $150,500 after $207,000 for third round.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.50-$3.50)

'Raft' Fairish $8,000 In Balto; 'Roman' Lean 4G; 'Song' $7,000 for 4th

Baltimore, Jan. 16.

"George Raft Story" and "Invasion Quartet" are the only new films on downtown scene currently. The first is off to fairish start at the Hipp but the second is quite mild for opener at the Little. Of the holdovers, "King of Kings" in fourth week at the Town, is best.

"Flower Drum Song" is okay in fourth at Stanton. "Pocketful of Miracles" is nice in fourth at the Mayfair. "Babes in Toyland" is rated good in fourth at the New.

Estimates for This Week

Aurora (Rappaport) (367; 90-$1.50)—"Kind Hearts, Coronets" (Cont) and "Man in White Suit" (Cont) (reissues) (2d wk). Down to okay $1,500. Last week, $2,000.

New Formula for Third Release in UK May Be Thwarted by Rank Org.

London, Jan. 16.

A new formula to maintain the third release in the United Kingdom, in jeopardy ever since John Davis hosted an all-industry dinner last summer, looks like being thwarted by the refusal of the Rank Organization to fall in with a trade plan to set up a committee of bookers representing Circuits Management Assn. and the main independent groups.

Though efforts are being made to persuade the Rank group to operate the new plan for a trial period, the industry feeling is that the company is anxious to maintain its independence in selection of programs.

A working party set up after the June dinner, as now made a report to the five major trade associations, and it has recommended the formation of a consortium of bookers, comprising a representative from Circuits Management Assn., Granada, Essoldo, Shipman & King, with an independent chairman.

This group would seek suitable films for playing the third release, and if the recommendation was unanimously accepted, that film could play a substantial majority of the theatres which hitherto played the third release. Even if there was not a unanimous acceptance of the choice, it is felt that there would be a substantial number of exhibs willing to show the film.

The working party has suggested that in such cases where the committee of bookers could not agree a suitable film for a particular date, exhibs concerned would go it alone and fill the gap individually.

The industry has been asked by the working party to put the plan into operation for a trial run of six months, and the first organization to give its assent is the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. Other trade organizations have already considered the plan, but have declined to indicate reaction pending a more positive decision from the Rank group.

In compiling its report, the working party had evidence that the product situation appeared to be more hopeful than had been previously expected. Info on available American product came from VARIETY and the Theatre Owners of America. The assessment of product availability did not take into account Continental releases, and recognized that there would be a product scarcity during the "reluctant release" period of November and December.

Mex Nat'l Actors Assn. Chief Claims '61 Worst Year Ever For Players

Mexico City, Jan. 9.

The year 1961 was one of the worst crisis years for Mexican actors and probably the worst in the history of show biz in the Republic, according to Jaime Fernandez, secretary of the interior of the National Assn. of Actors. Fernandez scored sundry optimistic statements purporting to indicate a magnificent banner year in pictures and other phases of the Mexican entertainment industry.

In a cold, realistic statement, Fernandez said: "This year sum total of pictures produced comes to 42, and with resumed activity total will not exceed 45 or 46. Normally, Mexican production is from 92 to 96 films a year, which means that this past year we are 50% below normal. This is full proof of the crisis which has affected actors, and with them, technicians and other elements of the motion picture industry."

Fernandez also revealed that there has been a crisis in the legit theatre, vaudeville and in all entertainment activities in general. In the legit theatre, there has been a chronic lack of financing, this holding back the number of productions staged. Fernandez expressed the hope that the winter season may improve the situation somewhat and give union members a chance to work.

CARRERAS TO N.Y. FOR HUDDLES WITH U, COL

London, Jan. 16.

James Carreras, head of Hammer Films, left over the weekend for N.Y. to hold meetings with Columbia and Universal on current and forthcoming productions for the two companies. He took with him the first show print of "Pirates of Blood River" which his organization has made for Col.

Hammer has three new films on the slate for Columbia—"Ruffians," based on Alun Owen's play about teenage crime in Liverpool; "Maniac," a new thriller, and J. B. Priestley's "Old Dark House" which the company is to make in association with William Castle.

For Universal, Hammer is completing the $1,000,000 remake of "Phantom of Opera."

Carreras, who is second assistant International Chief Barker of the Variety Club, will be officiating at the Installation Luncheon at the N.Y. Astor Hotel today (Tues.) of officers of New York Tent 35. He will return to London next weekend.

W. Germans Now No. 1 Tourists

Frankfurt, Jan. 9.

Europe's richest travelers, the West Germans, now rank as the most tour-conscious and vacation-conscious people in the entire world, having moved the traveling Americans down to No. 2 slot. A study of the Assn. of West German Travel Offices reveals that an alltime high of 45% of the West Germans took vacations away from home this year, as against only 40% of the Americans who took travel-time.

Of the West Germans who took to the road, 35% or 5% more than last year, went outside their own land. The Germans thus represented the largest percentage of foreign tourists in Austria and Italy, and they also descended in masses upon Switzerland, France and Spain.

Interestingly, the trend is away from tours and toward the private journeys to remote countries. The average trip outside of Germany was increased from the 14 days of 1960 to 16 days last year. The average tourist spent about $75 during his stay away from home.

West Germans are now the world's No. 1 target for vacation advertising, for the lures of hotels, nightclubs and restaurants outside of their own land. And it's figured that the German tourists in 1961 spent an all-time high of about $1,000,000,000 on their trips to other countries.

Right now, the West German travel offices are offering journeys to the Summer Olympics in Tokyo, slated for 1964, and getting the down-payments for this lengthy journey. Average cost for these vacations runs from $1,250 to double that figure. Travel officials noted that many Germans are planning to combine the trip to Tokyo with junkets around the world.

Christmas and New Years' reservations this year to the fashionable sports centers of Garmisch and Berchtesgaden in Germany, Kitzbuehl in Austria, and St. Moritz and Arosa in Switzerland were almost completely booked.

About 44% of the traveling Germans take their vacations in the winter time. Many visitors headed for the troubled city of Berlin at Christmas time. With a tremendous campaign here to "remember Berlin," in the minds of the sentimental Germans, tortured by the Russian division of their city, it is a patriotic and almost religious duty to see Berlin. The Frankfurt Central Tourist Office reported that about 200% more trips to Berlin were booked this year than in 1960 for this holiday period.

Reds Drive W. German Circus From Yugoslavia

Frankfurt, Jan. 9.

Latest victim of the East-West colder war is the famed Busch Circus of West Germany. Circus was on a tour of Yugoslavia when it had to be called back home because of Commie-inspired incidents against the performers and animals.

Circus director Oskar Hoppe explained: "We could not stay in Yugoslavia any more. The feeling of Yugoslavians against West Germany intensified day to day. The people saw the chance to dole out their anger against our circus. Our artists could not perform without actual danger for their lives."

Predict Brisk Cinema Biz In Aussie For '62

Sydney, Jan. 9.

The end of last year in the Aussie show biz has been an exceedingly bright one, and 1962 promises to be very strong at the box-office, according to such toppers as Norman B. Rydge, Greater Union Theatres; Ernest Turnbull, Hoyts Theatres; Bernie Freeman, Metro; Harold Bowden, J.C. Williamson Ltd; Lloyd Martin, Tivoli Theatres; and Garnet Carroll, indie legit producer.

Powerful biz is being recorded in the cinema field with "South Pacific" (20th) fourth year; "Oklahoma" (20th) past its ninth week; "Sundowners" (WB); "Spartacus" (U), past its 57th week; "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama), "Blue Hawaii" (Par), "King of Kings" (M-G); "Return to Peyton Place" (20th); "Swiss Family Robinson" (M-G), and "Voyage to Bottom of Sea" (20th).

British pix also doing well over the holidays coin were "Carry On Regardless" (BEF) and "Double Bunk" (BEF).

Cinema toppers viewing the new year's product lineup firmly believe films as a medium for mass entertainment will out-bid all opposition throughout 1962.

Product listed for the coming season includes "Guns of Navarone" (Col), "The Hustler" (20th), "El Cid" (BEF), "Come September" (U), "Longest Day" (20th), "Satan Never Sleeps" (20th), "The Alamo" (UA), "West Side Story" (UA), "Exodus" UA), "My Geisha" (Par), "Errand Boy" (Par), "Pleasure of His Company" (Par), "Ugly American" (U), "Four Horsemen of Apocalypse" (M-G) and "The Music Man" (WB).

Legit Looms Big

J. C. Williamson Ltd., key legit operators, will bring in "The Little Singers of Paris," Victor Borge, "Carnival," Margot Fontaine (in association with James Laurie), Marcelle Marceau and the Luisillo Spanish Dancers. J. C. W. currently is playing "Oliver" and the Aussie comedy, "The Sentimental Bloke." Deal also has been set for "The Miracle Worker."

Garnet Carroll, indie producer, presently has two hits here — "Sound of Music" and "Come Blow Your Horn." Carroll is now dickering for several Broadway hits to complete his 1962 schedule.

Tivoli Circuit presently has a smash hit with "The Ice Follies," which will run into 1962, with "Golden Days" revue following.

Harry Wren is planning another Japanese revue, and Lee Gordon, operator of the Stadium Loop, already has set a big U.S. show for late January to introduce "The Twist" to Aussie patrons.

'Mother India' Set For Moscow, Jan. 26

Madras, Jan. 9.

With Mehboob Productions Hindi pic, "Mother India," in color set to be shown in Moscow on Indian Republic Day, Jan. 26, the Reds also have purchased "Headmaster" and "Masoom" and "Love in Simla," latter two in Hindi for commercial distrib.

The Soviets too are planning to hold festival weeks in Calcutta and Bombay. Films to be shown include "First Flight to the Stars" and "May Parade in Moscow."

"Twist Around the Clock" (Col) and "Hey, Let's Twist" (Par) are gracing two off-the-main-stem arty firstruns with okay biz in store . . . The late German Hollywood director Ernst Lubitsch being "rehabilitated" here via the sock arty runs of two of his pix "To Be Or Not to Be" and "Heaven Can Wait." Long articles are appearing on his work in daily papers and specialized mags and a new spurt of reissues of his pix are in store . . . Word from India that noted Bengali pic director Satyajit Ray, who made the trilogy ("Pather Panchali," "Aparajito," "The World of the Apu"), is beginning a sort of Indian "La Dolce Vita" in Darjeeling, "Kanchin Jungha," which will look at Indian high life during two days of a family of means at a noted resort. It wil lexplore their taking stock of their lives and outlooks and will be his first pic in color.

Word from Israel that writer Yael Dayan is adapting her first book "New Face in the Mirror" for an Israeli film version. Story concerns a young girl in the army and the book caused controversy on its appearance . . . A meeting of as many as the top world film directors as can come will take place in the context of the next Cannes Film Fest (May 7-21) . . . Metro's "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "King of Kings" due late this month with "West Side Story" (UA) in March . . . Cinemiracle's "Windjammer" will open the new Cinerama hardtop theatre, the Empire, later this month. Local Cinerama group bought it for Cinerama showing . . . Actor Christian Marquand turning director for "Les Grands Chemins" based on a book by Jean Giono. Roger Vadim acts as technical supervisor. Marquand hopes to make the first true French western with this pic . . . The offbeater "Last Year in Marienbad" got more than 150,000 people past the wickets in its first run. Local staid paper Le Monde ran a query among readers and most were for the pic with a good many against. It stacked up a must see no matter what the reactions, but mainly among more selective filmgoers. Subsequent rentals are now on and shape good but not up to Paris takes.

After all the false starts Raoul Levy's "Marco Polo" is now rolling in a Yugoslav studio. He wants it to be a rollicking actioner like the old Douglas Fairbanks pix of yore. Star Alain Delon is also happy at this change of pace after playing a saintly brother in "Rocco and His Brothers," a killer in "Purple Noon" and a businessman who prefers money to love in Michaelangelo Antonioni's new Italo pic "Eclipse." Delon says the label that Yank critics put on him as the French James Dean has fortunately worn off.

London

Sir Laurence Olivier returned to Ardmore Studios, near Dublin, immediately after the Christmas vacation, to continue filming on James Woolf's "Term of Trial," which Peter Glenville is directing for release through Warner Bros. Simone Signoret joined the unit from Paris after the holidays . . . "Carry On Cruising" will be the first Anglo-Amalgamated comedy in the "Carry On" series to be lensed in color . . . "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers" has chalked up over 6,000 playdates in the British Isles and is still going strong. It has played Hull 36 times and recently completed a return West End date at the Coliseum . . . Michael Relph and Basil Dearden last week started filming "Life for Ruth," starring Michael Craig, Patrick McGoohan and Janet Munro. It is based on a Janet Green-John McCormick screenplay, and the unit is locationing in Sunderland before coming in to Pinewood Studios . . . "Detain and Arrest" is the latest title of Val Guest's upcoming production, which starts on location in Brighton on Feb. 26. It is based on Hillary Waugh's "Sleep Long My Love," and was originally entitled "Jigsaw." After locations in Sussex and London the unit will move to the Associated British Elstree studios.

Herbert van Thal has joined the literary department of London Management. Antecedents in publishing. He's just completed editing the unpublished papers of Ernest Newman. His book "James Agate, An Anthology," was published last July. In new berth his chief concern will be the expansion and development of its literary side and he'll work with publishers, newspapers and magazines. Department is headed by John van Eyssen, who concentrates on film properties, and working with him is Liz Keys, who is concerned mainly with theatrical and television plays.

Rome

Indro Montanelli, the Italian columnist who recently debuted as a film director of his own "Dreams End At Dawn" has written a second stage play, "Kibbutz," about one of the voluntary collective farms in Israel. It will be presented at the St. Erasmo theatre-in-round at Milan.

Plot revolves around the figure of a woman—the founder and guiding spirit of the kibbutz. One of her colleagues denounces the woman as a former girl-friend of a German S.S. officer. Taken before the kibbutz elders she denies nothing, advancing the oldest, and possibly truest, of feminine justification: she loved him! She is about to be handed over to the authorities when the chairman of the Kibbutz Committee of Elders also makes a confession: his real name is Volterra and a quarter of a century ago, as a Jew in Italy, he was a Fascist . . . What Montanelli is apparently trying to say is what Dostoevski said many years before with his famous line in "The Brothers Karamazoff": "we are all guilty."

Cosmopolitan Cast In Zurich 'Fledermaus'

Zurich, Jan. 9.

An all-new Herbert Graf production of Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," which opened on New Year's Eve at the Zurich Stadttheatre, may set a new precedent in Switzerland for "production." Complete set of costumes, from principals to choristers, was individually designed in sumptuous turn-of-the-century style by ex-Hollywood but Swiss designer, Rene Hubert. Materials, all silk, as well as shoes, headgear, broideries, ballet tights and men's white-tie-and-tails have been furnished and executed by 11 leading Swiss firms, simply against program and advertising credits.

Cosmopolitan cast includes Conductor Sam Krachmalnick, assistant director Lotfi Mansouri and mezzosoprano Regina Sarfaty (Prince Orlovsky) who are Americans; Adele Leigh, who sings Rosalinda, is British; Hubert, set designer Max Roethlisberger, soprano Eva Maria Rogner (Adele) and comedian Alfred Rasser (Frosch) are Swiss, as is choreographer Michel de Lutry; whilst tenor Rudolf Schock, the Eisenstein, Ralph Telasko (Frank), Wolfram Mertz (Dr. Falke) and Leonhard Paeckl (Dr. Blind) are from Austria. Tenor Walter Hesse as Alfred is German. All sing in German.

German Pix Down to Half of Total Gross of Native Films in 1960-61; U. S. Distribs Upped Receipts 5%

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Jan. 16.

For the first time in their post-war history, the West German film industry has been able to retain less than half of the gross receipts for the German-lingo films playing in this country.

For the 1960-61 film calendar (which means, for most companies, for the pix which ended their German playdates in September 1961), the German product accounted for only 40.7% of the total boxoffice income. Austrian films added another 5.7%.

That was a drop, for the two German-language film-making countries to less than 50% of the market, lowest figure in years. During the previous 1959-60 calendar, the German films accounted for 46.6% of the grosses, and the Austrian films added 6.5%, to bring the total to 53.1% for both.

Meantime, both American distributors and the Italian distribs did better than in the previous year. While the final American figures are not yet in, it is expected that the U.S. distribs in West Germany upped their receipts by 4 to 5%, to control over a third of the West German take or a total of over $24,000,000.

The entire boxoffice gross income for this period in West Germany including the Saarland and Berlin came to about $80,000,000. Another factor accounting for the dwindling returns to the West German distribs was that fewer films were produced in this market for the 1960-61 season. As against the German-lingo output of 120 films in the previous season, the 1960-61 calendar showed only about 100 German-language releases.

In the same period, too, there was a dropoff of attendance at the boxoffice. The Red wall that was built up in Berlin on Aug. 12 meant that East Berliners were unable to attend the cinemas in the western half of the split city. This single factor meant about 12,000,000 fewer visitors to the theatres in West Berlin, a slice of about $1,500,000 off the annual total boxoffice receipts in this single city, alone.

Unfair Tele Taxation, Competish

Competition with television, and the unfair government situation re taxing the films and not tele, are cited as other factors for the lower income that the films represent. The West German film industry handed out a hefty $26,250,000 during this particular period for entertainment taxes to the federal and state governments, a fact often criticized by the film industry, which noted that tele offers free pix and other forms of entertainment. Also that the set owners pay only a monthly five mark fee ($1.25), while the government levies no entertainment tax at all on this competing medium.

Ticket prices for the 1960-61 calendar were raised slightly in West Germany, to an average of 1.43 marks (about 34c), an increase of 3.6% over the previous year. However, this did not mean enough added income to account for the 9% fewer tickets sold. And generally, the exhibitors and distributors do not feel that ticket prices can be raised any higher during the forthcoming period.

The West German Distributors Assn., which released these figures, also points to the fact that the Common Market is growing, and with it, the influence of the Common Market countries' films is being intensified. In West Germany, the government has just recently anted up $1,000,000 in premiums to a handful of films which it consider "outstanding" or worthy of showing the German image abroad. But meantime, the English films received about 30% support from the government, and the Italian films get half of that amount. Financial help in the form of added premiums, or removal of some of the entertainment tax, has been urged by the West German producers so they can survive.

Some Tax Relief

Some tax relief was felt during this period. And the amount of entertainment tax, $26,250,000, actually was a drop-off of 12.9% from the amount handed over to the fiscal authorities the previous year.

The West Germans are increasingly worried that without some added government help, the number of German-language films for the upcoming season will reach only about 90, and thus the country's native income will fall even more.

Average loss on many of the West German films has amounted to about $87,500. Some help is absolutely essential if the industry is to survive, the West German distributors charge.

Of the nine major West German distribs who accounted for virtually all of the German pictures last year, four firms have already merged or cut down, and each of these four was responsible for from 12 to 15 productions during the 60-61 period. West German distribs point out that many of the theatres in smaller cities will be forced to close if they cannot be supplied with the German language films that represent the bulk of interest to their audience.

France Produced 104 Pix in 1961

Paris, Jan. 16.

France turned out 104 films last year, 70 being French and 34 majority French coproductions of which 28 were with Italy. This is 20 films less than made in 1960, but it is considered healthy because the extra ones were part of the New Wave bandwagon that year, many of which are still finding it hard to get playdates.

In distribution, 362 French pix and coproductions and dubbed-foreign films hit first-run screens in last year or 36 less than in 1960. Yank majors had less dubbed pix, 85 as compared with 99 in 1960, as did West Germany. Subtitled foreign films also fell from 50 to 40.

Bigger scale pix and longer runs were held responsible for this but the French about held their own with 104 to the 109 of 1960.

IRVING MAAS SEES U.S. OKAY IN JAPAN

Though theatre admissions in Japan declined 16% in 1961, the Japanese boxoffice for American films was the best since 1958, and the uptrend is continuing "at an accelerated pace," according to a report sent to the Motion Picture Export Assn. headquarters in New York by Irving Maas, MPEA far east veep.

Because of increased admission prices, overall boxoffice take is holding well, says Maas, though the Japanese industry heads are worried. Since the Japanese get 80% of the total market income, they are most affected by any decline.

Maas also reports that Japanese cinemas, which in recent years had been switching from foreign product to more Japanese product, are now switching back to more foreign product, principally American. Number of Japanese theatres has declined from high of 7,400 to 6,500 at 1961 end.

Passion Play Due For Complete Revamping

Oberammergau, Jan. 9.

After charges that the Oberammergau Passion Play is anti-Semitic, outdated or just plain boring in its present eight-hour length, city officials have confirmed that it is scheduled for a complete revamping. The 100-year-old Daisenberger script will be changed, according to the city mayor Raimund Lang.

The text of the 600-year-old drama has been redone six times. But a new version will be offered to the public the next time the once-a-decade religious play is done, in 1970, Mayor Lang said.

Plane Junkets For German 'Fair Lady'

Frankfurt, Jan. 9.

Something entirely new for West Germany—tours to attend the theatre—got underway here Jan. 5. On that date, about 100 West German travel bureaus will start offering a "Special Theatre Flight" to attend the German version of "My Fair Lady," stage hit in Berlin.

The luxury tour includes round-trip flight to Berlin, top seats for the show, and overnight stay with room-and-bath (another unusual travel accommodation here) at the Berlin Hilton Hotel. Entire cost, from Frankfurt, is about $46 for the whole deal.

Prod. 'Boom' In Switzerland: Shoot 9 Films

By GEORGE MEZOEFI

Zurich, Jan. 16.

If 1960 was considered one of Swiss film production's busiest years, with five features, 1961 further hypoed the current bustling (by local modest standards, at least) activity here, with nine Swiss films released through the year and four more in the can at year's end. This is probably an alltime high. The other side of the coin is that, with home-made product mounting in number, the public becomes more selective so that, whilst formerly a Swiss film almost automatically spelled boxoffice in the local market, it has now become a chancey affair. This is demonstrated by the fact that, of 1961's nine Swiss releases, only five made the grade, with the remaining four being either spotty items or downright flops.

The most successful Swiss pictures were "Die Schatten werden laenger" (The Shadows Are Getting Longer), a juve delinquency drama; "Die Ehe des Herrn Mississippi" (The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi), filmization of the Friedrich Duerrenmatt comedy-drama; "Fools Are Passing Through"; "An heiligen Wassern" (By Sacred Waters), a mountain drama; and the comedy-fantasy, "Der Teufel hat gut lachen" (The Devil May Well Laugh). A costly color "epic" glorifying the Swiss national hero "Wilhelm Tell," based partly on the Friedrich Schiller drama and partly on old chronicles, was unanimously panned, but managed to do quite well in some German-Swiss spots, though generally below expectations.

Young Talents

Of the four more recent Swiss offerings, two are in the more traditional vein, with mostly established players: "Demokrat Laeppli" (Democrat Laeppli), a farcical comedy starring and directed by Swiss comedian, Alfred Rasser; and "Chiquita," a modern comedy about young Swiss would-be artists. Latter is produced by a newly founded company, Turnus-Film A. G. Zurich, and directed by Karl Suter. It stars German cabaretist Hanne Wieder, together with Swiss players Cesar Keiser, Max Haufler, Ines Torelli and Doris Ebner, all

Bliz Bops West End Film Biz But 'Valiant' Boff $21,000, 'Comancheros' Smash 19G; 'Judgment' Sock 15G, 5th

London, Jan. 9.

A New Year's Eve blizzard clobbered West End first-runs in the early part of the past week, but business zoomed again once the climatic conditions began to improve. High-light of the stanza was the impact of two newcomers, both being fortunate enough to preem after the weather improved. "The Comancheros" at the Carlton is heading for a smash $19,000 or near opening week. The other new entry was "The Valiant," which was launched with a Royal preem at Odeon, Leicester Square. It looks to finish opening frame with a sock $21,000.

Most of hard-ticket films have been holding firmly. "El Cid" is currently leading the field with a fancy $21,000 in fifth round at the Metropole.

"Judgment at Nuremberg" shapes smash at the Leicester Square Theatre with $15,000 in fifth round. "Errand Boy" looms big in second Plaza stanza. "King of Kings" at the Coliseum is rated fair $11,800 in eight session.

Estimates for Last Week

Astoria (CMA) (1,474; $1.20-$1.75)—"Exodus" (UA) (35th wk). Steady $6,400. Now on three-a-day grind instead of hardticket. "West Side Story" (UA) follows Feb. 27, immediately after its Royal Command presentation previous night.

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 70-$1.75)—"Comancheros" (20th). Great $19,000 looms.

Casino (Indie) (1,555; $1.20-$2.10)—"This Is Cinerama" (Robin) (reissue) (9th wk). Sturdy $16,500. "Cinerama Holiday" (Robin) returns on Feb. 24.

Coliseum (MG) (1,795; $1.05-$2.80)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (8th wk). Fair $11,000.

Columbia (Col) (740; $1.05-$2.50)—"On Waterfront" (BLC) (2d wk). Neat $9,000, better than previous round. "Only Two Can Play" (BLC) opens Jan. 11 daydating with Odeon, Marble Arch.

Curzon (CCT) (492; $1.05-$2.45)

Hong Kong Girding For Pacific Travel Confab

Hong Kong, Jan. 9.

The Hong Kong Tourist Assn. is going all out to make the coming annual PATA (Pacific Area Travel Assn.), Jan. 18-26, a complete success. Underscoring this importance, PATA president William C. G. Knowles said that tourism in many countries was the largest single foreign exchange earner.

Air carriers, tourist and travel agencies have begun to intensify their efforts in connection with this PATA conference which travel execs in the Colony say will give Hong Kong the biggest lift it ever had in luring more people to the Colony in the course of their travels in the Pacific. Hong Kong, unlike the position confronting it a few years ago, today has the hotel accommodations to cope with some several hundred PATA delegates and travel writers.

Mex Unions, Prods. End Long Dispute

Mexico City, Jan. 16.

The cameras have started to roll again in Mexico, with long production holiday over as outcome of an accord reached by producers and technicians.

Carlos Tinoco, for the Technicians and Manual Workers Section of the Union of Film Production Workers, Cesar Santos Galindo, head of Churubusco Studios, and Oscar J. Brooks, president of the Mexican Assn. of Motion Picture Producers finally worked out a compromise settlement on the consecutive hiring of technical units by roll. Brooks said that new constructive formula will benefit all sectors equally. He did not explain further except that work is to be distributed evenly among technical staffs.

Settlement of labor difficullies ends a production paralysis which lasted about six months. Sets for four pictures were begun and one production actually has gone before cameras. Production will not hit its stride until sometime in January.

None of the initial quartet of pictures marking resumption of activity is a major effort, being strictly standard program fare including one on a vampire theme, an oater Mexican style, a comedy and a drama.

Also, labor troubles for industry are not over completely, since the union wants Churubusco technical workers to move up in status as salaried workers instead of on per picture assignments. Unions also want to see how producers work out the "equitable" assignment of work to technical shooting units.

Anglo-Amalgam Topper Due in N. Y. on Distrib, Co-Production Deals

London, Jan. 16.

Nat Cohen, managing director of Anglo-Amalgamated Film Distributors, planed out last weekend for his annual visit to N.Y. and Hollywood, to negotiate new distribution and co-production deals. He will spend a week in Manhattan before heading for the Coast.

The Anglo-Amalgam topper will be discussing with Dave Emanuel, president of Governor Films and Richard Gordon, Anglo's U.S. rep, distribution arrangements for Anglo's current output including "Carry On Regardless," "The Criminal," "Dentist on Job," and "Raising the Wind." He'll also give them details of the complete 1962 production slate.

In Hollywood, Cohen will negotiate new co-production deals with James Nicholson and Sam Arkoff of American International to follow the recently completed "Night of Eagle" and the scheduled "Survival Man." Cohen aims to return to his London base early next month.

Total 1961 Mex Film Prod. Investment Small

Mexico City, Jan. 16.

Total Mexican production for 1961 had a cash investment coming to less than a medium-sized Hollywood spectacular. The Film Bureau, which pegged production at 51 films, said these represented an outlay of $3 600,000.

Production-wise this has been the low ebb year in Mexican film activity. And based on investment figures, production costs average out to $76,000 per picture, with these having an average shooting time of three weeks. They still made two week "churros" (quickies), however, and these accounted for major part of the production total.

Yank Product (188) Tops Chile But Not in Running With Its Critics

Santiago, Jan. 9.

Some 522 new films were exhibited in Chile during 1961. "Spartacus" (U) and "Can-Can" (20th-Fox) were the top money makers and three other U.S. features, "Pepe," "Exodus," and "Alamo" found a place among the 10 box-office leaders.

U.S. films totalled 188, providing 36% of the total 522. Six other countries were represented by more than 10 features, to wit:

|---|---|
| Mexico | 61 |
| Italy | 57 |
| Germany | 56 |
| Britain | 47 |
| France | 47 |
| USSR | 12 |

Additional Foreign News On Pages 17

U.S. product did not fare as well from a critical and prestige point of view. No American film came up for discussion when films critics awarded their annual prize for the best foreign film. This went to the Soviet "Ballad of a Soldier."

Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring" obtained first place in the influential survey of the newsmagazine "Ercilla," followed by Truffaut's "400 Blows" and "Ballard of a Soldier." Stanley Kramer's "Inherit the Wind" (7th place) was the only U.S. pic to obtain a place in Ercilla's top 10.

General trend is for Yank product to maintain its share of the local market thanks to blockbusters and big pictures, but European features now hold a position that would not have been dreamed 10 years ago.

Soldiers Kick About 'Enforced Duty'

U.S. Troops in W. Germany Set off Storm About Lengthy 'Assignments' in 'Longest Day'

Baumholder, W. Germany, Jan. 9.

American soldiers based here, who kicked up a squabble about their "enforced training" as part of the filming for Darryl Zanuck's "The Longest Day," have set off a storm that may well result in a thorough Pentagon investigation of just how American servicemen are "assigned" to work in films. There have been many controversies about the use, misuse or abuse of the U.S. troops stationed overseas when they are utilized for American or European film producers, and the squabble about "Longest Day" is adding heat to the fire here.

Some American servicemen, assigned to the 16th Infantry of the Eighth Division headquartered here, were loaned to help out on shooting the Zanuck film's landing scenes in France. And the GIs allegedly complained to Senator Sam J. Ervin, Democrat of North Carolina, that they had been forced to engage in simulated combat duty for the picture.

The GIs, on temporary duty in Rochefort, France, protested to the Senator, who sent the report back to Defense Secretary Robert McNamara. The U.S. soldiers allegedly told Ervin that they had been threatened by their officers that if they did not "volunteer" for the film work they would be in for difficulties.

"It was voluntary but only insofar as the right pressure was applied to make it so. At first it was a voluntary mission and then orders came down from higher headquarters that this was a mandatory training mission," one serviceman wrote. Three servicemen complained that they felt the Army was being exploited for private profit.

Zanuck explained that he had spent about $300,000 for the soldiers to participate in the film. But other scenes were shot utilizing Frenchmen, dressed as GIs. Originally NATO chief General Lauris Norstad had promised 700 men to participate in the film, but an order from Secretary McNamara sliced the number to 250.

Recently, the American Air Force in Europe warned its personnel not to act in any films, even during off-duty time, as the films might be unfavorable to the American image. It asked that any Americans in uniform, or members of their families over here, get permission from the U.S. Air Force's European Headquarters in Wiesbaden for any film work.

Also For Tele Series

The U.S. Army in Europe, headquartered at Heidelberg, has at times recently loaned troops or equipment for filming in Europe. Troops were furnished for the television series "Citizen Soldier." When Elvis Presley was finishing his tour of duty with the Third Armored Division stationed near Frankfurt, many of his buddies in uniform found film roles playing themselves (for extra pay during duty hours) on a Hal Wallis production, although to avoid any controversy, Wallis did not film Presley at all when he was still in the service.

When "Exodus" was filming on Crypus, the U.S. Army's European Headquarters banned all personnel from participating in the film, even on their own leave time. But it recently okayed the use of Seventh Army helicopters to help with aerial shots on Metro's "Wonderful World of Brothers Grimm," filming in Germany.

Just which film producer gets the troops, and how many men are "assigned" or forced to "volunteer" for filmmaking may be up for a top-scale investigation, spurred on by the current "Longest Day" hassle.

India's Film Biz Would Exploit Foreign Mart

Bombay, Jan. 9.

The Indian film industry is seeking government aid in setting up an Export Promotion Council, with its own offices abroad, to exploit native product in the foreign market. It appears that the idea is liked by the government since feeling that the high revenue return of Indian films in the overseas market indicates even greater return from on-spot sales and in a wider area in the foreign field.

Producers Mehboob Khan and Bimal Roy are meeting government officials shortly to outline the procedure for the entire setup.

Swiss Prod.

of whom have a stage (satirical cabaret) background.

Two more films are strongly smacking of "new wave" elements in the sense of being produced scripted, directed and cast with predominantly young people, modestly budgeted and treating modern themes usually sidestepped in the more conventional Swiss screen offerings. They are: "Seelische Grausamkeit" (Mental Cruelty), a drama about marriage and divorce problems, with Swiss actor Hannes Schmidhauser as producer-director-scripter-star; and "Rosen auf Pump" (Borrowed Roses), comedy-drama about young Swiss people revolting against the dull conventionalism of everyday life. The latter film is produced by newly founded Jeppesen-Film, Basle, and directed by young Swiss thesp, Franz Matter.

Meantime rate 1961 as a banner year for Yank pictures in Swiss film business—in fact, the best in many years. Not less than nine out of 22 above-average grossing films of 1961 were American, as against five the year before.

Top position is held by Metro's "Ben-Hur." At the Alhambra in Geneva, it was seen by 85,000 people, or 47% of that city's population of 180,000, during its record-breaking 13 weeks' run. Grosses amounted to 240% of "Gone With the Wind." At the Metropole in Lausanne, the William Wyler epic registered 80,000 patrons (63% of the city's population of 126,000) during a 10 weeks' run, grossing over 200% of GWTW. Results are equally gratifying at the Rex in Zurich as well as Alhambra in Basle. As a matter of fact, "Ben-Hur" is probably one of the highest grossers in Swiss film annals.

Other U.S. hits this year include the Greek-American "Never On Sunday" and "The Apartment," both from UA; "Guns of Navarone" and "Pepe," both from Columbia; "Spartacus" (U), United Artists' "Goodbye Again" and "Exodus" plus, to a lesser extent, Paramoont's "World of Suzie Wong."

If U.S. product registered a definite upward swing in Switzerland, it did so at the expense of European releases (apart from this country's own output) which, as a rule, tend to outshine even some of the bigger Yank offerings. This year, however, only three French and German films each plus two from Italy managed to reach the magic b.o. circle. Of the last-named, one, the Sophia Loren starrer "Two Women," may even be regarded as a one-foot-in-America release, box-office-wise, since it is distributed by Metro here. "Rocco and his Brothers" is the other successful Italian offering. France's top grosser in Switzerland was the Brigitte Bardot starrer, "The Truth," whilst the pouting sex kitten's more recent picture, "La Bride sur le Cou" (released in the U.S. by 20th Fox as "Only for Love"), fared less well, but still above-average. "Un Taxi pour Tobrouk" (Taxi to Tobruk) managed to rack up some nice coin in some spots. "Das Spukschloss im Spessart" (Spookcastle in the Spessart), a remake of the perennial operetta hit, "Im weissen Roessl" (White Horse Inn), and "Die Abenteuer des Grafen Bobby" (Adventures of Count Bobby) are Germany's moneymaking films in 1961.

'Navarone' Paces Switzerland B.O.

Zurich, Jan. 9.

"Guns of Navarone" (Col) is the Swiss boxoffice champion although released in only two key cities at year's end. It is past its 14th week at the Scala Zurich and held for eight stanzas in Lausanne, unusual for that city. Fifth, sixth and eighth position, respectively, are held by: "Spartacus" (U), which had a total running time of 27 weeks in the five key cities; "Goodbye Again" (UA) and "Absent-Minded Professor" (Disney-BV).

The international upbeat of Italian films is reflected in two of that country's more recent entries being included in the top 10 films, namely the Sophia Loren starrer, "Two Women," released here by Metro, in the runnerup spot, with a total of 24 weeks in the five cities; and "Rocco and Brothers" (A star), in seventh.

Two Swiss films came in third and fourth, respectively: "The Shadows Are Getting Longer," treating a juve delinquency theme, plus the filmization of a Friedrich Duerrenmatt comedy, "The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi" (an off-Broadway entry of some years back under the title, "Fools, Are Passing Through").

Germany and Britain had one winner each, the former with "Adventures of Count Bobby" (No. 10) and the latter with a surprise hit, "Carry On Nurse" (ninth), released mostly in smallseaters where it registered amazing holdovers: 13 weeks in Zurich, 15 in Basle. It is the first British moneymaker in Switzerland in some time.

MEXICO'S ACTORS ASSN. SETS UP NEW RULES

Mexico City, Jan. 16.

National Assn. of Actors, apart from cracking down on its bonafide members, also has issued new regulations affecting aspirants who want to become union members in good standing. New talent seeking union membership will have to undergo a test period of four months before being accepted as members in good standing. Then they must work for 40 weeks before receiving full-fledged permanent acceptance by the union.

Further, new elements will have to prove that their public conduct has been good, that they have no criminal background and that they are always on their best behavior on professional appearances. New rules became effective at the start of 1962.

PROTESTS RED TRICK

Werner Finck's Name Used In East Sector Revue

Bonn, Jan. 16.

The Commies have managed a propaganda trick by playing on a name similarity during the year-end holiday period. In East Berlin, placards boldly proclaimed that the "famous cabaret star Werner Finck" was appearing in a revue, (Berlin Has Already Seen That), at the Friedrichstadt Palast, East Berlin.

Werner Finck, widely known West German actor and cabaret emcee, was provoked by the use of his name in a Commie-controlled revue. Investigation revealed that the Reds had hired an entirely unknown Eastern personality whose name is "Werner Fink." The real Finck, is filming in "Deutschland Deine Wunder" (Germany Your Wonder) in West Germany. He told all major West German papers that the duplicity was strictly on the part of the Reds. Also that he had no intention, at any time, of working in the severed half of his native land.

1961 Show Biz in France Flourished; 362 First-Run Pix; Oldies Aid Legit

Paris, Jan. 16.

With the new year, the custom of looking back at the last show biz season is, per usual, an indoor sport here currently. In all, it was felt up to par with some leveling out in the film picture setup, some new confirmations of talents in legit and vaude, a reviving up of disk sales, and agreement that there's a definite need for a second tele channel to give the lagging one channel, state-controlled system the new blood which it needs.

It was generally thought that of the 362 films released in firstruns, a sizeable number were of fine calibre with some new names absorbed into the industry. Jacques Demy, Agnes Varda and Jacques Rovette were called new talents which the French industry could count on.

There were 45 new legit entries, mostly reprises, in the three nationalized theatres and 98 new ones at the 55 private legit houses. General average was considered below par but with enough unusual revivals and a couple of successes by new and old authors to keep the grosses near average.

Jean Anouilh, who usually hits in spite of the crix, did not fare as well with his "La Grotte." It comes off soon. Marcel Ayme had one flop, "Louisiane," on Yank race problems, but made up for it with "Les Maxibules," a pungent comedy mostly saved by actor Jacques Dufilho.

A new author Roland Dubillard saw a lagging first play "Naives Hirondelles" turn in to a hit when it was touted by fellow playwrights Eugene Ionesco and Andre Roussin in local papers.

Francois Billetdoux scored with his second play, "Va Donc Chez Torpe." Provincial companies hit on Paris boards via Roger Planchon's company in four plays with excellent staging, The Comedie Du Nord with Armand Salacrou's play on social injustice, "Boulevard Durand" and the Comedies De L'est with an old Victor Hugo play, "Mille Francs De Recompense."

Music Hall biz took an upswing after some bad years with Zizi Jeanmaire making a smash comeback, Jacques Brel being definitely made a star, and rock-and-roll and the twist also bringing them into halls. A phenomenon was the success of Ray Charles in six recitals at the 6,000-seat Palais Des Sports. A real revelation to a musically legit backward country was the Yank touring company of "West Side Story."

With about 2,000,000 sets in operation, it was found that tele viewers were getting more selective and that new blood and talents were a must for this burgeoning show biz arm. The new web, now skedded for the end of 1962, is a hoped for solution for more entertainment and talents.

Record sales went up commensurate with the comeback of music hall. One phenomenon was the sales of a talk disk by comic Henri Tisot who does an uncanny imitation of President de Gaulle.

Protest Censor Cuts in Swedish 'Mein Kampf'

Stockholm, Jan. 9.

Minerva Film International has protested against the Swedish censors' decision to cut sections of its new film, which is to be released in English as "Mein Kampf II." This Swedish documentary is based on the material disclosed during the Nuremberg trials. It has been assembled by Tore Sjoberg, head of Minerva Films, and scripted by Erik Holm.

Swedish censors decided to cut out sections of "Mein Kampf II" for pyschological reasons because it was felt that these placed an unjustified emphasis on horror. The censors were convinced that the pic would give rise to strong emotions. Furthermore they believed the present international situation had made such an impact on Swedish audiences unwise. "Kampf II" deals with the rise of Hitler, the German treatment of war prisoners and also their treatment of civilians in occupied countries.

SCOT LECTURER HITS VIOLENCE IN TELE

Storling, Scotland, Jan. 16.

A college lecturer in sociology, Dr. John Highet, has hit out here at violence in television. He condemned tv's "deplorable emphasis on crime, violence, drink and loose moral conduct." He added: "Let us have less emphasis on sex, hardness, and selfishness. Let us have less presentation of unchastity, and unfaithfulness as the smart, modern, broad-minded way of behaving."

Viewers should fight bad tv programs, he urged, by guiding their children to higher tastes, switching off more often, and writing letters to the press and program authorities. They should also insist on the formation of a viewers' council, and back it up by insisting that the Independent Television Authority should observe more closely the spirit of its obligations under the 1954 Television Act.

Raphel Heads 20th-Fox European Sales Setup

Paris, Jan. 16.

Because of the product being produced by 20th-Fox, which it is felt needs a man abroad who can make decisions on the spot, the company has named a man to head the European and Middle East sales setup. Murray Silverstone, prexy of 20th-Fox International, selected David Raphel for this post.

Company did away with a Continental manager two years ago, with decisions centered in the N.Y. homeoffice. Raphel will be called Home Office Rep in charge of Europe and Middle East, but it is intimated he will have a big say in policy.

Raphel, son-in-law of the recently retired 20th-Fox Continental manager Albert Cornfield, was assistant sales manager for France in 1950. In 1957, he became assistant Continental manager in France. In 1959, he took over the 20th-Fox International tele setup which he headed until his new appointment.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Nine members of an organization calling themselves the "Hollywood Race Relation Bureau" picketed Columbia and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios on the Coast under the leadership of actor-singer Caleb Peterson. Similar group recently picketed downtown theatres where Peterson said "only five people crossed our line."

Group, all Negroes, marched with signs and placards protesting the "non-realistic portrayal of the American Negro in motion pictures." Peterson said they will continue to picket every studio in town except Warner Bros., with Paramount next on tap on Monday. Warner Bros. escapes the marching because studio was winner in a special awards ceremony group presented at the Paladium several months ago and took out an ad in the printed program. Peterson said ad cost $200. Studio spokesman said it was a regular theatre ad, plugging "Rachel Cade" which was then in release. Burt Lancaster and Shelley Winters were also honored at the ceremonies.

Pianist-organist Earl Grant cancelled his Dec. 19 evening concert at the Austin, Tex., Municipal Auditorium, claiming the local musicians provided him weren't up to snuff. Auditorium manager Francis Vickers said Grant and his manager Chuck Wright were being "temperamental." He said he thought they were too picky about the musicians, and Grant should have gone on with just organ and drums—a point Grant disagreed on.

Vickers told the group which brought Grant to Austin, the Negro women's sorority Alpha Kappa Alpha, that he believes it has cause for suing Grant. Latter said he had made the sorority a very good price because it is a charitable organization. He offered to try again for Alpha Kappa Alpha in concert next year, but the group is reluctant to book him. Apparently the sorority is out, among other expenses, the $210 rent on the Auditorium and Grant's advance.

January 30 issue of Look mag bills Spencer Tracy as a "tragic success," an "aimless, restless" individual who sometimes disappears for weeks at a time in his capacity as "reluctant star." He insisted on a holdup of "A Guy Named Joe" at Metro until Van Johnson recovered from an automobile accident, and thereby, says Johnson, saved the latter's career. Piece by Bill Davidson quotes Tracy as saying he's "gray and fat" in response to an inquiry about his taking a certain role. Yet such directors as John Ford, John Sturges, George Cukor and Stanley Kramer have found him "a delight to work with." At the same time he's gruff with other directors and especially newspapermen, unless they ask no personal questions. His animosity about working at a certain location altitude cost MGM $1,000,000, says Davidson. The deafness of his son John looms as a factor behind the man's personality.

According to Filmblaetter, W-Berlin trade paper, "Ben-Hur" (M-G) was the most screened film in W-Germany's key cities during the 1960-'61 season. Runners-up were the German "The Haunted Castle," "Soldier Schweik" and "Glass of Water," the Italian-French "Sweet Life," the American "The Apartment" (UA) and "Porgy and Bess" (Col), France's "The Truth," Greece's "Never On Sunday" and Germany's "Faust" and "Black Sheep."

The lineup of the first 80 top moneymakers includes 36 German, 18 American, five Austrian, five French, two British, two Swedish films plus one film each from Greece and Switzerland. The remaining 10 films were coproductions, mostly of Italian-French origin.

Lewis Milestone is generally pleased with "Mutiny On The Bounty," though stating it would have been better if made as two pictures, instead of one. Director was referring to the actual "Mutiny" story and the "Pitcairn Island" section and called the latter a completely separate story. He noted much of this sequence has been cut from the picture, but said too much remains to allow a later sequel to be made based on this story alone.

Fact "Mutiny" is the most expensive picture ever made doesn't mean a thing as far as Milestone is concerned, noting the only thing that counts is quality and "you can get this in costly or low cost films."

Roger Corman has made 50-50 distribution deal on his completed production of Edgar Allen Poe's "The Premature Burial" on toss-of-a-coin arrangement that netted him an immediate $50,000 profit. AIP paid Corman $500,000 for half interest in the picture, which Corman brought in for $450,000. Distribution deal was set after more than two months of negotiations that were held up over a two-and-a-half percentage of the English release. It was settled with a toss-of-the-coin which Corman won.

Weston Associates, advertising and public relations firm at Manchester, N.H., has been awarded a contract to edit a color film for the U.S. Travel Service of the Dept. of Commerce and narrate it in five languages. Purpose is to get more tourists into U.S. States from overseas. Hamilton Wright Organization of New York City, produced the color picture originally for E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co. It will be titled and voiced in English, French, German, Spanish and Portuguese.

In the hope that Lee Loevenger, head of the Dept. of Justice's antitrust division, will be able to attend at that time, reactivated North Central Allied, at war again with the film companies at its very new outset, has postponed its first annual convention here until March 8. There'll be no further postponements, but the meeting to map out further plans for battling the distributors definitely will be held on that date even if Loevenger finds that he can't make it.

The $9,000,000 antitrust action by Indiana exhibitors against most of the major film companies, pending in Indianapolis Federal Court for more than five years, is now expected to be tried by next October, possibly sooner. This per a leading Hoosier exhib, who asserts some "most unusual evidence" is being documented to buttress the alleged illegality of roadshows. Exempted from the suit are 20th-Fox, Allied Artists and Republic.

In his new tome, "Creative Money Management for the Executive" (Doubleday & Co.), insurance investment specialist Israel Unterman says entertainers and execs often are in the same know-nothing position when it comes to managing finances. In both categories, surprisingly few "know how much they are earning and, more important, how much they are spending." What they need, of course, is an investment specialist.

Curious p.a. handout heralds "World of Talent" as being a "gigantic" motion picture that "will encompass every phase of the performing arts," and then accents that 33-year-old producer John Hoffman "has allocated a modest budget of $25,000 for each of the 10 major location shots in N.Y. City" and that $500,000 will be the cost of the "finished feature-documentary."

An industrial relations committee has been formed by Britain's Television & Screen Writers Guild to sound out other trade organizations with a view to affiliation. Chaired by Howard Clewes, the eight-member committee plans to wine and dine leading tradesters and thereby establish good relations with the Guild.

Since Sept. 1, monthly payments under the Film Exchange Employees Pension Fund has been upped from $36.50 to $50. Hike was negotiated by International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees last winter. Also increased are disability and early retirement pensions.

Universal Field Crew Bally 'Lover, Come Back'

Universal likes the way it worked for "Flower Drum Song," so the company's again deploying a nine-man field platoon to advance bally "Lover Come Back." As with "Drum," some 50 keys are due for intensified promotional efforts prior to the film's mid-February general release.

The nine-man force, which reports to Herman Kass in the home-office, includes Ben Katz, Bob Ungerfeld, Maurice Harris, Amike Vogel, Duke Hickey, George Banhan, Bernie Korban, David Polland and David Kane.

DISNEY YR. (SEPT. 30) EQUALLED $2.75 PER

Walt Disney Productions reported a net profit of $4,465,486 for the year ended Sept. 30, 1961, marking an all time high for the company which has 1,626,023 outstanding shares. This represents $2.75 a share.

Previous high year was 1958 when a net profit of $3,865,473 was revealed on 1,537,054 common stock. This repped $2.51 per share.

In 1960, company had a net loss of $1,342,037 on 1,626,023 shares. Deficit per share was 83 cents.

In its annual statement issued yesterday, Disney revealed NBC has picked up its option for two-year renewal on "Wonderful World of Color." With extension of the current one-year deal, the pact will continue into the 1963-64 seasons.

The report also noted that Disney has $927,000 stock and loan investment in Celebrities Bowling Co., which operates a recreation center in Denver consisting of 80 bowling alleys, an Olympic swimming pool with stadium, restaurant, coffee shop, Hoffbrau, related facilities and parking lots. "This gives Disney effective control," according to Lawrence E. Tyron, W. D. treasurer. "We have 26 to 27% of the stock." Other share holders include Jack Benny, Spike Jones and Art Linkletter.

Six pix are in production, two untitled, and embrace "Sword in the Stone," an animated feature which will take two or three years before completion; "Bon Voyage," "Legend of Lobo" and "The Castaways," latter for next Xmas release.

Provlso for $5,322,000 income taxes for 1961 has been made and compares with net income tax credit of $1,300,000 for 1960.

Gross income for year ended Sept. 30 last was $70,247,772, an increase of $19,316,788 from the previous year. Film rentals for year just ended were $41,159,729, an increase of $18,229,980 over 1960.

Disneyland Park revenues this year tallied $18,997,637, a hike of $897,101. Teevee income this year totaled $5,093,290 for an increase of $95,351. Income from other sources such as publications, newspaper comic strips, licensed cartoon characters and records was $4,997,116, a boost of $94,356.

Current and long term debt was reduced from $32,105,406 to $15,000,000.

Boxer Rebellion," has got to cost at least $7,000,000, says the filmmaker. Other is "Fall of Rome."

The financing and distribution are to be on a territorial basis; each local distributor will put up part of the money and take local releasing rights. Both films are being screenplayed by Yordan, with "Boxer" directed by Ray and "Rome" directed by Mann.

Columbia provided a guarantee of $1,200,000 in taking distribution rights to Samuel Bronston's "El Cid" in the Far East and Scandinavia areas. Paramount and Metro had been bidding.

Samuel Bronston, producer of "King of Kings," is in "consultation" with Metro, as distributor of the Biblical epic, anent a new campaign. Filmmaker would like to see more emphasis, on the film as an "historical show with religion."

In seeing it "I don't want people thinking they're going to church," he adds.

Projectionists in Legal Setback

Michigan Exhibitors Ruled Not Taxable For Unemployment Relief Based on Seniority

By FRED TEW

Detroit, Jan. 16.

A precedental decision by the Michigan State Circuit Court denying unemployment compensation to a projectionist who was taken off his job by the union and replaced with another member having more seniority has been won by Allied Theatres of Michigan.

In effect this decision will substantially reduce the unemployment compensation tax for most Michigan theatres, inasmuch as the tax is determined by the amount of claims for unemployment compensation against each individual business. In Michigan, the tax varies from one to four percent of the entire payroll depending on the amount, or the lack, of claims.

The decision may set a precedent which will be citeu in courts in other states where similar cases may be tried.

Allied argued successfully that in recent years many theatres providing steady employment have been charged with claims for unemployment compensation by relief and part-time projectionists who are put on a job temporarily and then removed by the Projectionist's Union. As a result, these theatres have been forced to pay a higher tax rate.

The Michigan Employment Security Commission claimed that projectionists who were not working were entitled to unemployment compensation because they were unemployed through no fault of their own.

The Union contended that its control of job positions was a convenience for the exhibs, that they had to have additional men available to cover vacations, illnesses and emergencies and that it was the responsibility of the theatre owners to pay these extra men unemployment compensation when their services were not needed.

The Commission ruled that the theatres were responsible for the unemployment because they entered into a contract which allowed the Union to place, shift and lay off their projectionists.

However, Circuit Judge Sam Street Hughes, in overruling the Commission, prohibited the Commission from granting unemployment compensation "where the employer has not reduced his work force and has not been at fault by eliminating a job."

Shirley MacLaine's Tour

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Shirley MacLaine is back from a two-month tour of Europe and Asia "pleasantly surprised" with the awareness shown by people she met concerning Hollywood and its people. Tour was in the nature of advance promotion for new newest, "My Geisha!" opening abroad Thursday (18). Domestic release is set for July.

Actress said she also learned considerably about the international market and this knowledge will influence her future choice of scripts.

N.Y. Local 306 Absorbs Rival Booth Union

Motion Picture Operators Local 306, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, has voted to absorb the Independent Motion Picture Machine Operators and TV Employes, New York. Merger is a landmark, signaling a union monopoly over Gotham boothmen for the first time in over half a century.

Both locals have faced each other often in NLRB and court bouts over jurisdiction. The smaller indie union, formed in 1940 by Charles Axelrod, its prez and business representative, long sought to have its membership absorbed by 306, a move resisted until now. The IMPMO voted to join 306 at a meeting last Wednesday (10), and following night the IA local approved at a special post-midnight session. According to a 306 spokesman, almost 500 of the local's 1,425 members attended, with "at least" 90% affirming the merger by voice vote.

Action becomes official with dissolution of the indie local's state charter, first granted in 1950. This formality by the New York State Secretary of State is expected in a few weeks.

At one time, there were five or six unions repping projectionists in the New York area, but this number dwindled to two in 1943 when IMPMO absorbed the independent United Motion Picture Operators Union.

Steve D'Anzillo is business representative of 306.

pression. Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen circumstances should lead us to change what was decreed after years of litigation with the consent of all concerned."

Tradesters, of whatever persuasion on the decrees issue, can apply their own italics. The inference, as it relates to the film industry, seems unmistakable. The courts would surely insist, as a basis for injunctive relief, on satisfaction as to the key points—extreme hardships and the clear showing of grievous wrong in altered circumstance. Further, it seems probable the court would demand satisfaction that such conditions are rampant. Isolated exhib suffering is not likely to turn the trick.

To be sure, says the TOA lawyer, it doesn't follow that the Par case would meet the same judicial resistance as the meat companies have; hence, he believes attempts at modification should be made. But per the aforesaid analogy, prospects admittedly are dim.

LEWIS MILESTONE AS INDIE WITH LEDERER

Hollywood, Jan. 16

Lewis Milestone has revealed plans to enter independent production in a coventant with Charles Lederer on a comedy-drama Lederer is writing for Milestone to produce and direct late this year. Two would be partners in the project which would involve setting up their own company.

Lederer scripted "Mutiny on the Bounty," which Milestone recently finished directing after being called in on the picture three months after it was in production.

southern outlets. He swung over to United Paramount Theatres (now American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres) as veepee along with Leonard Goldenson, president, and Robert H. O'Brien, who last month was upped by Vogel to exec veepee of MGM.

Since that incident with Crosby up in the air, Weitman hasn't had too many mechanical problems—i.e., not until last night when he drove from his home in Beverly Hills to pick up the newspapers. His car lights went dead and when he stopped in a garage to advise his wife, Sylvia, of his problem she had a bigger one to report. A water pipe had broken and she was trying to stem the tide while waiting for the Water and Power Dept. to come to shut off the main valve.

Der Traum Von Lieschen Muller

clothes will be bought her, etc. Then she falls asleep and dreams. Her dream (in color) makes up the greater part of the film. It shows Miss Mueller as a millionairess. There are numerous trick sequences. Then the dream ends and she decides not to take the job.

Kaeutner, who also wrote the script, seems to have gone overboard with everything. He parodized too much, picked too many topics, and seemingly fell in love with thick sequences.

The acting disappoints too. Sonja Ziemann may have been an ideal Lieschen Mueller some years ago, but not anymore. Martin Held (the rich man) gives evidence of the fact that he's a fine actor but in this his acting is mere routine. Helmut Griem is only a lukewarm Prince Charming.

Best thing about this is its color and trick photography. But these two assets are not enough.

Der Luegner
(The Liar)
(GERMAN)

Berlin, Jan. 9.

Europa Filmverleih release of Real (Walter Koppel) production. Stars Heinz Ruehmann; features Julia Follina, Annemarie Dueringer and Gustav Knuth. Directed by Ladislao Vajda. Screenplay, Hans Jacoby and Istvan Bekeffi; camera, Guenther Anders; music, Siegfried Franz. At Filmbuehne Wien, Berlin. Running time, 98 MINS.

Sebastian Schumann ... Heinz Ruehmann
Nicky ... Julia Follina
Annemarie Karsten ... Annemarie Dueringer
Fraulein Kriese ... Blandine Ebinger
Rotbarth ... Gustav Knuth
Sperber ... Werner Hinz
Police Inspector ... Siegfried Wischnewski
Goliath ... Werner Schumacher
Beggar ... Joseph Offenbach

Hungarian-born Spanish Ladislao Vajda is one of the few Continental directors who is able to achieve something that has become rare in films, real charm. Vajda doesn't intend to make people laugh, but he does make them smile. Vajda's latest, "The Liar," is a mixture of comedy and modern fairy tale. Helped by the Heinz Ruehmann name, pic should do very well in this country. It also qualifies itself for export.

This is Vajda's third film to star Heinz Ruehmann, one of Germany's finest comedians. Ruehmann is at his best in this pic. He is a good-natured employee whom his wife deserted, leaving him alone with his little daughter. The eight-year old girl is all his happiness and he tells her one lie after the other to keep her from learning some of life's miseries.

But he gets deeper and deeper in trouble, loses his job and attracts the attention of youth authorities. Latter mistrust his educational abilities and are about to take the child away from him. But all ends happily.

Ruehmann adds another splendid performance to his lineup of credits. Little Julia Follina is the cute child while Annemarie Dueringer, as the young woman, is outstanding, too.

Script is unusually tight and imaginative. There's also some fine camerawork. But in the main, this is Vajda's picture. This is one of the few German pix of 1961 worth remembering.

I Sogni Muoiono all'Alba
(Dreams Die at Dawn)
(ITALIAN—SONG)

Rome, Jan. 9.

Cineriz release of a Franco Magli production. Features Lea Massari, Aroldo Tieri, Gianni Santuccio, Mario Feliciani, Ivo Garrani. Written and directed by Indro Montanelli. Assistant directors, Mario Craveri, Enrico Gras; camera, Marelli and Raffaldi; music, E. Lavagnino; editor, Eraldo da Roma. At Barberini, Rome. Running time, 95 MINS.

Indro Montanelli's first film betrays its legit origins but is unlikely to repeat its success. Story showing the internal and dialectic conflict among several correspondents of different political schools holed up in a hotel during the abortive Hungarian revolution, has its tense moments and its valid sentiments. But as reflected on the screen, it seems overstated and strangely unexciting. This looks like a lukewarm entry.

Matter-of-fact portrayal of a situation, which moved millions, is diluted by lengthy pro-communistic speeches which are valid arguments all, and intelligently written. But here they lack proper impact.

Acting is likewise competent, but that's not enough. The result is a certain listlessness, relieved only here and there thanks to an engaging performance by Lea Massari, as a Commie who has seen the light. Other credits are okay.

present, USIA head is in Africa on a five-week trip.

Stevens reports to USIA office in Washington Feb. 1, his main function to head up the Motion Picture Service of USIA which produces 750 documentaries and newsreels annually. Bureau also distributes these to 100 countries in 52 languages.

"There'll be a great deal of liaison between Hollywood and Washington," Stevens asserted. "Not that there hasn't been before, but it will be increased by my taking over this job."

Producer-director Stevens stated his son as associate producer had brought all details to date so that he is ready to go as soon as he sets studio space to film "The Greatest Story Ever Told."

As for a successor to assist him, Stevens said he would have to go outside for one. Carl Sandburg, literary consultant on "Greatest," leaves for his Flat Rock, N.C. home shortly, according to producer-director, and returns when the Biblical film goes before the cameras.

"Around the World in 80 Days" with a large number of top name stars and many cameos.

Filming, according to Fields, will be 90% in Hollywood, with the only locations planned to be in Paris aside from second unit background shots. Arthur Ross is now scripting.

"Race" is the first feature planned by Project III. Edwards is to produce and direct, with Fields as exec. producer.

Project III has a multiple series deal covering one to three years with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under which they are currently prepping half-hour "Johnny Dollar," to star William Bryant, and hour-long "House of Seven," starring Charles Bickford. "Dollar" is being produced by Owen Crump, under exclusive tv contract to Project III as a producer, with Edwards directing. "Seven" is being scripted by Lou Morheim, but no producer or director has been assigned. Henry Mancini yesterday was set to score "Dollar," which Fields said will be ready to market Feb. 1.

Now in preparation is comedy series "All That Jazz" which Frank and Tom Waldman are writing, and another comedy series.

Fields said Project III is a separate entity from his own personal management corp. and is treated essentially as a client. His chief concern remains management, under which he said initial theory of total management of an artists' entire career is being justified in top exposure that is showing results in building stars. As an example, he represents Phil Silvers who, he said, will be developing a new comedy tv series next year after he completes "Do Re Mi" on Broadway. Fields said the changing business requires more specialized handling of personalities to develop talent opportunities rather than merely developing talent. It includes business investments. For instance, Silvers is partnered financially with Freddie Fields Assoc. in the "House of Seven" series, with similar ventures being designed for other clients. Fields' manages Judy Garland, Henry Fonda, Peter Sellers, Joanne Woodward, Carol Lynley and Polly Bergen.

"Today you can't think of the individual job, but how it fits into the overall picture of a career," Fields said, noting Henry Fonda's career has been designed with three major films and two tv specs in release during the time he will be on Broadway next year co-starring with Olivia de Haviland in "A Gift of Time."

Rackmil, Aboaf Sound Hopeful Note on Latin Markets, Despite Castro

San Juan, Jan. 16.

Despite the loss of the Cuban market, and currency devaluation and fluctuating economic conditions in a number of other countries, Universal expects a marked increase in Latin American revenue during 1962, as well as a proportionately larger share of the combined film industry income from that area, Milton R. Rackmil, U prexy, told the final meeting of the company's Latin American sales conference here today (Tues.).

Rackmil, and foreign general manager Americo Aboaf, told delegates that they expected that the quality of upcoming product, combined with aggressive merchandising, will more than overcome any new "operational difficulties" in 1962. The meeting here was the fourth is a continuing series of regional conferences overseas which Rackmil and Aboaf have been conducting, starting in Europe in December.

Accompanying the two execs to Puerto Rico were Ben M. Cohn, assistant foreign manager, and Joseph I. Mazer, foreign department exec. They were joined here by Al Lowe, Latin American supervisor, and staffers repping all Central and South American territories. Sessions included the screening of all major product to be released by the company during its "Presidential Sales Drive" and its 50th anniversary celebration.

earned surplus as of Nov. 25 was $52,069,415.

Fabian expressed reasonable confidence of a rosy boxoffice outlook in coming months, and reiterated the policy of "weeding out" marginal theatres, refurbishing key properties and constructing new situations. The prez offered a bullish outlook on the company's industrial activities, noting expanded operations abroad, primarily as to manufacture and distribution of the Playtex bra-girdle line. A new Playtex plant south of Rome has been blueprinted, and the brand is now being sold for the first time in West Germany. Dickers are on, exec added, to open Playtex plants in other countries. The company is also in pharmaceuticals and industrial chemicals.

Financial statements do not break down as between theatrical and industrial operations.

This year's meeting was held at Wilmington, Del.

books. Then, too, disharmony among the board members.

Walt Disney scored on the overall, from the year's beginning at $29 to the year's close at $37. In between was a high of $46.50. String of theatrical boxoffice klondikes has helped.

Columbia turned the corner in the right way, going up to $28.50, from the year's opening of $22.50. They're making better pictures at Col these days. Also a major consideration is the progress of the Screen Gems television subsidiary.

Metro, at $50.50, is nicely up from the year's low of $41.50, but way down from the high of $70.37½. Current earnings picture is attractive but the buyers got timid as word got out about the high production costs of "Mutiny on the Bounty," reportedly $17,500,000.

United Artists closed at $31.50, fair-enough close to the year's opening of $32.75, but there had been a high of $40.75. Ups and downs of the theatricals cue the investors, who also are mindful of a generous 40c quarterly divvy rate.

PARADE'S JOE SOLOMON

Joe Solomon has been named Philadelphia representative for Parade Releasing Organization by company heads Riley Jackson and Robert Patrick.

Company plans a slate of 12 releases this year, along with "I Bombed Pearl Harbor" and "Then There Were Three," now in release.

'Flat' Lively $12,000, Buff.; 'Song' Big 7G, 3d

Buffalo, Jan. 17.

Firstrun trade here is steady currently albeit on the spotty side. Some of longruns are off sharply, and on the way out. Top newcomer is "Bachelor Flat," good at Paramount. "Sail a Crooked Ship" looks okay on opener at Century.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 75-$1)— "Ivanhoe" (M-G) and "Knights of Round Table" (M-G) (reissues). Nice $9,000. Last week, "Pocketful Miracles" (UA) (2d wk), $6,500.

Center (AB-PT) (2,500; 70-$1)— "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk). Passable $5,000 in 5 days. Last week, $7,500.

Century (UATC) (2,700; 70-$1)— "Sail a Crooked Ship" (Col). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Second Time Around" (20th) and "Purple Hills" (20th) (2d wk), $7,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 70-$1)— "Flower Drum Song" (U) (3d wk). Perky $7,000. Last week, $10,000.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th). Good $12,000 or close. Last week, "Errand Boy" (Par) (3d wk), $7,200.

Teck (Loew) (1,200; $1.25-$2.75) —"King of Kings" (M-G) (4th wk). Fine $7,500. Last week, $8,200.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 70-$1.25) —"Carry On Constable" (Gov) (4th wk). Okay $2,000. Last week, $2,200.

'2D TIME' OKAY $8,000, L'VILLE; 'SONG' 5½G, 3D

Louisville, Jan. 16.

The few days when temperature was hovering near the zero mark are over, and milder weather is bringing patrons downtown. Absence of fresh product, however, will hold grosses down. "Flower Drum Song" looks bright in third round at the Kentucky. "Roman Spring" shapes good at the Mary Anderson. "Second Time Around" in third at United Artists is still okay.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,100; 75-$1) — "King and I" (reissue (20th). Slow $3,500. Last week, "Pocketful Miracles" (UA) (3d wk), $6,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1)— "Flower Drum Song" (U) (3d wk). Bright $5,500 after second week's $6,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (900; 90-$1.25) — "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk). Good $4,500 after $5,000 for second week.

Ohio (Settos) (900; $1.25)— "Babes in Toyland" (BV) (4th wk). Good $5,000 after third week's $6,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (1,100; $1.25-$2.50)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (13th wk). Hep $4,500 after 12th week's $5,000.

United Artists (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 75-$1.25) — "Second Time Around" (20th) (3d wk). Okay $8,000 after second week's $12,000.

'Clock' Sharp $10,000, Seattle; 'Song' 7G, 4th

Seattle, Jan. 16.

Some fresh screen fare this stanza will help improve the local firstrun setup. "Twist Around Clock" shapes big on opener at Coliseum while "Bachelor Flat" is rated okay in first at Fifth Avenue. "Flower Drum Song" looks nice in fourth at Music Hall. "King of Kings" looms good in fourth at the Blue Mouse.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (739; $1.50-$3.50)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (4th wk). Good $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Coliseum (Fox-Evergreen) (1,870; $1-$1.50)—"Twist Around Clock" (Col) and "Underwater City" (Col). Big $10,000. Last week, "Second Time Around" (20th) (2d wk), $7,500.

Fifth Avenue (Fox-Evergreen) (2,500; $1-$1.50)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th) and "Madison Avenue" (20th). Okay $8,000. Last week, "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) and "Invitation Monte Carlo" (Indie), $5,200.

Music Box (Hamrick) (738; $1-$1.50)—"Roman Spring" (DB) (3d wk). Fair $3,000 in four days. Last week, $5,000.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; $1-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U). (4th wk). Nice $7,000 or near. Last week, $8,500.

Paramount (Fox-Evergreen) (3,000; $1-$1.50)—"Babes in Toyland" (BV) and "Bashful Elephant" (AA) (4th wk). Fair $5,000. Last week, $7,000.

'Miracles' Swell $8,000, Cincy Ace

Cincinnati, Jan. 16.

Class holdovers are the bulwark of a potentially snug Cincy film session in the wake of a sub-zero clobbering of general biz traffic. "Pocketful of Miracles" is solid in fourth week. "Babes in Toyland" is rated okay in fourth at Keith's. "Second Time Around" and "Roman Spring" continue strong in third rounds.

Hardticket "El Cid" holds solidly in fourth week at suburban Valley while "King of Kings" slows up in ninth stanza at the Capitol. "Devil's Eye" bids socko in opener at the Guild artie.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; $1-$1.50)— "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk). Good $7,500. Second week, $8,200.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,400; $1.25-$2.75) — "King of Kings" (M-G) (9th wk). Slow $4,000. Last week, $5,000. "Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA), opens Feb. 14.

Esquire Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)— "Purple Noon" (Times) (2d wk). Good $1,300. Last week, $2,200.

Grand (RKO) (1,300; $1-$1.50)— "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (4th wk). Swell $8,000 in setup over $7,500 of third round.

Guild (Vance) (300; $1.25)— "Devil's Eye" (Indie). Smash $2,800. Last week, "Invasion Quartet" (Col) (3d wk), $1,100.

Hyde Park Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)—"Make Mine a Double" (Cont). Fair $800. Last week, "From Roman Balcony" (Indie), $1,100.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)— "Babes In Toyland" (BV) (4th wk). Okay $5,000. Last week, $6,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; $1-$1.25)— "Second Time Around" (20th) (3d wk). Hotsy $8,000 after $10,000 second frame.

Twin Drive-In (Shor) (600 cars; 90c)—West side: "Twist Around Clock" (Col) and "X-15" (Col) subruns). Fairish $2,500. Last week, "Deadly Companions" (Indie) and "Fear No More" (Indie), $1,900. East side operating weekends only.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,275; $1.50-$2.50)—"El Cid" (AA) (4th wk). Strong $9,000. Last week, $9,200.

Hollywood Newshens Recover Courage, Again Handing Out Their 'Sour' Apples

By DORA ALBERT

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Hollywood Women's Press Club recently celebrated the 20th anniversary of an idea that has brought it national criticism and maybe even national curses. Credit it to Ruth Waterbury, currently contributing editor of Photoplay. Idea: each year the club to choose the actor and actress most cooperative with the press, and award a Golden Apple. Negative was to be a "stuffed shirt" award to the screen actor and actress least cooperative with the press.

The shirts were ready; so were the chairs. Everything was ready, when, boom, came Pearl Harbor. Subdued by history, club solemnly chose Bob Hope and Bette Davis as their first Golden Apple winners, and Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers for the "Sour" Apples.

Pressagents—being just that—greeted the Golden Apple choices with jubilation, but were unhappy about the spotlighting of aloofness.

For 14 lively, argumentive years the practice continued of rapping standout "snubbers" of Hollywood's commentators. Always, those roasted were among the top stars. Organization figured no kudos were due an actor or actress not in great demand for being cooperative.

From 1942 to 1954 the club named as its most cooperative stars such smarties as Cary Grant, Rosalind Russell, Bob Hope, Gregory Peck, Alan Ladd, June Haver, William Holden, and Loretta Young. Joan Crawford won the accolade twice.

Among the non-cooperative were George Sanders, Jean Arthur, the late Errol Flynn, Joan Fontaine (she reformed later), Walter Pidgeon, Sonja Henie, Fred MacMurray, Greer Garson, Frank Sinatra (twice, in 1946 and in 1951), Ingrid Bergman, Jennifer Jones, Rita Hayworth (twice, in 1948 and in 1952), Robert Mitchum, Doris Day, Jennifer Jones, Humphrey Bogart, and Esther Williams.

Unhappy Publicists

Most pressagents tried hard to save their stars from getting the unhappy distinction: when the stars won the Sour Apples, there were usually loads of alibis and lots of hard-wrigging.

When Ingrid Bergman won a Sour Apple, her whole crew sent a protesting wire to Louella Parsons, one of the founders of the club and its president for six years (1930-1935).

Frequently stars chosen as uncooperative made Louella Parsons a court of appeal. When Esther Williams got a Sour Apple, her pressagent pointed out how busy Esther was, how good a mother she was, and how noble she was about teaching blind children to swim. All very true—but the Sour Apple designation referred simply to the club's opinion of her cooperation with the press.

Stars reacted differently to being gifted with the Sour Apple. Humphrey Bogart loved it; he claimed it was a mark of distinction. Frank Sinatra seemed pleased that he had won it twice. He made no effort to mend his ways. In fact, he recently sent the club a plaintive wire complaining because he hadn't been chosen a third time. As Barbara Best, the President of the club, merrily wired back to Frank, "you can't win 'em all. Better luck next time."

But many pressagents were decidedly worried about those Sour Apples. Studios and p.a.'s groaned that the choice of the uncooperatives was bad publicity. And some newshens asked, "Ought we to admit that there is anyone—anyone at all—who doesn't cooperate happily with us?"

Took the Cure

Bing Crosby, a non-cooperative nominee, later played Santa Claus for the group at a Christmas party. Joan Fontaine, designed as uncooperative in 1943, decided being uncooperative was poor publicity, went to the other extreme and became so cooperative that four years later she won a Golden Apple.

Still, the let-us-be constructive Nice Nellies of the club won out, and the Sour Apples were given up in 1955. For the next four years, only sweetness and light prevailed, with William Holden, Jane Russell, Charlton Heston, Deborah Kerr, Glenn Ford, Kim Novak, Tony Curtis, Dinah Shore, David Niven, and Shirley MacLaine winning praise for their helpfulness to the press.

Meanwhile, with no one to blame them when they were naughty, some of the stars were very naughty indeed in refusing to give interviews or giving so few that writers and editors were left copyless.

In 1960 the members argued back and forth about whether or not to reinstate the Sour Apples. Many who had formerly opposed the Sour Apple awards were disenchanted with the stars they had saved from this label. Newspapermen and women not associated with the club frankly told the girls that the spiciest and most interesting copy that had ever come out of the club came when Sour Apple winners were selected. But it wasn't just a matter of publicity. They wondered if, perhaps, they hadn't been a little lacking in courage.

Courage Reinstated

In 1960 the Sour Apples were reinstated.

Under a new arrangement, the working press members of the club and free lance writers are the only ones permitted to nominate either Golden Apple girls and boys, or candidates for the sour award. Later all members, including publicists vote on the nominated ones.

What an uproar arose when the members voted Elvis Presley and Debbie Reynolds the two most uncooperative stars of the year! Noted columnists pointed out that Elvis had served his country well, and that Debbie had once (in 1954) been selected by the group as a most cooperative doll.

It may have been pure coincidence, but in 1961, Debbie Reynolds has achieved a far better record for cooperativeness than in 1960. However, it must be admitted that of all the people chosen for the Sour Apple designation, Debbie probably had the best reasons for non-cooperation. She had been the victim of some of the year's most tasteless publicity because of her then unhappy marital situation. In her reaction against maudlin publicity, she shut the door against too many interviewers. The unhappy girls, unable to fulfil their assignments on Debbie, voted according to self-interest.

Nubian Art-Flood

safe oases. The publicity campaign so far has been a mere polite whimper, despite the endorsement of UNESCO and the frantic handwringing of university professors in many lands, including the United States.

(Latest word is that work on dam, for which USSR funds were promised, is now held up.)

One salient objective is to build a protective wall around the Island of Philae, a treasure trove in the Nile which is now above water only three months a year. Numerous 4,000-year old wonders from the reign of Ramses II and other Pharaohs are at stake. As imaginative film showmen view the situation it is a "natural" in terms of pageantry, intrigue, and awe. But what to do about it? Nobody knows.

Egyptologists have, of course, heard about "Cleopatra," which 20th-Fox is shooting in Rome. That is eagerly awaited, though not directly connected with the Nubian lake which is the modern story of Egypt made graphic by the art colossi in the path of progress. It is acknowledged that Elizabeth Taylor, though on Egypt's poison list, may go a great way toward focussing world attention on Egyption antiquity, and that may help more than somewhat. Inquiry, however, does not reveal that "Cleopatra" producer Walter Wanger or director Joe Manckiewicz have any present intention of linking their love-on-a-barge-in-olden-times with the art salvage problem upstream, now confronting world scholarship.

'Dr. No' Unit to Jamaica

Sean Sonnery and James Bond, who star in the film version of Ian Fleming's novel "Dr. No" and director Terence Young today leave for the British West Indies to begin preparations for location filming on the United Artists release. Albert R. Broccoli and Harry Saltzman produce from Wolf Mankowitz and Dick Maibaum screenplay under Eon Productions banner.

From London, Halsey Raines passed through Manhattan to join unit as publicist.

Hospital Buys Hub Playhouses

Boston, Jan. 16.

Metropolitan Theatre, 4,310-seater opened in 1925, the Wilbur legit theatre, 1,241-seater, and the 14-story Metropolitan office building and parking lot were sold by ABC-Paramount to the Pratt Clinic-New England Center Hospital for a reported $1,300,000 for the entire block in Boston's theatrical district. Agreement to sell was reached in New York Wednesday (10), after an offer was made by the hospital.

Acceptance of the offer came from Paul P. Levin, director of real estate for Paramount, and the hospital confirmed that necessary legal procedures were underway.

"Currently we have no specific plans for the properties in question," Ralph Lowell, chairman of the hospital's board said in connection with the acquisition. "However to have neglected to take advantage of the availability in the interest of foresight might have created planning difficulties at a later date."

New owners of the Wilbur legiter have no intention of razing it, or of putting it to any other than its present use as a legit theatre. Site is leased to Jujamcyn Amusement Corp., owners of the Colonial, Boston; St. James, New York; and Shubert, Philadelphia. It is believed the legit house has a seven year lease with Jujamcyn.

However, there is no certainty as to what will happen to the Metropolitan.

NAME DAVID RAPHEL 20TH'S INT'L H.O. REP

David Raphel, 20th-Fox TV International's manager for Europe and the middle east, has been appointed homeoffice rep for 20th International, Murray Silverstone, prexy, has announced. He'll headquarter in N. Y. and act as liaison between the h.o. and European offices, acting under overall direction of international veep Emanuel Silverstone.

Assistant to the sales manager in France in 1950, Raphel the following year was named assistant to general manager in Italy, and in 1954 took over as general manager, Holland. Subsequently he served as assistant to continental European manager and in 1959 became manager of the new international tv operation.

didn't worry about her individual pix. That, however, would be unfair, since there has been at least one Bardot pic which was not condemned. That was Columbia's 1960 import, "Babette Goes to War." The film won an A-II rating (unobjectionable for adults and adolescents) and was a big disappointment at the boxoffice.

But the French are not all bad. Of the 77 films listed by the Legion as A-I (morally unobjectionable for general patronage) in the Jan. 18 bulletin, one is a French import. This oddity is Continental Distributing's "La Belle A Americaine. Robert Dhery's wacky comedy which is now playing its first U. S. dates.

Is Tax Reform Coming In 1962?

own, or with partners, or as a company. Taxes decide whether we have one or more companies, whether we set up the capitalization of the company with stock, debt or both, whether a company pays dividends—when and how much, and whether to merge, liquidate, or stay put.

In show business, taxes not artists are the stars. Rhyming June with moon is no longer the trick, but rather making sweet music with capital gains.

Taxes uproot the geography of performers and performances. While the financial people are pulling their hair out about the flight of the dollar, Americans in the cultural field are discovering the flight from income taxes.

Taxes make producers out of playwrights, directors, scenic designers, actors. Taxes make packages out of people. Taxes make secretaries out of wives (there's an interesting twist!)

Well, it won't be long before those days are gone forever. More and more people are getting burned up about the "tax mess." These heat waves register on the sensitive antenna with which Congressional radar is equipped. Net(work) result: a new spectacular—tax reform.

Tax Reform In '62-'63

Tax reform will be in the air in 1962 and on the air in 1963. The auditioning, casting, rehearsals, and run-through will take place this year, but the opening will be next year. That's because the Congressional producer must leave Washington early to tend to his personal knitting this year. The year 1962 is election year for everyone in the House of Representatives and for one-third of the Senate. Along about July, Congress will begin to long for the old folks at home. The tax reform show will take a back seat to the election show.

We can begin to sense what the tax script will look like. The play will be in four acts, to deal with the four basic things that are now out of gear. The four things are: rates are too high, there are too many so-called loopholes, the law is too complicated, and enforcement is incomplete.

All four areas will be tackled. In the process, some of us had better prepare for the fact that we will have to give up benefits that we now consider part of our God-given rights.

Rate reduction, of first importance, will depend on a lot of other things. The world situation and military requirements are some of those things. If they don't upset the applecart, then the extent to which rates are reduced will depend on how sweeping is the elimination of loopholes.

Act II will be about loopholes. That is the one really to watch. It is the climax, the payoff. Here are some of the ideas now running rampant that will make show business people sit up and take notice.

First, there is likely to be something very much on the plus side. Instead of figuring taxes on the basis of year-by-year earnings, average income will be the yardstick for those who go through wide ups and downs from year to year. Show business is a typical boom and bust, feast and famine affair. Leveling off the peaks and valleys through averaging will correct the lopsidedness in the law today. It will flatten out the rate brackets and be kinder to the pocketbook when income fluctuates.

Getting Tougher

On the other hand, the ring-around-rosey to make things look, sound, and smell like a capital gain, will be stripped of its makeup. Anything that fundamentally is a payment for services will be treated and taxed as service income, no matter how skillfully masquerading in capital gain costumes. As a matter of fact, with lower tax rates and a system of averaging, the whole idea of capital gains may go the way of all flesh and be yanked out of the tax law altogether.

Foreign shores; staying out of the country 17 out of 18 months; or planting a residential tent abroad, will lose tax glamor. The savings now possible will be sharply cut and ultimately cut out.

Entertainment expense deductions will take it on the chin. They will be severely curbed, and what's left will be severely audited. If this still leaves room for an end-run, the ball will be booted out of the park, and the deduction taken out of the script.

That is the shape of some of the things to come. No matter how the tax play is cut, it will still feel overwritten. We can't get from government without giving to government.

Here's consolation of a sort. Back in the 18th Century there was a savvy economist by the name of Adam Smith. He said that taxes are the badge of a democracy. Well, if taxes are the badge of a democracy our country is safe for democracy for a long, long time, and we're going to have a mighty big badge to show it.

Marlon Brando, which is way overboard at a negative cost of $18,000,000, or thereabouts.

It's well within the realm of reason that both projects eventually will come out all right. But in the meantime there's the uncertainty.

Wall Streeters and film company board members from either the management or financial ends like it fine that production is now rooted in participations rather than czar rule. Doubtless in large part it's agreeable because the financial partnership arrangements, as brought to the fore by United Artists, simply have become the overall industry's modus operandi and who are they to abandon a hit script.

But what about the new studio heads? How can they win? Credit for a successful production goes to the individual producer. Otto Preminger takes the plaudits for "Exodus," not Samuel Briskin. And at the same time somebody might be looking askance at the Jack Karp-Marty Rackin team at Paramount because Marlon Brando's "One-Eyed Jacks" didn't do so well.

In the years ago Mayer, Zanuck, Cohn, et al., rose or fell with the results of a full season's product. They were the individuals responsible. Now it's on a picture-by-picture basis, and the studio head is the subject of finger-pointing when there's a bust. To some extent the clicks are overlooked because someone else is credited.

And Then I Did 'El Cid'

Dallas, Jan. 16.

Tower Theatre is advertising its next attraction, Charlton Heston and Sophia Loren in Samuel Bronston's "El Cid" (AA), in the theatre's lobby set pieces. No date for the closing of the current Tower film, "King of Kings" (M-G) also produced by Bronston, has been set.

Theatre just wants the public to know that another spectacular is on the theatre's schedule.

by Swimmer and Anthony, which they plan to make in August in Arizona. They are negotiating with Burl Ives and Chill Wills to costar. Prior to "Sowbelly," they will start "Wounds of Hunger," Louis Spota novel, Feb. 20 in Mexico. Anthony will costar with Jean Seberg with picture to be made on a budget "under $1,000,000," Klein said. Swimmer also has two additional originals in preparation which he will direct for III Task, though Anthony will not star.

Partners have just completed "Without Each Other," also an original by Swimmer and Anthony, in Florida. Anthony costars with Brud Talbot. Dimitri Tiomkin scored, with release negotiations now in the works.

Trio started the company two years ago when Swimmer and Anthony, both 23 years old, left Carnegie Tech. They stress pix they make are strictly commercial fare and do not want to be considered "new wave" producers.

Harold Heifetz has optioned Olaf Ruhen's novel "Naked Under Capricorn" and plans to coproduce in Australia from his own screenplay.

Little Messages To Film Producers

BRITAIN RIDES THE TIDES

The British were not the first great international traders. There were the Phoenicians well ahead of them in history. But the British have long been, and still are, remarkably astute import-export operators. In the feature film production and distribution sweepstakes, it is worthy of admiration that Great Britain has managed two notable comebacks after survival-threatening world wars. (Parenthetically, there is also the remarkable upsurge of today's BBC which was, prior to 1939, the world leader in television).

British theatrical films have unique traits, of which their humorous playing with topical problem themes is in point. Less devoted than Hollywood to the "star system," the British have carved a special place for their comedy, foreign adventure and horror product, along with much else.

In connection with their global salesmanship it is significant that the British utilize the nationally and internationally read pages of this publication for their sales messages to the American and world film markets. During 1961 the organizations appended alphabetically hereto appeared in

VICTIMS IN ART—NAZI NECROLOGY

Berlin, Jan. 9.

During last fall's 11th annual Berlin Cultural Festival a gruesome list was compiled and exhibited under the title, "Jewish Art In The Furnace." Some of the artists also ended in the ovens of Hitler hatred. Designed to remind visitors to the festival of the notable contributions to Germany's artistic life of Jews (and others) up until the Nazi regime, the list is a shocking reminder of the personal tragedies. Those who were condemned, beaten, executed were matched by many suicides both within the Reich and in foreign countries.

As for those who died of broken hearts and careers in the United States, Switzerland, and other havens, nobody can do more than guess the toll of man's inhumanity to man. Herewith the sordid necrology (incomplete) of artists of various kinds whose lives were forefeited or ruined because they were Jews, associated with or married to Jews, or found themselves for other reasons on the German nationalists' death rolls:

Julius Bab (died in 1955 in New York)

New Characters in the Ink Well; Could Be a Bullish Cartoon Year

By WILLIAM ORNSTEIN

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Expressing optimism for the cartoon industry, Lawrence Kilty, biz manager for Screen Cartoonists Local 839, IATSE, looks for a "substantial year" in the pen-and-ink field for 1962.

A number of producers in cartoonery are reported planning or working on ideas for new series to be projected after the turn of the year. These would supplement subjects which already have gained favor with tv sponsors.

Warner Bros., now producing 26 half hour "Bugs Bunny" shows for the second consecutive year, is preparing two new pilots requested by ABC-TV. Filming of sample subjects is expected to get under way about the middle of January.

Two series are "The Wonderful World of Filbert" and "Road Runner."

"Filbert" will be produced by David H. De Patie, based on an idea by WB cartoon creator Bill Shalit who will appear live with Joanna Barnes. The first episode will deal with the adventures of a comic strip artist—Shalit—and his character Filbert, and will be aimed at adult audiences. Fritz Freleng will be animation director.

"Runner," a standard character in theatrical cartoons, sometimes appearing in "Bugs Bunny," will have a coyote with him in the new series. No old animations will be used, it was stated. All sketches will be new, according to DePatie, general manager for WB's cartoon studio.

Hanna - Barbera, whose "Yogi Bear" and "Flintstones" rate high in tv animations, among others, is "thinking" about four new half hour pilots for next season's offering. Nothing has yet developed to any stage for discussion, but the creative minds in H-B's successful operation are expected to crystallize one or more formats after January, maybe in the spring or summer, at the latest.

Other studios are said to have idea men giving considerable thought for new 1962 pilots, several asserting, like H-B, it is too early to tell what will happen with nebulous plans until they are put on paper and presented for fruition.

MM's 'Give' Rolls March 15; Weinstein's Producer Yr. Also Includes Bergman

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

With script changes in process, 20th-Fox plans to start cameras rolling March 15 on "Something's Got To Give," Marilyn Monroe's last for the studio.

Producer Henry T. Weinstein, who has taken over from David Brown, recently finished "Tender Is the Night' with Jennifer Jones, plans to start "The Visit", with Ingrid Bergman in England in September, and hopes to film "Faster, Faster" starring Shelly Winters after she winds up the play in the east under Frank Corsaro's direction.

Corsaro recently directed Tennessee William's "Night of the Iguana" and most likely will direct Miss Winters in the pic version of "Faster." This may be filmed away from 20th.

With Misses Jones, Bergman, Monroe, and Winters in his pix, Weinstein figures if ever there were a woman's producer he's it.

Saul Cooper Exits 20th For Par Pub Shuttle

Saul Cooper has been named national publicity coordinator and liaison between the studio and home office ad-pub departments at Paramount.

He's resigning a press post at 20th-Fox to rejoin Par where previously he had been assistant publicity manager.

PAUL GROSZ TO UA

Succeeds Jaediker as Art Mgr.—Was With 20th-Fox

Paul Grosz, 20th-Fox art manager for the last five years, has shifted to United Artists as art director, succeeding Herbert Jaediker, who recently retired after 30 years with UA.

Grosz has been in the film industry 33 years, and prior to joining 20th 14 years ago, held various positions with Universal, Warners, Paramount and several agencies.

'Victim' Special-Tag For Decency Legion Though Sans Code Imprimatur

"Victim," British import dealing with homosexuality which was denied a Production Code seal last month, has been given a "separate classification" by the Legion of Decency. The SC tag is given those pix which "while not morally offensive in themselves, require caution and some analysis and explanation" to avoid misinterpretation.

Legion says the subject matter of "Victim" is treated with integrity but adds that while it high lights social aspects of the problem, it "gives insufficient statement to the moral issues."

At the same time, the LOD has given an A-III rating (morally unobjectionable for adults) to United Artists' "The Children's Hour," which also touches on perversion (and which was approved by the Code). Legion notes that "Hour" is being advertised by UA as recommended for adults only.

Universal's Rock Hudson - Doris Day starrer, "Lover, Come Back," has received a B rating (morally objectionable in part for all). LOD comments that the fact the film is a comedy cannot excuse its "vulgar treatment of marriage, glamorized sexual promiscuity, suggestiveness in song, dialog and situations."

Kingsley International's French import, "The Five-Day Lover," has been condemned because of its "mockery of marriage and traditional morality" and "salacious and indecent treatment."

Pathe-America's British import, "Whistle Down the Wind," with young Hayley Mills starred, booked for 12 keys of the Texas Interstate circuit, commencing March 1.

Alicoate Reelected As N.Y. Variety Barker

Charles A. Alicoate has been reelected Chief Barker of the New York Variety Club Tent No. 35. Jack H. Levin was named first assistant barker and Irving Dollinger, second assistant barker. Robert K. Shapiro was elected new Property Master while Jack Hoffberg continues as Dough Guy.

Canvassmen for 1962 are Bud Edele, Walt Framer, Salah Hassanein, Charles Smakwitz, George Waldman and Harold Zeltner. James Carreras will fly from London to rep Variety International at the installation luncheon, Jan. 16 at the Hotel Astor.

The N.Y. Tent's crew has voted to exert strong efforts at the Variety International convention in Dublin next May to have New York City named as the 1964 International Convention City.

Ken Darling, Producer; Readying 'Ring & Spur' For Arizona Location

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Maydale Productions has been formed by produce-writer Kenneth Darling to produce three independent features. First will be "Ring and the Spur," original by Darling, for which he has set James Coburn, Noah Beery, James Griffith and Wallace Ford. Negotiations are on for Ruth Roman to play the femme lead, with pre-production to begin Jan. 15 at Producers' Studio.

Picture will be shot in Arizona in Panavision and Eastmancolor on a budget of $400,000. Winton Hoch is cinematographer.

Harold Knox is associate producer on "Ring" and will function similarly on "George," to go in May, and "The Last Resort." Both are originals.

Darling just completed "Ballad of Dancers' Rock" under Gray-mac banner, with Martin Landau, Warren Stevens costarred. Earl Bellamy directed.

1920-1940 Classics Unreel At City College Course

City College via its Institute of Film Technics is giving a 15-week course starting Feb. 6 in cinema history. Vaulties from the 1920-1940 period will be unreeled along with commentary.

The professor: Herman G. Weinberg.

No New Cinerama House for 'West' In Hollywood

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Despite Cinerama's prexy Nicolas Reisini repeated assurances "How the West Was Won," first of two-partnered pix with MGM, would be presented in a brand new theatre on Hollywood Blvd. come July 4, the triple-screen production will make its local debut at the Chinese, flagship of National Theatres & Television.

Deal between Reisini and NT&T prexy Eugene Klein was finalized Friday (12) whereby circuit will exhibit the $12,000,000 pic on a 90-10 rental arrangement.

Reisini, accompanied by Max Youngstein and attorney Sidney Davis planed back to New York (13) after five-day visit with MGM Studio, Cinerama Studio, NT&T and Cooper Foundation execs.

Until the deal was cemented with NT&T, all indications pointed to Cooper Foundation, which built the maiden Super Cinerama in Denver last March, signing with Reisini for a 1,200-seat house to cost $2,500,000 at Hollywood & Vista Delmar, one block east of Pantages. Cooper prexy Kenneth Anderson planed in from his Lincoln, Neb. headquarters earlier in the week. He spent four days lining up a 400 x 175 parcel owned by A. E. England, Pontiac dealer.

Anderson is understood to have promised the new Super Cine between July 4 and Sept. 1 for preeming "How." He is further said to have assured Reisini the key date of July 4 could be met, if necessary with extra crews to finish it on time.

Rather than take any chances, Cinerama chief decided on the Chinese, currently two-a-day-ing Mirisch Bros. "West Side Story." House will be closed for few weeks to allow installation of wall-to-wall Cinerama screen and accompanying equipment (both of which are loaned with rental deal).

Within the next week or so Cinerama will set a house in Times Square sector in New York. Bernie Kranze has been talking to Stanley Warner's film buyer Max Fellman about the Warner on 47th St. & Broadway. Cinerama's five travelogues played there.

FOOD, SOAP & CIGGIE CHA-CHA

Ed Sullivan: 'Me Thin -Skinned?'

Ed Sullivan denies he's thin-skinned to fair criticism from newspaper reviewers. In his series of broadcasts on CBS Radio's "Personal Story" last week, Sullivan maintained he should be reviewed, not as a performer on his weekly Sunday night tv show, but as an impresario assembling a variety show.

"I resented and still resent criticism which is unfair," commented Sullivan. "Critics always evaluate me as a performer and some used to moan, 'Why does CBS permit Ed Sullivan to be on tv Sunday nights?' They were reviewing me as a performer when my function actually was to assemble and routine a variety show. Now if these critics had gone on to say that Sullivan should not be permitted on tv 'because the acts he selects are inferior,' I would have been hurt but not nettled.

"Another shaft always referred to 'Sullivan's predilection for introducing his friends in the audience.' They made it appear as though I were introducing my tailor or barber or insurance agent by way of paying them off for such introductions. But I knew people were always fascinated by interesting faces and names on page one. I knew they would enjoy seeing Leo Durocher and his new wife, Laraine Day, or Joe Louis a day or so after his thrilling fight with Joe Walcott, so I had them take bows in my audience."

Shakespeare as Aubrey's Key Aide Dramatizes Prexy's Plight

Last week's appointment of Frank J. Shakespeare Jr. as v.p. and assistant to CBS president James T. Aubrey Jr. dramatizes the plight of a network prexy today, stemming from the increased tensions and pressures, particularly those emanating from the FCC-Newton Minow and Congressional precincts, plus the mounting competitive picture. Since any network prexy worth his salt these days has to be all things to all people, doubling (and tripling) in brass, a round-the-clock workday has become par for the course.

In taking Shakespeare out of the station area (he has been veepee of the CBS Television Stations Division and general manager of the highly-successful WCBS-TV New York flagship) as his key aide, Aubrey thus hopes to alleviate some of these pressures. The fact that all of the major administrative aides on the CBS 19th floor—Bill Hylan, Oscar Katz, Spence Harrison—will continue to report to Aubrey suggests that the latter will concern himself chiefly with masterminding the sales-programming operation, with Shakespeare relieving him of the Washington problems, etc. Shakespeare moved into his new post on Monday (15).

Going into Shakespeare's slot as general manager of the New York flagship is Norman E. Walt Jr., who has been general sales manager of the station. Latter is 33; Shakespeare is 36.

Additional appointments at the station are Jerry Danford, promoted from assistant general sales manager to general sales manager, and Bud Hirsch, account exec, to assistant sales manager.

Shakespeare for some time had been regarded as "on the way up" with a record of accomplishment on station management and sales. He joined CBS in 1950. He was named general sales manager of WCBS-TV in '54, three years later moved to WXIX, then a CBS-owned station in Milwaukee, and in December '58 to New York as general manager of WCBS-TV.

Write Me a Com'l

George Schafer, who has brought tv "Macbeth," has now produced a tv commercial, his first.

He's using it all this week on WNBC-TV, N.Y., to plug his legit production, "Write Me a Murder." The blurb might be called a hard-sell since it starts off with the report of a pistol.

Queen Was In The Parlor But On Whose Channel?

London, Jan. 16.

Big discrepancy in TAM (Television Audience Measurement Ltd.) and BBC figures for the Queen's Christmas broadcast dominated the top 20 ratings for the week ended December 31, 1961. TAM claimed that 5,941,000 homes saw the Queen's-broadcast of which 3,699,000 were tuned to the independent web and 2,242,000 to the Corporation's channel. Worked out on a basis of three people per home, TAM's figures indicate that 11,097,000 saw the Queen on commercial tv while only 6,726,000 saw her on BBC-TV.

According to BBC, which conducts a door-to-door survey as opposed to TAM's sample with electronic meters attached to their sets, some 18,000,000 saw the royal broadcast of which only 5,500,000 watched on the Indie web. Neither camp will comment on the gap between the two estimates.

The corporation claims that on Christmas day viewers spent nearly twice as much time watching the BBC-TV channel as they did commercial tv. Between 11 a.m. and 11 p.m. average BBC-TV audience was estimated at 10,700,000 against the competition's 4,900,000, says the Corp.

NBC-TV to Strip 4th 5-Min. News

Flushed with sales success, NBC News is on the verge of planting a fourth five-minute daytime news strip on its tv web this coming spring. Final decision will take care of Ed Newman, who was lately displaced as newscaster on "Today" so that host John Chancellor could get more intensive exposure.

Newman is tentatively slated to take up the five minute daily newscast either at 10:25 or 10:55 a.m. His show will be in addition to Ray Scherer's 12:55 strip, Floyd Kalber's 2:25 strip and Sander Vanocur's 4:55 strip. All three are sold.

Chances for Newman look excellent, it is reported. If he goes on, it'll be in April.

NBC-TV STYMIED ON JOHNNY CARSON DEAL

NBC-TV has placed a high premium on the value of Johnny Carson as Jack Paar's latenight replacement this coming spring, but reportedly ABC-TV is holding up the deal and may yet kill it completely. NBC hasn't given up hope yet, however, and has MCA in there trying to work it out so that ABC will come through with a release.

Don Fedderson, producer of "Who Do You Trust?" the ABC-TV daytime strip which Carson emcees, is said quite willing to release the performer to NBC-TV. ABC-TV, on the other hand, has a pact with producer Fedderson, and reportedly threatens to quit "Trust" if Carson is released.

3 WEBS LAUNCH SELLING SEASON

By GEORGE ROSEN

This week marks the official opening of the '62-'63 selling season on tv network programming, and from the looks of things, it'll be the most hotly competitive one thus far. (Over the past couple of weeks practically every major program executive at the agencies has been jetting to the Coast to size up the rough cuts on new shows and move in on studio product long before the shows are set.) As for the networks, a period of frantic activity has already started, with the food, soap and ciggie clients as the initial targets.

Perhaps best symbolizing the intra-network jockeying for sponsor favor is the pitching going on for some $25,000,000 in General Foods billings. It's no secret that all three networks are hot after the business. (And it's all straight, legitimate business, with no discounts, except for contiguous slotting of shows.)

GF historically has always been in the CBS family, as witness currently two Top 10 comedy faves, "Danny Thomas Show" and "Andy Griffith Show," along with the "Gertrude Berg Show," "Hennessey" and "I've Got a Secret." Aside from the fact that CBS has GF locked up tight for Danny Thomas next season, same Monday night at 9 slot, GF is wide open and uncommitted. It can take Andy Griffith any place it chooses. NBC is offering Monday night 9 to 10 following "Price Is Right" as the major come-on; ABC will gladly reserved the Wednesday post-"Wagon Train" time.

Along with General Foods, there's a major three-network scramble for better than $25,000,000 in Procter & Gamble biz. Like GF, P & G owns most of its shows ("Rifleman," "Real McCoys," Dick Van Dyke, "Car 54." It also sponsors Joey Bishop, P & G's current big yen is for half-hour comedy and, unlike GF which generally covets one network, the Cincy soap people play the field. Within the next couple of weeks P & G will be ready to decide what looks good for next season and where it will go. It's a juicy plum and all three webs are in for the kill.

The third major lump of billings is divided between Lever Bros. and Colgate. (These are the four pillars of network biz, estimated at between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 per season.) Where and how Lever and Colgate intend to go in '62-'63 will be resolved shortly. It's all wide open, part and parcel of the big scramble now on.

When GF, P&G, Lever and Colgate fall into place, there's another $60,000,000 or so in ciggie sponsorship coin to be resolved. Most of it comes from American Tobacco, R. J. Reynolds, Brown & Williamson and Liggett & Myers, the outfits that love those minute participations on hour shows. They'll be buying into about eight programs each. All are bent on the same mission—to grab off the highest-rated hour each night of the week and spread the largesse with one or two minutes on each show. The ciggie company that can stake out the most franchises on the highest circulation shows, just as B & W succeeded in doing a couple seasons back when ABC crime-adventure was running away with the Nielsens, has really got it made.

Once the food, soap and ciggie accounts are in, from then on fits bits and pieces, with the automotive billings, traditionally, coming up the rear.

Most of the sales are still three-four weeks away, pending arrival of the hour pilots between Feb. 1 and March 1. But most of those half-hour franchises will be locked up by the end of January.

It's bombs away!

'CBS Reports' Quitting Prime Time 10-11 Berth In Move-Up to 7:30 Slot; Benny-Skelton Back-to-Back Parlay

Obit

"Death in the City Room," an account of the decrease in the number of American newspapers will be telecast by "CBS Reports" on Thursday (25) night.

The telementary will highlight the recent foldo of two Los Angeles dailies, Mirror and Examiner. Sequences of the Los Angeles demise were filmed Friday (5), the day the two papers ceased publication. It will show reporters and editors as they wrapped up personal affairs and cleaned out their desks for the last time. There also will be interviews with several staffers during the wake held at a nearby bar.

CBS News correspondent Charles Collingwood, who does the "WCBS-TV Views the Press" show, will be the tv reporter. Others on the program will be Mark Ethridge, chairman of the board of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, and Louis Seltzer, editor of the Cleveland Press.

For all its noble intent of reserving Thursday night 10 to 11 for "CBS Reports", the network apparently is giving up the good fight of trying to compete against such pop and papfaves as "Untouchables" and "Sing Along With Mitch" with public affairs programming. A scheme is now afoot to move "CBS Reports" into a weekly 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. berth next season, probably maintaining the Thursday night continuity, thus releasing the hot prime 10 to 11 hour for commercial programming.

Actually CBS is acting on the precedent that the Leonard Bernstein-N.Y. Philharmonic series could take on added lustre and win a new host of friends through its educational appeal to youthful listeners, there's no reason why the same thinking shouldn't redound to the benefit of "CBS Reports."

A reshuffle of the Sunday-Monday-Tuesday CBS sked has been getting close scrutiny, with the following "plots" now being given serious consideration:

The shift of Jack Benny from Sunday night 9:30 to Tuesday night 9:30, thus strengthening the Tuesday roster with a back-to-back comedic parlay of Red Skelton (at 9) and Benny. With Sunday 9 to 10 opening up through the shift of Benny and the dropping of "GE Theatre", it's now likely that "Candid Camera" will be moved up from Sunday at 10 to Sunday at 9.

A new half-hour comedy series starring Lucille Ball will probably get the nod for Monday night 8:30, since the current tenant, the Robert Young "Window on Main St.", won't be back. And it's likely that the preceding half-hour, at 8, will go to "I've Got A Secret" (in a shift from Monday night 10:30), thus giving it a back-to-back status with another Goodson-Todman entry, "To Tell the Truth", occupying Monday 7:30.

Hurleigh Blasts Dailies' Sticking Knife into TV-AM

Washington, Jan. 16.

Mutual Broadcasting prexy Robert Hurleigh, agreeing to be a last minute substitute speaker, delivered a stinging denunciation of broadcasting's newspaper critics at the annual dinner of the Federal Communications Bar Assn. here Friday (12.)

Assn. was in a bind when Edward R. Murrow, U.S. Information Agency, had to cancel out as the banquet orator to go to Africa.

Chairman Newton Minow of the Federal Communications Commission and Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.) of the House Commerce Committee were head table guests as Hurleigh observed pointedly that newspapers are after the same advertising dollar as broadcasting and take every opportunity with the printed word to stick the knife into television and radio.

And, he added, most newspapers show less interest for the public interest than broadcasters do.

He quoted Mark Ethridge, respected Louisville Courier-Journal chieftain, in a recent article for the journal of the Center for Democratic Institutions as saying the attitude of most publishers of dailies is "it doesn't make much difference what newspapers say as long as the balance sheets are all right."

To come to the rescue of the Assn., Hurleigh had to delay an important financial meeting with the toppers of his web's parent company, Minnesota Mining.

LINDSAY NELSON EXITS NBC FOR METS

Lindsay Nelson will be handling the play-by-play on the telecasts of the new New York National League baseball club, The Mets, when the season opens at the Polo Grounds in April. The Mets' games, which have been bought for tv by Liebman Breweries for Rheingold Beer, will likely wind up on WOR-TV, but the deal has not been locked up.

Nelson is moving out of NBC-TV where he did the baseball "Game of the Week" last season.

Eureka! A Live TV Drama From Coast

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

A two-part, two-hour live teledrama about the Brink's robbery in Boston will be aired from NBC-TV's studios in Burbank in May as part of the "DuPont Show of the Week" series. It marks the first live nighttime drama for NBC-TV from the Coast in a long time.

Signed as producer-director of the as yet untitled project is Franklin Schaffner, who directed "Advise and Consent" on Broadway. Loring Mandel, author of that hit, will write the teleplay. The show will be taped in April.

Schaffner first functions as producer-director of Jackie Kennedy's White House tour, an upcoming CBS-TV special. Both the producer-director and Mandel were repped by Ziegler, Hellman & Ross in the NBC negotiations.

Charles Marquis Warren Exits CBS To Go Indie

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Producer-writer Charles Marquis Warren, creator of the tv version of "Gunsmoke," and of "Rawhide" and "Gunslinger," has left CBS-TV with his CMW Productions following a six-year association, in order to return to the indie field.

Warren retains "substantial" participation ownership in the three series, also has a residual deal on "Gunsmoke." He was the producer-director of "Gunsmoke" when it first went on tv.

Warren is developing several projects to be made by his CMW outfit.

What If Something Red Hot Broke O'Seas During NBC-CBS Yak-Yak Time

Washington, Jan. 16.

The capital's provincial coterie of journalists played rail birds as the foreign correspondent teams of NBC and CBS ran a relay race.

It turned out to be not so much a question as to who won but whether or not they were running on the same track. And it may possibly have been the only such race in history where both teams left the oval to take after the starter; in this case, Newton Minow.

At any rate, CBS was first off the mark, with its seven experts who passed the baton of world synopsizing at the National Press Club luncheon and produced the cumulative impression that the world isn't in such sad shape after all and may even be beginning to glimmer.

NBC followed two days later with its version which was deeper, more serious, more rehearsed, and quite possibly as a result, a lot gloomier.

Minow took much kidding in the process. Samples: Pete Kalischer, CBS man in Asia, told of a toast at a New Year's Eve party he attended which went—"To a mellower Minow."

CBS Emcee Eric Sevareid, commiserating with David Schoenbrun over the latter's switch from Paris to Washington, told him: "You shouldn't have too much trouble. In France a judge sometimes acts as prosecutor. Over here we just call it the FCC."

That's the way it was at the CBS session. There were quips, ad libs, an altogether lighter vein. The cast, besides Sevareid, Kalischer and Schoenbrun, included Charles Kuralt from Latin America; Blaine Littell, Africa; Alex Kendrick, London; Richard Hottelet, the United Nations; Daniel Schorr, Germany; and Marvin Kalb, Moscow.

Hottelet, Schorr and Kalb drew applause for their more emotional analyses of the past year in their bailiwicks.

NBC's doomsdayers were led through their paces by Sander Vanocur, White House beat man. Each correspondent read his pre-

FBI TV Special As WB Entry For ABC

For the first time in its history, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is putting its stamp of approval on a non-documentary drama slated for television via the ABC-TV network. Warner Bros. will start rolling the tv special later this month at its Burbank, Calif., studios and various locations called for by the story of a group of Americans enmeshed in a crime which is solved by FBI techniques. The FBI has approved the shooting script.

The tv special, not yet given a telecasting date by the ABC web, will probably be of 90 minutes or two-hours duration since WB is planning to release the film theatrically outside of the U.S. Stanley Niss is producing and Les Martinson is directing the show with the FBI providing technical assistance. WB chief Jack L. Warner said it would be one of the most expensive shows ever produced for television.

GEORGE ZACHARY TO GREY AGENCY

George Zachary, formerly in the tv programming department at Kenyon & Eckhardt agency, will reportedly take over as programming veepee at Grey agency, replacing Gene Accas, who has moved to Leo Burnett Co.'s New York office as veepee, network relations.

Zachary joined Grey less than a week ago and is reporting to Al Hollender, exec veepee who oversees the agency's broadcast activities. Accas was recently named programming veep at Grey, having previously served as veepee of network relations. He also was six years at ABC-TV and at one time was with the Television Bureau of Advertising.

Emmy Show Is SRO

The Emmy telecast scheduled by NBC-TV for May 22 is now SRO. Timex and Proctor & Gamble picked up thirds to bring the annual stanza to the filled-up line.

Initial buy was made by Schlitz which took a third. P&G then took a half, but when Timex would not settle for the remaining sixth, the network requested P&G to go from half back to third sponsorship. The soap house went along.

ABC Bankrolling 25 New Pilots; WB, Revue Hot

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

A minimum of 25 hour and half-hour pilots is being bankrolled by ABC-TV, which has been scanning projects of almost every vidfilmery in Hollywood for next season's programming. The many co-production deals indicate there is a lot of reshuffling in order for the network for the next semester. Most of the ABC-TV loot, approximating several millions of dollars, is earmarked for pilots at Warner Bros., with eight, and Revue, with nine, six of them spinoffs on "Alcoa Premiere."

Latest ABC-TV co-production deals are for Four Star's "Josie and Joe," a half-hour comedy created by Garson Kanin; and "The Plainsmen," 60-min. Revue series.

The network is picking up the tab for two Screen Gems pilots; one at 20th-Fox, where another such deal is in negotiation; three at Selmur Productions; one at Heyday Productions (Leonard Stern's "The Workers"); one with Chislaw ("Keely," half-hour comedy starring Keely Smith; one with Daystar Productions ("Rodeo," starring Jack Lord).

ABC-TV is also involved in co-production with Revue for the comedy, "Double Trouble"; four comedy spinoffs on "The Donna Reed Show"; "The Human Comedy" at MGM-TV; "Misty" at 20th-Fox; "Come A' Running," Bing Crosby Productions. At Warners the net is involved in "Lone Sierra," formerly "Timber Hill"; "Perils of Pauline"; "The Barnstormers" (formerly "Black Gold"); "It's Murder"; "Entre Nous"; "The Dakotas," and "Philberts.

Altogether, it's an exceptional amount of activity on the part of ABC-TV, and presages many changes in the network's program for next season.

Brit. Exchequer Puts $1,134,000 Bite On Com'l TV's Surplus

London, Jan. 16.

In spite of its attempts to hang onto a $3,650,000 1960-61 surplus, the Independent Television Authority has been ordered to hand over about one third of it, $1,134,000, to the national exchequer. This marks the first time the Postmaster-General has made use of his powers under the Television Act which set up commercial tv in the U.K.) to extract revenue from ITA.

In a statement, the PMG, Reginald Bevins, said: "The government considers that this contribution is justified by the present state of the economy and the strong financial position of the Authority." ITA argued that it was not prudent to take the money until the extent of upcoming expenditure (for example: 625-line transmitters) was known.

Bevins, however, granted that the ITA's reserve fund should get an equal $1,134,000 bringing the fund's total to $5,376,000. Rest will be carried to capital reserves to meet the net cost of capital expenditure during 1960-61.

Brit. TV Strike Stymies NBC On 'Man of World'

London, Jan. 16.

Despite desperate efforts by British Lion Films, Shepperton studio and Incorporated Television Company to persuade British Actors' Equity to lift its blockage on the "Man Of The World" series, the union has not allowed the vidfilm to go ahead. This means that a projected deal with NBC is almost certainly off (for the time being, at any rate), as the web needed at least one segment to show sponsors by the end of February. Unless Equity has a change of heart within the next few days, ITC cannot meet the deadline.

Failure to secure the go ahead for "Man Of The World" will cost Associated TeleVision dear (ITC is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the British company) for not only will it lose revenue from the expected sale to NBC, it has to pay off camera crews and meet other overheads incurred when the series was set up earlier this month. Craig Stevens, who was to star in the program, is another costly item. It is expected that ATV will now try to find a new vehicle for him.

According to ITC, Equity was given extensive assurances and guarantees that the series would not be shown on commercial tv in the U.K. until three months after the current dispute had ended, thus allowing ATV to build up a "substantial" proportion of live programming. Also, ITC promised that no revenue would be accepted from sale of the skein in the U.S. until after the dispute had been settled.

As an extra incentive to Equity, the company guaranteed to employ at least 1,300 actors (and 900 technicians) in 1962 on two further series "Collectors Item" and "The Amazing Doctor Thorndyke." The union's refusal—"because we will not let ATV or any other company stockpile programs whether on film or tape"—is seen in the ATV camp as the possible start of an undermining of U.S. confidence in British production. From a prestige point-of-view, the company feels, "Man Of The World" would have done plenty for British video production. It had a top U.S. star, was to have been shot in color (if NBC picked up the color pilot) and was to have been the biggest-budgeted vidfilm series to be made here, nearing $2,000,000.

Revue Ups Christie

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Revue Studios has elevated "Wagon Train" producer Howard Christie to exec producership, and assigned him to develop two new pilots for the company.

Christie is exec producer of "The Plainsman," 60-min. action-adventure pilot taken from the 1936 Paramount picture starring Gary Cooper. The pilot rolls in about two weeks and tests for the leads will be held this week.

IBEW Electricians Mulling 1-Day Work Stoppage in TV and Radio

Local 1212 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has notified its rank-and-file that it is "seriously considering" a one-day work stoppage in all radio and tv shops within the next month if a shorter work week for broadcast technicians isn't put into effect.

Whether the local can pull it off, considering the union has no-strike clauses in its contracts, is another matter. It has been described in some quarters as a partial sympathy move for Local 3 of IBEW. Local 3 is now striking in straight electrical industrial areas for a shorter work week.

Notification to 1212 members from biz boss Leonard Bader also said that the local is now actually negotiating with "certain companies" for a shorter work week. It's understood the companies are radio stations in N.Y. and that 1212 wants about a 30-hour week, exclusive of lunch periods, as opposed to the current 40-hour week that includes lunch periods. Should IBEW fail between now and its designated Jan. 31 deadline to make a short work week deal with the radio outlets, this, too, will be a contributing factor in the threatened one-day walkout at CBS, WNEW, WPIX, Gould Recording Studios, and the other N.Y. shops under 1212's jurisdiction.

Masters Golf Coin

CBS-TV's "Masters Golf Tournament," slated for a Saturday and Sunday in April, has picked up full sponsorship.

Tab will be underwritten by Travelers Insurance Co. and Cluett Peabody, both via Young & Rubicam. Date of the telecast is April 7 and 8, from 5 to 6 and from 4 to 5:30 p.m., in respective afternoons.

Robt. Maxwell's Five TV Series; 'Bride' Renewal

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Renewal Friday (12) by General Mills and Campbell via BBDO of "Father of the Bride" on CBS-TV makes Robert Maxwell perhaps the busiest producer in Hollywood. Maxwell now has five different vidfilm series in various stages of production and just wrapped up filming on a sixth. Renewal on "Bride" is for eight shows and cameras will roll again the second week in February.

Maxwell's other productions, all done with MGM-TV, are "Andy Hardy," "The Human Comedy," and a third series, hitherto unannounced, titled, "Buttons." Latter, the story of a teenaged girl living on a modern working ranch, starts shooting Jan. 22, with the cast headed by Jim Davis, Big Boy Williams and a new find by the producer, Linda Evans. "Buttons" is being done entirely on location. "Hardy," for NBC-TV, will go before the cameras Jan. 25, with "Comedy" for ABC-TV, to roll about the same time.

In addition, Maxwell has a hush-hush series of 18 hourlong dramas using top stars in major story properties in work. He is presently setting both the cast toppers and the stories. Sixth Maxewll series is "National Velvet," on which production was just completed.

ROGER PRYOR EXITING FCB; HAL JAMES IN

Veteran agency exec Roger Pryor plans to retire from Foote, Cone & Belding next fall. He's tv-radio programming v.p. and senior producer, based in the New York office.

Pryor plans to ankle in mid-October. Meanwhile, Hal James, formerly with ITC, has joined the agency as an associate director of broadcasting. He'll supervise tv and radio activities on several accounts, reporting to Jack Simpson, FC&B's veepee and national broadcasting director.

England's Pirate Station In Change of Ownership

London, Jan. 16.

Radio GBLN (formerly The Voice of Slough), the pirate commercial radio station to be set aboard an ex-naval vessel three miles just off the coast of England has changed hands. Control of the company has been relinquished by Canadian journalist John Thompson and now goes to a Canadian radio and tv producer Arnold Swanson. Thompson is to become managing director of the station.

Thompson, who says transmission will begin at the latest in February. Estimates GBLN will rake in more than $5,500,000 a year in ad revenue as opposed to running cost of about $2,000,000. Already billings totalling more than $50,000 have been received, it is claimed.

It is not yet known what action the British government intends to take over the radio ship.

Golf Tourney Sponsor Loot

Wilson Sporting Goods is going to bankroll the windup of the third annual Palm Springs Golf tourney, to be carried by NBC-TV Sunday, Feb. 4.

Deal was set for the 4:30-5:30 stanza by Campbell-Mithun.

'Law & Mr. Jones' In ABC Comeback

Audience pressure reenforced by a strong stand taken by Proctor & Gamble resulted in the comeback of "The Law and Mr. Jones" on the ABC-TV network starting April 19 in the 9:30 p.m. Thursday slot. "Mr. Jones" is bumping "Margie" which is moving into 7:30 p.m. Fridays starting April 20.

P&G, which sponsors "Margie," originally wanted "Mr. Jones" in the ABC-TV Thursday schedule right before "Untouchables." ABC-TV excecs turned the proposition down last spring in favor of the 20th-Fox situation comedy series. While "Margie" failed to live up to expectations, the cancellation of "Mr. Jones" resulted in an unprecedented avalanche of mail protesting the show's blackout.

New deal calls for 13 first-run shows and 13 repeats with an option for renewal next season. Show is a Four Star product with James Whitmore continuing in the star role and Sy Gomberg as producer. Whitmore and Gomberg own 50% of the show in partnership with Four Star.

KAY CAMPBELL TO REP GRANADA IN U.S.

London, Jan. 16.

Miss Kay Campbell, executive assistant to Ed Murrow for the past 24 years, has been appointed New York rep for Granada-TV. Now returned to the U. S., Miss Campbell has been in the U. K. for several weeks studying various aspects of the Granada operation.

Besides promoting the British company, she will also watch out for new writers, plays, artists and coverage of current affairs on American webs.

ABC Radio's Client For Pickup of Space Shot

Sylvania Electric Products, a subsid of General Telephone & Electronics Corp., is picking up the full tab of ABC Radio's coverage of America's first manned orbital space shot scheduled for next Tuesday (23) morning. If the flight goes off according to schedule, ABC Radio will begin its coverage at about 7 a.m.

All other shows with the exception of five-minute newscasts before each hour, are being preempted for the duration of the special event. Kudner Advertising placed the business.

ABC-TV'S YEN FOR LOCAL LOOT

Minow vs JFK: Bad Programming

Washington, Jan. 16.

Newton Minow, in what was termed another bit of "bad programming," made his bow as a speaker before the National Press Club almost simultaneously with President Kennedy's State of the Union message.

Despite the formidable competition, Minow drew a capacity crowd, although one of the most parochial ever to attend such a luncheon.

And as a further feather in his cap, the Federal Communications Chairman was honored by attendance of his ex-law partner, U.N. Ambassador Adlai Stevenson, a surprise guest.

Minow and other dignitaries faithfully watched Kennedy complete his address to Congress before entering the Club's Ball Room to eat. Because Kennedy's speech ran overtime, Minow was late getting underway.

As he joshed: "My sponsor preempted some of my time."

Instead of Predicted 200 Pilots, Only 100 Seen Rolling for '62-'63

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

There's been a sharp outbreak in the number of pilots being filmed in Hollywood, as execs manifest a reluctance to make hazardous investments when the payoff odds are so long. The record shows only 10-12% of pilots sell each year, so execs this semester are showing far more caution before committing themselves. Prospects are there will be about 100 pilots actually made, instead of the 200 predicted last fall when projects were first disclosed.

Four Star prexy Dick Powell said recently he was firmly against making pilots without a network association because it involved too much of a gamble. That represents the thinking of most of the industry, and that's why there have been so many deals made in the past few months wherein networks b.r. pilots from the major studios and indies.

Another move devised to cut the expense and risk of pilot-making is the spinoff, more than ever this season. Via this method a pilot is seen on a going network series, and the investment and risk are virtually nil. Spinoffs are being showcased this semester on series such as "GE Theater," "Bus Stop," "The Dick Powell Show," "Alcoa Premiere," "Bachelor Father," "Tales of Wells Fargo," "Dr. Kildare" and "The Donna Reed Show."

Execs have a two-fold motive in seeking network-financing deals of pilots. Even more important than the coin thus saved is a strong sentiment that if a network likes a project well enough to put its own coin in the pilot, it's much more apt to buy it as a series.

Another money-saving method being used widely this season is the presentation, usually consisting of a film showing samples of the contemplated project, plus a sales pitch. Some presentations are simply elaborate pitches. Obviously, there is a great deal of economy in such methods.

The best way to sell a series sans pilot is when a company can latch onto a w.k. property or star name, or both.

Brit. ABC TV 150G Judgment Vs. NTA

ABC Television Ltd., British commercial broadcasting operation, won a $150,000 judgment against National Theatre Associates in N.Y. Federal Court this week in a suit involving default of payment for films. In 1959, ABC granted NTA subsidiary rights in the U.S. for 37 films in a package totalling $600,000.

NTA has paid $325,000 to date. Beyond the $150,000 in default, NTA also is due to make a final payment of $75,000 in February. ABC had granted NTA an extension last year, but the latter company, which recently divested its WNTA-TV station for $6,000,000 to a New York educational group, was unable to pony up the coin at that time.

Clyne's Maxon Job

Confirming VARIETY's story of several weeks ago, Maxon agency yesterday (Tues.) announced the election of C. Terrence Clyne as a director and member of corporate management.

Clyne was most recently a top McCann-Erickson exec (board veepee and chairman of M-E Productions) where he directed tv programming.

WB in Tizzy Over ABC-TV Indecision On Late Nite Plans

There is some trouble brewing between ABC-TV and old friend Warner Bros. It's said to stem mainly from the network's refusal at the moment to make a definite decision about the use of "Maverick" and "Roaring 20s" reruns in a latenight slot next season. Besides, the onetime love affair has been growing cold for sometime.

Warners wants the network to make up its mind pronto so that it can move ahead with these two series in syndication if the web nixes same. However, it's reported that the network has not yet settled the issue of post-11 p.m. reruns and that goes for rerunning "Wagon Train" entries. If ABC-TV doesn't get enough sponsor interest, it'll again delay its latenight plans and use "Wagon Train" reruns daytime.

CBS Denied Exclusive On Jacqueline's White House Tour; All Webs to Carry

CBS News had the enterprise, but through no fault of its own missed an exclusive on its forthcoming special, "A Tour of the White House with Mrs. John F. Kennedy." The hour show, to be produced by CBS News, also will be telecast by NBC-TV and ABC-TV.

What apparently robbed CBS-TV of its exclusive was a letter written by NBC prexy Robert Kintner to Pierre Salinger, President Kennedy's press secretary. In his letter, Kintner said he mentioned the forthcoming CBS-TV White House tour. Kintner reportedly praised CBS-TV for its enterprise, but said that such a tour of a national institution should be non-exclusive. Kintner's letter to Salinger was said to have dealt mainly with other matters, the White House tour being mentioned in passing.

Following the Kintner letter, Salinger asked and secured a non-exclusive commitment from CBS. It was recalled by a NBC news exec that the White House tour of Truman in '52 was carried by all three networks.

The tour will be telecast by CBS-TV on Feb. 14 from 10 to 11

SEEKS SHARE OF AFFIL REVENUE

ABC-TV this week is initiating what is believed to be the first major move toward committing the affiliated stations to a policy of helping pay the freight on tv network production costs. While the move isn't calculated to invite spectacular returns, nonetheless it represents a thrust toward correcting what the three networks have long felt to be an "imbalance" in the whole economic pattern of network tv vs. stations.

In a sense it's an immediate followup to NBC board chairman Bob Sarnoff's recent protestations (at the NBC affiliate convention in Hollywood) that the stations pocket the profits while the networks are saddled with the costs, and that the time has come for a sweeping reappraisal of the economics of tv so that the networks can get a better shake.

At this week's meeting of the ABC network brass with the Affiliate Board of Governors, which opened Monday (15) in Acapulo, Mexico, ABC will ask that the stations split the coin on all unsold network show minutes which are bankrolled on a local basis. In essence what ABC is asking is that, with the continuing spiraling of operating costs, the web should share equitably in the money that is earned locally on unsold network time.

On certain type of fringe shows, such as the Jack Paar entry, NBC has a somewhat similar arrangements whereby the network gets a piece of the local revenues (on station break cut-ins, etc.), but to expand the thinking to encompass an entire schedule on unsold net work time as in the case of the ABC bid, is something of a precedent. Whether the stations will go for it is something else again.

Another issue which he ABC execs have put to the affils is the question of clearances on the various reshuffles which the web has been making in its evening schedule. Too frequently for comfort, some of the affiliates tend to drop one of the two shows which are involved in these time switches. Another continuing issue is the clearance for the web's 11 p.m. news show. At the present time, some 70 stations are carrying the news show, a figure which is considered to be okay for a novel attempt to sell such a late night network news wrapup, but which the web wants to strengthen.

Heading the web's exec contingent at the meetings are Leonard Goldenson, AB-PT prexy; Oliver Treyz, ABC-TV prez; Tom Moore, v.p. over programming; and Jim Hagerty, news and public affairs v.p. Board of governors will be represented by chairman John F. Dille Jr., WSJV-TV, South Bend; D. A. Noel, WHBQ-TV, Memphis; Mike Shapiro, WFAA-TV, Dallas; Thomas P. Chisman, WVEC-TV, Norfolk; Donald F. Davis, KMBC-TV, Kansas City; Joseph F. Hladky Jr., KCRG-TV, Cedar Rapids; Norman Louvau, KCPX-TV, Salt Lake City; Howard W. Maschmeier, WNHC-TV, Hartford, and M. W. Warren, KOMO, Seattle.

NBC's Shifts in Bid To Strengthen D.C. Image

NBC is setting up new offices in downtown Washington. Move was made by the web to accommodate three D.C. execs, latest of whom is Merryle S. Rukeyser Jr. in a shift from N.Y. headquarters.

Rukeyser, the first NBC director of News Information, D.C., and former NBC trade editor, will share the space with NBC lawyer Howard Monderer and Peter Kenney, newly elected D.C. veep, who is taking the place of Frank M. Russell in the key capital exec position.

Replacing Rukeyser as N.Y. tradepress editor is Alan Baker, formerly his aide.

NBC-TV's Strategy: A 90-Minute Western Blockbuster as Answer To ABC's 'Wagon Train' Slotting?

By ART WOODSTONE

What's one possible way to beat a 60-minute show like "Wagon Train"? Do a 90-minute show like "Wagon Train," naturally.

Worried about what "Wagon" is liable to do to its precious Wednesday night lineup next season when it shifts to ABC-TV, NBC-TV is reportedly close to a decision to use a 90-minute western between 7:30 and 9 p.m. (ABC-TV plans to keep "Train" as a Wednesday night 7:30-8:30 entry.)

NBC brass won't confirm this plan, but it is fairly well known that Mort Werner, NBC-TV's new program chieftain, is one for throwing away the rule book on time periods when he can. A series of 90-minute action-adventure telefilms has never been done in the entire history of tv. The closest anyone has come is CBS-TV with the much-vaunted, yet now defunct "Playhouse 90." Latter, however, was a dramatic anthology done live and on tape.

To put a 90-minute western against the proven "Train" constitutes so far the major gamble of the '62-'63 season. Such a stanza would easily run $160,000 a week in production alone. More than likely, though, it'll run close to $200,000, since NBC-TV figures it has to beat "Train" into the rating dust, or else lose the superiority of an entire night, which would be a far greater loss than the cost of one 90-minute stanza.

Moreover, NBC-TV will have to remove "The Joey Bishop" show and its blue-chip advertisers from the security of the 8:30 Wednesday time. What the effect of such a move would be on American Tobacco and Procter & Gamble is anybody's guess right now, although NBC would undoubtedly give these two bankrollers first crack at the new stanza.

NBC-TV has looked at a 90-minute film called "Magnificent Seven," based on the Yul Brynner western feature (out of UA), which, in turn, was based on a Japanese celluloid original. But "Seven" recently fell out of the running for the key 7.30-9 slot. This has hardly killed NBC-TV's desire to go ahead with the 90-minuter, it is understood.

Network has been talking to other Hollywood producers about the creation of the western package. It's believed that Screen Gems, now quite a hot telefilm shop, was approached and there is speculation that NBC prexy Bob Kintner has also considered Metro TV to do the much-needed package. Metro delivered "Dr. Kildare," one of the big Nielsen winners this season, and the studio is also talking to NBC about filling Saturday night's 9-11 p.m. feature slot with its own post-'48 pix.

As much as anything else, NBC is being motivated in the direction of a weekly 90-minute blockbuster because it wants to keep Kraft happy in its sponsorship of the traditional 9-10 p.m. Perry Como outing.

ABC-TV's Hot Deal For UA Features As Sun. Nite Fare

ABC-TV, which has had second thoughts almost all the way along the line on the topic, is going to go in April in a Sunday night two-hour block with feature films. Network has picked up 15 post-scribe as a sales option on 15 post-'48 films out of the United Artists library. The features will bump "Bus Stop" and "Adentures In Paradise."

Network had looked at libraries from almost all the other Hollywood majors before lighting on the UA 15 (initially 16 pix). ABC-TV is asking $23,000 per minute of potential advertisers for first run exposure in the 9-11 p.m. feature film layout.

Incidentally, NBC has an option with 20th-Fox that could carry the web's Saturday film lineup for another two seasons, but that network is nonetheless looking at product from Metro and Columbia, among others. It could be that NBC-TV is willing to forego the advantages written into the original 20th pact if the deal goes through one or two additional seasons, because a solo pact with 20th prevents the web from getting the best possible films every week.

Titles in the UA library at ABC are: "Witness For the Prosecution," "Run Silent, Run Deep," "Pride & Passion," "Pork Chop Hill," "Marty," "Man Of the West," "Wonderful Country," "Kentuckian," "Indian Fighter," "Ten Seconds to Kill," "Trapeze," "Vera Cruz," "Johnny Concho" and "I Want To Live."

Other alternative films which may be placed in the series include "Man From Del Rio," "Night Fighters" and "Trooper Hook."

ABC-TV Cancels Out 'Folksong Festival' (Featuring Weavers)

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Maybe it's just coincidental, and maybe one thing has nothing to do with the other, but just two days after NBC-TV nixed the appearance of the Weavers on the "Jack Paar Show" (because the folksinging foursome wouldn't sign a loyalty oath), ABC-TV advised sponsor Sara Lee that it didn't have a berth for "Folksinging Festival" after all. The show was to have been an hourlong special on which the Weavers were featured along with other folksong acts.

Sara Lee had optioned the show from indie producer Jim McGinn for a network outing after the baking company had trial-ballooned it locally in Chi. It came off with good reviews here, and the sponsor got a tentative May 1 prime time period from ABS. Shortly after the loyalty oath business at NBC, Sara Lee was informed that the May 1 date wasn't going to be available at ABC for the special. No other dates were offered, and the sponsor let the option drop on Jan. 6.

3-Part 'Lassie'

Long running "Lassie" is going to break some new tv ground with a three-parter, titled "Lassie's Odyssey." The continuing story will run for three successive Sundays, starting Feb. 18 on CBS-TV.

Sumner Long story tells of Lassie being inadvertently lost and the collie's adventures in finding his way home.

Tint Set Sales In '61 Up 51%: RCA

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Radio Corp. of America's L. F. Holleran told a press conference at the International Home Furnishings convention here last week that color tv set sales in the last three weeks of December were up 101% over the same period a year ago. Total tint set sales for 1961 were 51% greater than the preceding year, he said.

Holleran reported that in November, the peak month, RCA color television dollar volume passed that of black-and-white sets for the first time.

With Exception of Ziv, Screen Gems, It's 'Never on Syndie' With Only Half-Dozen Projects on Tap for '62

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

What may be a new low in production of syndicated telefilms looms on the Hollywood horizon this year.

A check of the leading production companies discloses only about a half-dozen syndicated properties will be before the cameras in 1962. It's never on syndie everywhere except at Ziv-UA and Screen Gems.

Most of the telefilmeries are shying away from syndie product because they feel the market is glutted, and they think chances are far superior recouping their investments via network series.

Ziv-UA, a syndie island surrounded by network-producing vidfilmeries, is an exception. With "King of Diamonds," "Everglades" and "Ripcord" currently in syndication, that company is planning "three or four" additional syndie series for 1962-63. Properties involved are now in negotiation.

Herbert Gordon, veepee in charge of talent, who develops network and syndication shows for Ziv-UA, explained that there are several reasons for the firm's optimism. The Katz agency, repping 40-50 stations, is guaranteeing prime time for Ziv-UA first-runs on those stations, and that's a plus, but not the only reason, for Ziv's upbeat view, he said. "The syndication business is good," he asserted emphatically, adding "the advertiser would rather have brand new first-runs than shows that have identified with other product." Ziv production chief Maurice Unger is currently developing new syndie product, he added.

William Dozier, Screen Gems coast chief, said he plans at least one, and perhaps, two syndicated series for next season. Dozier expressed the belief that "more markets will be opening up," that "a couple of networks will give up their option time."

On the other hand, Revue studios, once a prime supplier of syndicated merchandise, has no production plans for syndie goods on the shelf, an executive said. And at Warner Bros., a spokesman declared "we are not in the syndication business," saying the Burbank has no intention of entering it.

Robert M. Weitman, MGM's production chief for films and tv, said the Culver City studio has no plans for first-run syndication production.

Four Star production veepee Tom McDermott said no production of first-run films is planned by his company. "We're not smart enough to make it that cheap and that good," he said with some sarcasm.

Desilu, which once turned out several syndicated series each year, has none in production and doesn't plan any for next year. However, it is planning at least one such series for 1963-64.

Vidfilms' Gloomy Japan Prospects

Prospects of a free market being introduced for vidfilms in Japan in the next fiscal year appear dim, according to the Motion Picture Export Assn.

MPEA representative in a report from Tokyo points out that Japan has lost over $500,000,000 in its foreign exchange balance over the past six months. "I think we can take it for granted that unless a reverse trend in balance of payments sets (by) April 1 theatrical features as well as tv will be lucky to hold the line at the present level of remittability.

On the subject of expanding local Japanese production of tv films, the report notes that both NHK and Toei are making both half-hour and hour telefilms. With the average price of U.S. half-hour telefilms now around $700, sponsor resistance to increased production budgets for domestic product is still encountered. Local budgets of $1,425 to $1,995 continue standard except for the government-owned NHK operation. NHK half-hour budgets run to $3,500.

$2,000,000 Nut For UPA Cartoon Show

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

UPA is investing $2,000,000 in production of 26 segments of "The UPA Cartoon Show," which will be pitched at potential network sponsors in February. If it doesn't go net, it will be syndicated.

Footage of Fran Allison, femceehostess, was filmed at Republic studios last week. Television Personalities Inc. is handling distribution of the series.

Kans. KBEA Beats Liquor Blurb Rap

Washington, Jan. 16.

Code Authority of National Assn. of Broadcasters has given a clean bill of health to AM station KBEA, Mission, Kans., after investigating charges of willful violation of the hard liquor blurb prohibition.

Code Authority Director Robert D. Swezey said disciplinary action wasn't warranted against the outlet. Decision was based on a NAB staff perusal of tapes of the station's broadcasts last Nov. 29. This broadcast and a subsequent one Dec. 6 resulted in suspension of the liquor license of the dealer who bought time on KBEA by the Kansas Alcoholic Control Board.

Swezey said the Radio Code violations were in copy which was aired only twice. The copy contained only one mention of the word "Liqueur" and used the word "liquor" only as part of the store's name. Wine and beer may be advertised under the Radio Code, but liqueurs, being distilled, are taboo. Stores selling wine and beer may advertise but not as "liquor stores," the proper tag being "package stores."

The management of KBEA has expressed regrets over the incident and given NAB assurances it won't happen again.

Herb Lyon Show As WGN-TV Hour Entry; Chi's Top Budgeter

Chicago, Jan. 16.

WGN-TV will try to fashion Chi Tribune gossip columnist Herb Lyon into a local version of Ed Sullivan, with a new hourlong variety show that will get a midnight berth on Fridays starting Feb. 2. It's as yet unsponsored.

Format, which will hew closely to Sullivan's, calls for a minimum of six acts per outing, most of them performers appearing at the local niteries, with one homegrown talent spotlighted each edition. Acts will get local scale, and the booking offices their commissions. It figures to be the most expensive week to week show on the Chi airwaves. The live opus (actually taped) will supplant a feature film at midnight.

Lyon had been used as emcee on several previous variety shows on the Trib-owned station.

'Divorce Court' Set For Station Stripping

"Divorce Court," distributed by Storer Programs, currently is available for Monday through Friday stripping by stations.

Until recently, the syndicated series of 130 hourlong programs was available solely on a once-a-week basis. Decision to go the Monday through Friday route stems from the femme daytime appeal of the series. Seven stations already have lined up for the strip diet in the markets of Atlanta, Chicago, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Miami, Milwaukee and Salt Lake City. In several of these cities the program is also run in nighttime periods on a once-a-week basis.

Ruth Lyons Indpls. Fans Rally To Save Show In Transfer of Channel 13

Indianapolis, Jan. 16.

So many Indianapolis area women viewers of the Ruth Lyons Show on Channel 13, now occupied by WIW-I, Indianapolis, have protested to the FCC its recent decision to award the disputed channel to WIBC, Inc., in the belief that the change would mean losing their favorite daytime program, that WIBC revealed it had offered to continue the show when it takes over the channel some time this year. Joseph M. Higgins, vice president of WIBC, said such an offer has been sent to the Crosley Broadcasting Corp. at Cincinnati, where the show originates. He said the station is prepared to work out the details for continuing the Ruth Lyons Show on the air here, but has had no indication from Crosley whether it would agree to supply the show for local viewing.

Crosley is contesting the award of Channel 13 to WIBC, and has petitioned the FCC for a rehearing. The decision to award the channel to WIBC was made last Oct. 27 by the Commission, which had originally granted the channel to Crosley in 1957. WIBC fought the original grant on the grounds that one of the members of the FCC, T. A. M. Craven, had voted for Crosley although he had not heard all of the evidence produced by the four firms which originally sought the channel. WIBC appealed to the Court of Appeals in Washington.

Jay Ward Trims Production Staff

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Jay Ward Productions has put eight of its 30 staffers on two-weeks notice and Ward acknowledged that in coming months more may be pinkslipped.

"Bullwinkle," Ward's cartoon series which General Foods sponsors on NBC-TV, is firm through September, but as story-line work (done here) is complete through that date, layoffs occurred. Ward has its animation done in Mexico, on sub-contract basis, and that will continue, till cartooning catches up with storylines.

Situation will come to a boil in March, when series comes up for renewal and, stated Ward, "I don't know for sure" renewal will forthcome. If it doesn't "further adjustments" will be made personnel-wise, Ward said, hinting number will be eight, too.

Meanwhile, Ward continues on its syndicated "Rocky And His Friends" cartoons and is planning "Fractured Flickers" series, not cartoons, but re-worked silent pix, goofed up for laughs. Untitled live series is on Ward's drawing board.

AUSSIE TCN BUYS POST-'48 BUNDLE

Sydney, Jan. 16.

Some 200 pix made in the 1950's have been purchased by TCN here. Pix bought by the commercial outlet come from United Artists and 20th-Fox mainly and some of the titles bear release dates as early as 1958.

TCN general manager said the majority of the pix would be geared on the Sunday key span of 8 p.m. Others would be slotted Wednesdays at 9 p.m. Titles include "Suddenly," "The Killer Is Loose," "Man in the Grey Flannel Suit," "Monte Carlo Story," and "The Ambassador's Daughter."

Whether Aussie exhibs will boycott United Artists and 20th-Fox remains to be seen. Hall stated here that the pix industry had decided only recently to release for tv pix made after 1948.

WABC-TV Civil War Segs

"The American Civil War," Westinghouse series created from the original photographs of Matthew B. Brady, has been bought by WABC-TV. Series of 13 half-hours will bow Sunday (21) at 4:30 p.m.

Series is being distributed by Trans-Lux TV.

TV Boys Make Good

Three of the six major Hollywood studios involved in tv production now have studio toppers whose origins are in tv. Latest to join the fold is Robert Weitman, now filling the spot as v.p. and studio administrator, post vacated by Sol C. Siegel.

William Orr, who once topped Warner Bros. tv wing, now is in overall charge of the studio, pix as well as tv production. Same holds true of Pete Levathes at 20th-Fox where his status was upped from tv topper to overal studio head. At Metro, no replacement for Weitman in the tv wing is expected in the immediate future. Weitman is expected to hold both features and tv production hats. When and if the burden of the job proves too great Weitman will appoint a tv production aide.

Metro has five pilot projects for '62-'63 season either in production or completed, with two others slated for production.

Other major Hollywood studios engaged in tv are Paramount, which acquired Talent Associates, and Columbia Pictures, which has the very active Screen Gems operation. United Artists has Ziv-UA as its tv production subsid. Universal-International, which sold off its studio to MCA Revue, isn't in tv production. Allied Artists has made several tv stabs but never has made much noise in the medium.

Georgia Begs to Differ, Suh!

Claims It Was Short-Changed by Census Bureau On Radio-TV Set Penetration

Atlanta, Jan. 16.

Georgia Association of Broadcasters claims it has caught the United States Cenus Bureau with its statistics down in the matter of interpreting data on radio-television set ownership in the Commonwealth of Georgia.

Jack Williams, executive secretary of the association, said the actual figures for Georgia show that almost nine out of 10 homes have at least one radio and eight out of 10 homes have at least one television receiver.

Spokesman Williams said that radio and television penetration of Georgia's homes is as high as 87%, according to an up-to-date GAB survey.

This survey was made following a recent Census Bureau report indicating only 64% of Georgia's homes had radios and 75% of the homes had television.

This is all wrong, GAB's Williams contended.

He said that if Census Bureau correctly reported the number of radio and tv sets in Georgia it had misinterpreted the data, which led to the original report of a much lower percentage of radio-tv set ownership.

Of the 1,070,325 occupied housing units in Georgia in the 1960 census, figures showed that all but 138,134 homes had at least one radio set and 246,857 had more than one. A total of 785,100 homes had one tv receiver and 71,569 had more than one tv set.

Williams said:

"Actually, while the census was taken in 1960, more recent, but unofficial figures indicate homes with radios in Georgia total as high as 94%. The percentage of radio penetration into all homes in the United States is 95% or higher, so Georgia ranks very well with the national average."

CBS Films Syndicates 'Tom Terrific' Cartoons

"Tom Terrific," the Terrytoons cartoon series that has been an integral part of the "Captain Kangaroo" series on CBS-TV, has been put into syndication by CBS Films.

Package contains 130 cartoons that tell 26 stories. Cartoons can be programmed in several ways, including a Monday-through-Friday five-minute strip, cartoon inserts in existing children's shows, or a half-hour "Tom Terrific" format.

Series will be available for telecasting starting Feb. 19.

Wometco's Major SG Post-'48 Buy

Wometco Enterprises made what is probably the biggest single feature film deal in its history when last week is closed with Screen Gems for the 210 titles in the Columbia post-'48 catalog.

Wometco's buy was for its tv stations in Miami, Jacksonville, Asheville, and Bellingham, Wash. In a fifth sale last week, SG sold the entire bundle to KMJ-TV, the NBC affil in Fresno. SG reports that 61 tv outlets now have the bundle.

Wometco deal brings to six the number of station chains that have bought the Col pix from SG. Others were the CBS o&o's, the Time Inc., Meredith, Newhouse and Capital Cities chain.

BBC-TV Pitching Up 'Titans' Two-Parter For U.S. Showing

London, Jan. 16.

A bid to penetrate the major American networks with a pubaffairs program not originated in the United States, is being made by BBC-TV with its two-part documentaries entitled "The Titans," which puts the spotlight on the Soviet Union and the U. S. The first program, dealing with Russia, was aired last Tues (9) and the second is being shown tonight (Tues.).

Hitherto, major U. S. webs have refused to buy such programs from abroad, because they would not accept editorialization from outside the U. S. However, BBC-TV feels that it, on its part, has accepted editorializing by the American webs on its network, and that the time has come for some measure of reciprocation.

Both programs have been written and narrated by Malcolm Muggeridge and were produced by Therese Denny.

CBS 'Wall's' Big Spread

CBS-TV's "The Land Beyond the Wall—Three Weeks in an East German City" has won wide global distribution.

CBS Films, handling distribution abroad, reports sales in West Germany, England, Australia, Japan, the Philippines, Sweden, Denmark, and Argentina.

Dismissal Bid On UA Anti-Trust Rap

Department of Justice has moved in N. Y. Federal District Court to dismiss without prejudice the two-year-old anti-trust action against United Artists and United Artists Associated.

Justice made the move because it contended that changed conditions in the features-to-tv biz had made UA's acquisitions challenged by the complaint no longer important.

It's expected that UA will ask the court to dismiss the Justice complaint with prejudice, a move which would prevent any renewal of the same complaint.

Justice Department had brought the action after UA had acquired the pre-'48 libraries of Warner Bros. and RKO Radio Pictures alleging that UA's acquisition had the effect of substantially limiting competition. Since then post-'48's have been made available for tv exhibition, leaving the UA mergers without "economic significance," according to the Justice Department.

TV'S UNTAPPED FEATURE PIX

Monte Carlo TV Fest Awards

Monte Carlo, Jan. 16.

The International Jury of the second annual International Television Festival at Monte Carlo has announced winners with the special jury prize for exceptional achievement going to a U.S. entry, the National Educational Television production "Casals Master Class," produced by Nathan Kroll.

The "Casals" show was among those awarded the Festival's "Gold Nymph." Other "Nymph" winners were: best drama, "Aseop," USSR; best comedy, "The Marriage Proposal," Czechoslovakia; best variety, NBC's "The Shari Lewis Show"; best children's show, "The World of the Japanese Monday," Japan; best scenario, "The Woman in the Camp," Hungary; best cultural-scientific-historical program most likely to foster better international understanding, "France As If You Were There," France; best actor, Ludmilla Kasatkina in "The Taming of the Shrew," USSR.

First special mention went to the NTA-David Susskind "Play of the Week" production, "Black Monday," scripted by Reginald Rose. Second special mention went to a Japanese show, "Hotale," and third to "The Cage," from Monaco video.

In addition to the official awards, UNDA, the International Catholic Assn. for radio and tv, gave the "Silver Dove" for "works of quality doing the most for international understanding" to the "Mahalia Jackson Show," a Television Enterprises stanza produced by Harold Goldman.

There were 62 entries this year from 15 countries. Presentation of awards is slated for tomorrow (Wed.) at the International Sporting Club of Monte Carlo. Italian director Vittorio de Sica will emcee, and Italian singer Caterina Valente will headline the entertainment.

Clairol Com'l: In 4 Parts

6-Minute Narrative Blurb 'Cast Like A Tolstoi Novel'; NBC-TV Airing Set

It's the first commercial ever aired that the program will interrupt. That's the way Robert Lawrence Productions veepee Jerry Schnitzer describes the six-minute, narrative blurb he just completed for Clairol.

Slated for the NBC-TV hour documentary special, "The Vanishing 400," next month, the commercial will play in four acts of about one and a half minutes each. Relative to most commercials, this one is cast like a Tolstoi novel. Featured are three generations of women. Setting, an elaborate two-story mock-up, is Grandmother's house where a birthday party is underway.

A voice-over commentator, who comes off as an intimate of the families, sets the various scenes and, natch, discusses the various hair problems of the women with demonstrations of how Clairol has solved them all. Copy is by Shirley Polikoff, Foote, Cone & Belding copywriter w. k. in ad circles for her "Does she or doesn't she?" query for the same client.

Shooting for the commercial, which reportedly cost about $65,000, was preceded by two days of casting tests. Schnitzer says he looked at about 350 models, both men and women, to get a cast that could pass as a family and get women with the proper hair. Project in all, including six days

FCC Backtracks On Calais-Bangor

Washington, Jan. 16.

Federal Communications Commission, backtracking on a previous decision, has decided to let Channel 7 remain in Calais, Me. Last April, it ordered the channel shifted to Bangor as a third commercial outlet.

In reconsidering the case, the Commission said that while there's a need for a third commercial assignment in Bangor, so is there for a first one in Calais. In taking the new action, FCC sidestepped a request by the Governor of Maine to defer a final decision pending a special legislative session to vote on funds for a teach-vee network.

FCC stressed that in deciding that Channel 7 should be assigned to Calais without a non-commercial educational reservation, "we are not deciding against the use of that channel for educational tv."

"Such an assignment," it said,

WGN-TV's AA Bundle

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Indie station WGN-TV added to its growing feature film library last week with the purchase of 40 titles in an Allied Artists package of cinematics. Eleven of the films are in color, which is how WGN likes 'em.

Among the titles are "Al Capone," "Friendly Persuasion," "Dondi," "Operation Eichmann," "Pay or Die" and "Wichita." The station last year purchased Vols. 1 and 2 of the Seven Arts pix and an MGM package.

Howard's 39 Tint 'Don Quixote' Segs For Global Marts

Paris, Jan. 16.

A new vidfilm series aimed at world marts, giving it a Yank style treatment though European in subject matter, is being prepped here by Yank actor-legit producer Mel Howard. He will do 39 half-hour color vidpix based on M. Cervantes' "Don Quixote." Howard already has the J. Arthur Rank Co. in as co-producer with possibly other European countries also coming in for rights. They will be done in English.

Series is set to roll in the actual Quixote locale, La Mancha, in June with later interiors to be made in Paris video studios. Howard got shooting rights in Spain along with property rights. U.S. writers and directors will be used primarily but the first three may possibly be helmed by Vittorio De Sica. Only writer so far is Stanley Mann.

Howard is a young U.S. actor who saw he could not act in French on a visit some years ago and went into show biz instead via a successful beatnik boite, the Centrescarpe. He then took over a theatre, Theatre De Poche-Montparnasse, which is now housing one of the top surprise offbeat hits of the season in Roland Dubillard's "Naives Hirondelles." He is now branching off into tv pix.

Fruchtman's Slot

Milton A. Fruchtman has joined Sextant production outfit as a veep. He comes over from Capital Cities Broadcasting.

At Capital, Fruchtman, an exec producer, made the deal with the State of Israel for coverage of the Eichmann trial.

ITS VALUE PUT AT $265,800,000

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Pile of tv gold for post-'48 pix continues to mount, as the supply dwindles. Number of post-'48's still held off the tv market by the Hollywood majors is estimated to be about 2,215, as of mid-'61, a point in time as recent as practical in estimating Hollywood's backlog.

With the supply dwindling, post-'48 prices have been spiralling. The pre-'48's, sold in huge quantities against the comparative dribble today, never commanded the current dough. Forecasting the monies to be grossed by the still untapped post-'48's is a hazardous thrust. Forecasts though range from $100,000 to $140,000 per pic for the yet to be sold cinematics to tv.

Taking a middle figure of $120,000, the remaining pool of vaultees is estimated to gross $265,800,000, a commanding aggregate figure. Those making the low average gross estimate of $100,000 per pic in national syndication say there are many clinkers to be considered and a post-'48 stamp while increasing potential revenues won't spell unrealistic magic. Those estimating the high side of $140,000 point to the unalterable fact of a dwindling supply and the current experience in the market-place.

Enhancing the value of post-'48's of course, is the network ride afforded this season by NBC-TV. In all likelihood, NBC-TV is expected to continue its Saturday night movie next season. ABC-TV also has set a feature slot, for Sunday night.

Whatever happens on the webs though won't change the feature appetite in stations across the country, where pix seem to have become the staple in afternoon and nighttime slots.

Only majors at this point still out of the post-'48 derby are Paramount Pictures and Universal. As of mid-'61, Paramount is reported to have 226 cinematics in its vaultees, and Universal, 359 titles. All the others, to a varying degree, are in the post-'48 derby. They include Allied Artists, Columbia, 20th-Fox,

BLUE CROSS SETS SIX-MARKET DEAL

The hospital insurance plan, Blue Cross, has bought "Perspective on Greatness," hour biography package, in six of the 36 markets in which the series has been sold.

The BC markets are Seattle, Spokane, Tacoma and Yakima, all in Washington, and Juneau and Fairbanks in Alaska.

Produced by Nat Gassman and distributed by BCG Films, "Perspective" includes among other sponsors around the country Rheingold beer, New York; Volkswagen, Boston and Providence; Humble Oil, Columbus, O.; California Federal Savings & Loan Assn., Los Angeles; City National Bank, Rockford; Riverside Trust, Hartford; Amarillo National Bank, Amarillo; Union Bank of Erie, Erie; and Annville American Legion, Lebanon.

Wright Severs Tie With Capitol Cities

Dickens J. Wright, onetime owner of the station who stayed on at WPAT, Patterson, N.J. after selling out to Capital Cities Broadcasting, said he quit his CC veep post over a "basic policy difference."

CC bought the radio station from him for $5,500,000 last October. (He bought it in 1950 for $300,000.)

While voluntarily admitting to the policy rift, Wright did not reveal it in any detail. He hinted though that his WPAT policy was one of "self-imposed commercial limitation."

Flock of Chi Yearend Resignations As Minor Execs in TV-Radio See Careers Stalemated in Hinterland

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Chicago broadcasting's revolving door was uptempoed at the turn of the new year with a wave of personnel departures from the secondary exec echelons of the local radio and tv shops. What is surprising—apart from the unusual number of persons leaving—is that most of the moveouts were voluntary. They seem to underscore something that has been noted before, that there is a growing disenchantment with broadcasting as a career field—at least on these hinterland dead-end streets.

In point, the most significant resignations were those of minor execs who have skipped into other fields. Jim Ascher, ad-promo and publicity director of WBKB and a fellow who was understood to have a rosy future in the ABC-TV o&o scheme, gave up his broadcast prospects to take a post as an information officer overseas with the U.S. Information Agency. Ascher said simply that while he liked being with ABC, he felt the work with USIA would be "more consequential."

Pat Danneman left WBBM-TV, where she had been operations manager, for a post with the Campbell-Mithun agency. Mark Munn exited WGN Inc., where he had been research director, to take a similar post with Gardner Advertising; and Charles Stroud quit the same station's promo department to go with a publishing house in New York.

Art Thorsen and Allen Burns, who were program manager and pubaffairs director respectively at WBBM Radio, got caught in an economy blitz at the station and found themselves looking for new jobs at the start of the year. Both Thorsen, with 12 years at the station, and Burns, with a total of seven years in the business, let on that they were anxious to switch into some other field that was less treacherous and offered greater promise for growth with the company.

Neither Thorsen nor Burns was told why he was let go, but WBBM's revenues are known to have slipped slightly last year, and the pattern seems to match that of certain other stations here in recent years. The procedure is to axe the man who has too much experience for his job. The long-term employee, who qualifies for periodic pay raises, runs the danger of reaching too high a salary range to be worth his niche, and that's the end of the line.

Or 'Shotgun Slade'

Minneapolis, Jan. 16.

Those memos on program changes issued by the publicity departments of tv and radio stations generally make for unexciting reading, except maybe to the listings editors of the metro dailies. But sometimes they imply a fascinating storyline. The following was issued by WTCN-TV here:

Morning Matinee
Tuesday, Jan. 9, 1962
CANCEL: "Her First Romance"
INSERT: "Emergency Wedding."

Big Co-Production Vidfilm Ventures On Tap at BBC

London, Jan. 16.

Unable to make vidfilms under its charter, BBC-TV plans a big entry into co-production. Already partners with Metro in the "Zero One" skein, currently being shot at Elstree studios, and with National Telefilm Associates in the new "Third Man" series, BBC Enterprises chief, Ronald Waldman, states that BBC is in an advanced stage of planning for a further four co-produced series.

What did not mature, however, was the projected deal with Desilu on the "Fair Exchange" comedy stanza. Originally, BBC was to have entered production on this skein handling the British side of affairs. Although the deal fell through, BBC has advised on casting and other points, thus keeping the door wide open for future pacts.

Pitt's Litman, Murray Get 'Man of the Year' Awards

Pittsburgh, Jan. 16.

Lenny Litman, VARIETY correspondent in Pittsburgh, and Dave Murray, news director of WTAE, will receive "Man of the Year" awards at the city's annual banquet at the Pittsburgh Hilton on Jan. 29.

Litman will receive the award as the "Man of the Year" in sports and Murray will receive his award in the field of communications.

Ted Granik's 'Youth' Back on WABC Sked

"Youth Wants To Know," the Ted Granik-produced series which was knocked off tv in November due to a snarl over studio facilities in Washington, is returning to WABC-TV, N.Y., Sunday (21). B. K. Nehru, India's ambassador to the U.S., will be the guest.

The series will henceforth originate from New York.

WABC-TV's 'Show World'

WABC-TV, N.Y., will be giving New York audiences a chance to see what television is like in other countries in a special stanza, "Show World," to be telecast next Tuesday (23). Show will comprise performances by dance troupes, variety acts and singles who regularly appear on tv in Russia, Italy, Australia, Egypt and other countries.

Darren McGavin will be host.

Baker on Leave

Van Praag Productions veepee Douglas Baker will take a leave of absence Jan. 27 to produce and direct special film projects for the State Department.

Baker has done similar production chores for other branches of the government.

Screen Gems Buys Cellomatic Outfit

Screen Gems latest diversification move was to buy out Cellomatic Corp., the audio-visual production company which in the past few years has played a fairly sizeable role in various sales presentations by the tv networks.

Cellomatic was bought outright, but prexy Milton Rogin and exec veep Tom Howell, the former owners, are staying on in the same jobs under the new ownership of SG. Cellomatic has working deals now with RCA, CBS, ABC, General-Electric, General Motors, U.S. Rubber, AT&T, the Pentagon, the State Dept. and others.

Subject to FCC okay, SG will soon be full owner of WAPA-TV, in San Juan, and have an interest in WALE-TV, in Mayaguez, also in P.R. Besides that, SG owns Elliot, Unger & Elliot, blurbery, and Audience Studies Inc., a Coast research outfit.

MISTER ROBERTS!

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week six different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S

(*) ARB's October 1961 survey covered a multi-week period. Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program are listed, with the multi-week rating of all programs in the time period given.

"HUMAN DESIRE" starring GLENN FORD • BRODERICK CRAWFORD • GLORIA GRAHAME

AVERAGE AUDIENCE SHARE 64%

On Saturday, Dec. 30, over two million New Yorkers helped break a WCBS-TV "Late Show" rating record by watching "Human Desire," a Columbia Post-'48 mystery. The previous high was recorded this year by another Columbia Post-'48, "Abandon Ship." Incidentally, the 26.1 rating of "Human Desire" is the third highest ever earned by any feature in the eleven year history of the "Late Show."

These are just two of many potential record breakers among the Columbia Post-'48's. Others are "The Caine Mutiny," "Born Yesterday," "Fire Down Below," "The Harder They Fall" and "The Last Hurrah" to name a few.

JFK Report—No. 11

Though a mite sluggish over the 60-minute period, the latest "JFK Report" by NBC News on its tv network was a valuable assessment of the President's first 12 months in office. The Friday (12) program possessed not only diversity of opinion but the usually clever Ed Newman, who was narrator.

There were interviews with a liberal, a conservative, with Ted Sorensen, JFK's special counsel (his first tv interview, by the way), with Dean Rusk, Secretary of State, with the new House Majority Leader, and each, in his own way, provided a picture of Kennedy that indicated thought. The slowness of the hour was due mainly to the fact that producer Gerald Green and director Robert Priaulx decided most of the time to let each man's words flow uninterruptedly rather than resort to the old, but often rewarding business of editing footage into sharply contrapuntal statements, a technique that gives dramatic conflict.

The program was academically sound, but lacked the show biz flare that is becoming more and more prevalent among network news programs. Art.

WCBS-TV Views The Press

CBS London correspondent Alexander Kendrick packed a lot of information into his critical essay on British newspapers on this show Sunday (14), but 15 minutes was hardly enough time to do justice to the subject. For viewers not interested in this type of journalistic survey, a quarter of an hour is no doubt too much. But for those who are, Kendrick's assessment of a dozen major British newspapers at the rate of about a minute per publication was the capping of capsulization.

With only a few exceptions, Kendrick had a dismal view of the British press, an opinion which is reciprocated by British students of the general American press as heard on a previous stanza in this series. Kendrick charged the British papers with giving distorted coverage of the American scene, accenting all that is trivial, garish and scandalous in this country. But his examination of British news by the same newspapers indicated that precisely the same type of distortions were practiced domestically.

There was, unfortunately, not enough time for Kendrick to evaluate fully such firstrate newspapers as the London Times, The Guardian or the Daily Telegraph and compare them with the top U.S. newspapers. The report on the British press was one of a three-part series also including studies of the French and Russian press. Herm.

Today

"Today," the NBC-TV morning strip, celebrated its 10th anniversary on Friday (12). For the occasion, Dave Garroway and Jack Lescoulie returned for the day, but the icing was the presence of the eight men who have at one time or another produced this daily informal informational program.

John Chancellor, the present and only other host the show has ever had besides Garroway, asked the producers to cite what each considered the chief reasons the stanza (which has had its ups and downs since the days Pat Weaver incepted it) remained on the air. It was kind of an ingenuous question, and some of the answers, while funny, were a little flat. It took Jac Hein, now an indie producer, to lay his finger on the secret of this pet web project: "Money kept it on the air." While a little facetious, the remark bore signs of the truth. "Today" wasn't always a winner for NBC, but prideful of its importance as a news outlet and needing something to start off the day regardless, the network kept pouring in money to keep the show alive. The other producers agreed that the stanza's keynote was news, done easily and informally. As Shad Northshield, the present producer noted, "A number of people turn on the show to find out if this is the day it happened." He meant the bomb, of course. Which leads to a big point, one that is now well established in the minds of web execs: So long as the world is in hot conflict, news programs are going to have an audience.

Ex-producers appearing on the show in the pre-8 a.m. segment were Abe Schechter, "Today's" first producer; Dick Pinkham, now at Ted Bates; Mort Werner, head of NBC-TV programming; Robert Bendick, presently NBC special projects producer; Gerald Green, now also an NBC specials producer; Fred Freed, who like Green and Bendick produces for NBC News, Hein and Northshield.

Their little round table was hip and pleasant. One'd almost think that "Today" had a corner on the tv producer market. Art.

Theatre '62

"Theatre 62" revised the 1947 picture "The Farmer's Daughter" for its Sunday (14) presentation over NBC-TV. This excursion into never-never land (political section) was based on a rather lively film, which in its full running time was given a chance to unfold and there was opportunity to savor the flavor as a Scandinavian housemaid took on a political machine.

However, since 1947, the general populace has acquired a bit more political savvy, and the near fairy-tale fable presented here strained credulity, even though the setting was given as some years ago.

In this yarn, Lee Remick, a housemaid working in the home of Cornelia Otis Skinner, who ran her late husband's political machine, took on the job of running for Congress in opposition to her former employer. The story had her winning with the ultimate support of Miss Skinner, doubling as a Congressman as well as a swain.

Actually, the participants had little to go on. Few of the characters as presented were more than outlines. They needed a more substantial storyline as well as more incident. Charles Bickford who played the role of the butler in the original, returned to this enactment, and those in the audience looking for Rep. John V. Lindsay playing a minor role at a cocktail party early in the show, had to look fast if he was to be found. Jose.

Open End

Jackie Gleason is all things, if not to all people, at least to himself. Introduced by David Susskind, who engaged Gleason in single combat on WNEW-TV's "Open End" Jan. 7, as "a masterful actor, storied comedian, egotist, golfer, gourmand, mystic, hypnotist, boozer, bull-slinger and first-rank star of motion pictures," Gleason could only agree with this description of himself as a sort of Leonardo Da Vinci on the rocks.

Gleason insisted that he was not to be measured by ordinary human standards. "Do not judge my appetites by your capacity" was his rejoinder to Susskind's queries about his extraordinary capacities for food and drink. One man's gluttony is another man's hors d'oeuvres. But Gleason left no doubt that he was a direct descendant of Gargantua whom Gleason seemed to confuse with a gorilla out of a circus rather than a character out of Rabelais.

The two-hour session drew a fascinating portrait of Gleason as man and performer. But it was not a psychoanalytic session and did penetrate very far beneath the already familiar surface even with the help of the 100 proof brand of coffee, which Gleason tabbed "chockful of booze" as he sipped it. Gleason, incidentally, made a special point of denying rumors that he was drunk on Susskind's assembly of comics on "Open End" last fall. In fact, Gleason alleged, he was the only comic on the show who was not.

Gleason's commentary ranged far, wide and amusingly. He resisted, however, being the stereotyped funnyman although Toots Shor proved to be too much of a temptation ("The only practical joke I ever heard of was committed by Toot's mother"). He spoke with great sensitivity about the nature of religious faith and piety. Gleason also dealt seriously with the relationships of actors with a so-called "hierarchy" of agents, producers, advertisers, etc., who were charged with evaluating the

TELL IT TO GROUCHO

PARTICIPATING
CBS-TV (film)

It's good to have Groucho back on tv with a new show. That salute to the ad lib quip master, though, isn't sufficient to carry "Tell It to Groucho" beyond a short outing.

Some repairs are in order, judging from Thursday's (11) preem outing. Guests selected were obvious pigeons. They went through their paces, more like actors, than people, giving the outing an undeserved stageness. Seasoned Groucho's merits lie in the extemporaneous joke, the invited and uncalled for barb, the zany, helliza-poppin' climate he builds.

Series borrows heavily from Groucho's previous long-running program, which now is in syndication. It's a format Groucho works happily in, and if there's a pull for it, the format need not be discarded.

To become more particular, preem episode did have a zany, hellzapoppin' twist via the selected guests, but the pair were so out of this world in their problems and the way they presented them, that audiences must have wondered if they bumped into some "Amateur Hour." One guest bemoaned the lack of laughter in the U.S. and came up with a rendition of "Smiles." Other half of the guest billing was a mother and daughter team, both seeking husbands, both cat lovers. They also brought their 13 cats on stage.

All this gave Groucho some room for fun—but not enough for 30 minutes. Playing Groucho off on people who are more real, with more believable problems—without getting grim about it—might be more fun.

There also was a little game involved in the show, with a modest top prize of $500. Game consisted of flashing a wk. personality or landmark on the screen, with winnings graduated to the length of time needed for recognition.

Patty Harmon, curvacious, and Jack Wheeler, young and subdued on the preem, were Groucho's assistants. Horo.

Stephen Vincent Benet's Pulitzer Prize-winning poem, "John Brown's Body," is pegged for reading aloud. The rhymes, rhythms and subject matter seldom fail to stir emotions but it's more for the ear than the eye. In a Paul Gregory stage production back in 1953, the actors sat behind lecterns and delivered with impact and a Columbia disking of the original Broadway cast hits home with its solid audio values.

The spoken word was just as potent on the tv preem and even though some neat visual effects were brought in for support, the audio still overshadowed the video. Benet really doesn't need still shots of the Civil War or ballroom scenes or actors in motion to bring added meaning to his words.

The program, however, was a worthwhile effort mainly because of the topflight cast brought in to handle the reading which was crisply adapted for the tv medium by Harold Flender. Richard Boone, as narrator, Douglas Campbell as John Brown, and such supporting players as Peter Donat, Nancy Wickwire, Burt Brinkerhoff and Maxwell Glanville brought the drama of the work into full bloom and director Joseph K. Chomyn managed to keep his camera in hand so as not to take too much away from the Benet-Flender verbiage.

The show was presented by the Public Affairs Department of CBS News in cooperation with the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. Latter presented an award to Adlai E. Stevenson, U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Seated behind a desk, Stevenson delivered a brief acceptance speech. He, too, is master at words. Gros.

(Reach, McClinton)

At one point in Saturday night's (13) tv presentation of "The Fourposter," Jackie Cooper, who was one half of the cast, exclaimed: "I'll be darned if I understand this!" Which puts him one up as both a critic as well as an actor. For any resemblance between this video adaptation out of the David Susskind shop and Jan de Hartog's original stage comedy, was purely coincidental.

Not that the words were any different. They were the same, or at least those that could be compressed into 60 minutes (with time out for a multiplicity of Breck commercials and some unnecessary entre' act narration). But whatever the light, frothy comedy touches or subtleties with which "Fourposter" was originally endowed in de Hartog's once-over-lightly treatment of marital ups and downs (at best never any great shakes as comedy, in any form of presentation) were singularly lacking here. For the better part of the hour it was dull, and the production itself did little to help overcome the deficiencies.

The offering's demerits could be spread in several directions. Neither Cooper nor Tammy Grimes in the husband-wife roles, were right for the parts and in fact it seldom appeared that they were making any effort to play to one another. (And yet, for all her shortcomings, it was Miss Grimes' unique, distinctive traits, which had nothing to do with the play, that provided the few refreshing moments.)

One could fault the direction, which was uneven and made for awkwardness, and much of the camera work was bad. Some of the tongue-in-cheek quality of "Fourposter" was captured in Tom Ewell's narration, but these sophisticated witticisms and supposed profundities on the state of marriage only had the effect of making the play proper seem poorer than it actually was. Rose.

For the fifth time, NBC News correspondents returned to New York for the annual once-over of the news, but to do this adequately in the course of one 60-minute program is a virtual impossibility. Yet the NBC's boys made the most of the time.

One can easily imagine a host of tv viewers that particular Friday night jumping out of their cushioned armchairs in wild protest as Piers Anderton, NBC Berlin reporter, charged that the U. S. policy in that border city was "hypocritical" and that all interests would be best served if this country gave up claim to Berlin now, particularly since his view was that we'd have to give it up eventually anyhow. He got some disagreement, phrased diplomatically, of course, from a few of his sidekicks, but the Anderton remarks started things off very quickly.

Each of the others, as per usual course, summed up the problems and prognostications for his respective area of the world. Each was asked questions by his confreres. Besides Anderton, stellar performances were handed in by senior European correspondent Joseph C. Harsch and by Washington man Sander Vanocur, though even these men had to keep many of their remarks rather too broad to be really enlightening.

Missing from the ranks were two other men whose performances in the past years on this annual "Projection" made a lot of difference. They were Ed Newman and Irving

"The Good Years," which Leland Hayward fashioned for tv as a 90-minute CBS-Westinghouse special last Friday night (12), was neither refreshingly nostalgic nor scintillating. It could and should have been both. This A. J. Russell adaptation from the Walter Lord tome, in its attempt to capture the spirit of an era (1900-1914) and recreate the behavior patterns and mores of early 20th Century America, was at best a spiritless effort, lacking in imaginative or exciting production concept and frequently making the hour and a half appear much longer.

Recruiting such stalwart talent as Henry Fonda, Lucille Ball and Mort Sahl, among others, with Franklin Schaffner as director, Marshall Jamison as coproducer with Hayward and a musical supervisory assist by Jay Blackton, "The Good Years" nonetheless was too often pointless and witless as it brought forth what amounted to a video smorgasbord—a conglomerate of live sequences, etchings, still lifes, film clips, stereoptican slides, et al. Through song, dance, comedy skit, drama vignettes, narration, and the constant use of a "Greek chorus" to bridge the continuity and remind the audience that these were the "good years," the sum total was disappointing either as entertainment or as a sociological footnote. It had about it a kind of artless pretentiousness, but primarily it lacked cohesion.

Henry Fonda was all over the place, doubling from narrator to a whole gallery of portraits ranging from Teddy Roosevelt to counsel for the defense at the trial of Miss Ball for scandalizing the neighborhood with the turkey trot. Considering the material he was given to work with, he acquitted himself admirably. Similarly Miss Ball's portrayals ranged far and wide but with lesser impact. Mort Sahl was totally wasted.

Through the ample modes of presentation, one caught up with the San Francisco fire, the Wall St. panic of '07, the robber barons, always Teddy Roosevelt. There was the evocation to "Everybody's Doing It," a multi-faceted look-see at the woman coming into her own as themed to Kipling's "The Female of the Species," a rhapsodic tribute to the immigrant; Horatio Alger's bootblack; a scene from Sidney Howard's "Yellow Jack," etc.—the whole of it a phantasmagoria of people, places, events that might have been amply rewarding had it not been so lacklustre. Rose.

Since Chet Huntley and David Brinkley are partners in other areas of the NBC-TV operation, people are bound to make comparisons between their separate prime time programs. The comparisons aren't unfair. All they'll do, though, is reinforce the fact that while Huntley is not as clever with rhetoric as his sidekick, he is just as complete and just as much the newsman.

Huntley moved his Sunday afternoon stanza to Friday nights as the replacement for "Frank McGee's Here & Now." In his first nighttime performance on Jan. 12, the personally impressive Huntley rendered a 30-minute essay on Stalingrad and the corrolary movement by Premier Khrushchev to de-Stalinize Russia. It was a welcome study, the pictures and words covering the subject well.

It was a clear indictment of the Commie regime, but by way of a failing in this otherwise good show, Huntley needn't have been so obvious or redundant in using adjectives of condemnation. Art

THE TITANS
With Malcolm Muggeridge
Producer: Therese Denny
Writer: Muggeridge
60 Min., Tues., 9:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

To compile an hour's documentary showing the growth of Russian power in this century, using only movie material, was a formidable enterprise. Producer Therese Denny pulled it off with great resource and zeal in research, and the result was a fascinating visual experience, going back to the contrasts of poverty and Tsarist extravagance that led to the Revolution and taking in unfamiliar film of Lenin, Trotsky, and many other Red leaders who got their comeuppance in the Stalin purges. Khrushchev's ecstatic applause for the dictator he's now helped to disgrace was only one of many intriguing items. Miss Denny did not ignore the big historic moments—such as the signing of the Nazi-Soviet pact in 1939, or the decisive wartime meeting at Yalta—but she also managed to flavor these outstanding moments with shots of the famine that resulted from the Soviet colectivization of the kulaks and of Stalin's father-image cult in public, coddling little kiddies, while he planned to dispose of his rivals in private.

This material — with the silent film provided with apt sound effects by Robert Saunders—had a spoken commentary by Malcolm Muggeridge. This was well-judged, neatly-phrased, and close-fitting to the pictures. If anything was missing, it was the sort of statistical parallel that would have brought out the raising of living and literacy standards for those Russians that remain. Because the program was conceived in terms of power, it tended to emphasize the martial and nationalist bas's of the Red regime at the expense of its social achievements, which have been plenty.

The hour is due to be followed by another examining the bases of U. S. power this century, and presumably comparisons will be made then. But th's one followed its brief admirably, and made a palatable lesson. Otta.

Writers: Ruth Park, D'Arcy Niland
60 Mins.: Sun. 9:35 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Associated TeleVision sparked a new season of fortnightly plays, "Drama '62," with a first-prize winning script from a 1961 playwriting contest. Penned by first-time-for-tv scripters Ruth Park and D'Arcy Niland, "No Decision" made a good starter. It set a high pace and was sprinkled with moments of high comedy. Although the yarn quickly became predictable, fine thesping and slick production rounded the play off into an hour of sock tv.

Story, set in Australia, detailed events following an ex-boxer's graphic on-tv description of a bout held 50 years earlier in which he and his opponent so battered each other they couldn't leave their corners and won a referee's decision of "no decision." Via a popular video interview show, Billy Driscoll (Leo McKern) claimed he had clearly won the bout. Inevitably, his opponent (John Laurie) turned up, had his say on a later program and a rematch was staged. As both boxers were now in their 70s, the farcial match was a good peg on which to hang some laughs.

Real honors for this stanza go to McKern and Laurie for their characterizations of two old-timers feeding off past glory in their old age. Both managed to get under the skin of their roles, suitably contrasted by the authors, and dominated the more-than-adequate acting of the others. Also worth special mention was John Meillon who played McKern's son and, with Pat Garwood, provided a slight love interest.

Sets by Peter Roden were first rate, and the skillful camerawork of producer Cliff Owen crammed the screen for the full 60 minutes. Watt.

THIS IS ANKA
With Paul Anka, Johnny Carson, Linda Scott, the Granadiers, Peter Knight Orch
Producer: Eddie Pola
Director: Mark Stuart
60 Mins.; Wed., 8 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

The chief fault of the show was the wearying insistence that the star was still abysmally young, a topic that was reiterated in re-written lyrics and stressed by such capers as Anka being trundled off in a baby-carriage. As a performer, Anka was acceptable, notably better in numbers not written by himself. He kicked off with a brisk "Sing, Sing," and let the temperature drop with a doleful ballad, "All of a Sudden," which suited neither his temperament nor his larynx.

Further ditties included numbers about his own single status, whilst elderly gents like Tommy Sands and Bobby Darin had been hauled to the altar, and "One for My Baby," with lyrics coyly redrafted to make them non-alcoholic, Anka closed the show with a selection of past disk hits.

Comedian Johnny Carson gagged acceptably in one spot, and returned for a more yock-raising item about a host in a children's tv program who tried to disguise the fact that he was suffering from a hangover. The other guest was teenage Linda Scott, who briefly simpered some beat talk and joined Anka in "Let's Call the Whole Thing Off," which they did before too much damage was done.

Granada's regular vocal group, The Granadiers, harmonized from time to time, and strutted through "Changing the Guard at Buckingham Palace." Band backing from Peter Knight's outfit was slick, and Mark Stuart's direction wasn't up to snuff.

Whilst such twice-weekly skeins as "Emergency Ward 10" and "Home Tonight", are grounded by the commercial web's thesp strike, BBC-TV has stepped in with a chatty serial about a woman's magazine, due to be aired on Tuesday and Thursday. Whilst firm pudgment can only be tentative at this stage, first thoughts were that a heavy rethink might soon be necessary.

The initialler took place on publication day of "Compact's" first issue, and its main achievement was in introducing the office characters. This it did without fuss—but it didn't induce much fever about what would happen to them hereafter. Though this, of course, may come.

Said personality pillars include an elegant editor (Jean Harvey), who conducted some of her business in stockinged feet and some in specs that came from a heavily-horned rhinoceros; a features editor (Nicholas Selby), who seemed harassed and solely anxious to talk to Kenneth More; an Art Director (Moray Watson), who had an amorous eye for the aforesaid editor; and an odd assortment of pert secretaries, a chirpy office-boy, and a tea-girl in a funny wig.

The tiny scrap of plot concerned the firing of a woman in charge of the agony column, and her replacement by another dame, who left her work in mid-typing to look for her runaway daughter. And the skein's gimmick was to introduce a real, live celeb, who turned out to be Ian Carmichael; he grinned, gave an enormous plug to his new legit show, and grinned again.

Whilst these people may acquire definition in time—only Jean Harvey registered much here—it is open to serious doubt whether teh mass of viewers will be as absorbed in the intricacies of publishing as they are by the insides of stomache. But, for outsiders, the atmosphere was reasonably convincing, and Christopher Barry's direction was nimble. The script, by Hazel Adair and Peter Ling, was soso—but their testing time will come when they drift upon a plot.

OLIVER TWIST

Producer: Eric Taylor
Writer: Constance Cox
25 Mins.; Sun., 5 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Rifling Dickens for 13-week serials has long been a BBC-TV custom, and there's no reason to suppose that "Oliver Twist" won't be as satisfying as its predessors. This opener took the tale up to Oliver's enforced apprenticeship to Mr. Sowerberry the coffin-maker, and took in the "asking-for-more-gruel" episode. Capably adapted by Constance Cox, it seemed to emphasis the caricature element of the original at the expense of the reforming indignation, but this might have been the right approach as the plight of orphans is no longer a burning social issue.

Bruce Prochnik, a peeky moppet, was admiably cast as Oliver, and the lumbering Mr. Bumble of Willoughby Goddard made an admirable foil. Other thesp support was adequate, with Donald Eccles clicking as the ghoulish Sowerberry. The production was somewhat bare, and in the episode of Mrs. Mann, the foster-mother, it showed its studio origins. Absence of outside film might be a handicap in later segments, but wasn't noticeable here.

Producer Eric Taylor, in fact, insured a safe and reliable version, which wouldn't offend admirers of the novel. And, although episodic, the 25-minutes maintained a good continuity of pace and development. Otta.

QUILLOW AND THE GIANT
With Jeannie Carson, Cardew Robinson, Dick Emery, Biff McGuire, Bowles Bevan, David Bowman, Francis Burgess, Harold Holmes, Jack Irons, Eddie Morgan, Fergus O'Kelly, John O'Sullivan, Peter Sugden, Ray Webb, Vernon Williams, dancers, Phil Martell orch.
Producer: Bryan Sears
Writers: James Thurber, Biff McGuire
55 Mins., Sun., 4:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Thurber's tales for children have a vein of fantasy and wit that is deceptively simple on the surface, but carry quite a message for the alert adult. But this adaptation of "Quillow and the Giant" lost most of the original's distinctive quality, and substituted for it some coy and dull song-and-dance, which seemed quite at odds with the spirit of the thing.

Story concerned the defeat of the giant Hunder, who was terrorizing the villagers of Full Moon Street. The councillors, normally accustomed to such problems as the proper revolving speed for a merry-go-round, could do little but give way to Hunder's excessive demands for fodder. But the insignificant town toy-maker (Jeannie Carson) finally banished him.

Clipped of Thurber's verbal felicities—and what remained was delivered at such a spanking pace that it lost all its resonance—the story seemed thin and undernourished. The production difficulty of suggesting Hunder's enormous size was awkwardly solved by Bryan Sears, who was over-fond of the giant's head on the left of the screen with the tiny figure of Quillow in the distance on the right. On the credit side, Tony Abbott's sets were lively and fanciful.

Jeannie Carson was sprightly as the giant-tamer, although she never shook off a fatal feeling of dressing up and being funny for the kiddies. She also delivered the one passable melody, by Wade Barnes, with charm. Biff McGuire boomed fruitlessly as the giant, and good support came from Cardew Robinson and Dick Emery. But, on the whole, this one was strictly for the fairies. Otta.

COMEDY PLAYHOUSE
(Lunch in the Park)
With Stanley Baxter, Daphne Anderson, Bernard Hunter, Roger Avon
Producer: James Gilbert
Writers: Alan Simpson, Ray Galton
30 Mins., Fri., 8:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Scripters Alan Simpson and Ray Galton, who've been the word-power behind the much-saluted Tony Hancock half-hours, are chancing their arm at a playlet skein, self-contained and without running characters. "Lunch in the Park," the item caught, was a satisfying sample, deft and witty in observation, the humor stemming from character and situation, without any overlay of manufactured gags.

The piece was largely two-handed, a dialog between a government clerk (Stanley Baxter) and a stenographer (Daphne Anderson), who regularly rendezvoused once a week on a park bench to munch their sandwiches. It seemed a chaste love-affair, with the couple discussing their respective spouses and domestic arrangements, and the mood was funny-pathetic. The payoff, which closed the show with too much of a jolt, was their arrest by a couple of plain-clothed security men. The romance was a blind for their real business of spying.

Stanley Baxter gave an immaculate performance as the meek clerk, closely followed by Daphne Anderson. Producer James Gilbert concentrated on the performances in close-up, and they deserved such close scrutiny. As long as Simpson and Galton are served with comedy actors, as distinct from comedians, the series promises to click. Otta.

WIEDER ZURUECK: SIEGFRIED ARNO

Director: Don Cash
Writer: Georg Kreissler
60 Mins.; Sun., 8:50 p.m.
West-German TV, from Cologne (tfm)

This was a delightful and sentimental reverie with one of the great German film and revue comedians of the 20s and early 30s: Siegfried Arno, who had to leave German in 1933 when the Nazis took over. This was a highly appreciated tv debut.

Arno, who reportedly lives in New York, has naturally gotten older, but he hasn't lost any of his charm or ability to make people chuckle. In fact, his musical show was one of the truly wittiest German video has had to offer in many months. Also responsible for the show's success was Arno's friend, Georg Kreissler, who wrote the slick and gag-studded script. A third compliment finally has to go to American Don Cash who directed this program with imagination and pace. Indeed, Cash gave the, German televiewers an idea of what Americans understand about pace and timing.

Show featured many artists, such as the dancing Kessler sisters, American singer Gus Backus, Angelina Monti, Gallic singer Jean Sablon, Latin dancer Milva, and the orchestra of Aime Barelli, but, in the main, it was Siefried Arno's show. He took care of the highlights. He emceed, he sang and he gave out with his zanies. He clicked in all situations and was at his funniest in a sketch in which he portrayed an actor who acts under his own direction. The charming way he mastered the emceeing job revealed the gap between his personality and the bulk of today's German tv comedians. He showed them the trade. The program's technical credit were tops too. Hans.

Prime distinction between cops-and-robbers opuses coming from the commercial web and BBC-TV is that the former tend to concentrate on the mayhem and the latter on character and documentary flavor. "Z-Cars," a new 13-week skein, points up the difference. It's made with the co-operation of the Lancashire Police, is thick with local accent and foibles, and succeeds in establishing the cops as ordinary guys who drink, back horses, and black their wives' eyes.

The opener was accordingly crammed with authenticity, but a little more action wouldn't have come amiss. Following the murder of a cop, it was decided to introduce patrol-cars, and the first segment was concerned with the recruitment of four men to crew them. One was told of his new appointment whilst knocked out in a football game, another was shown breaking up a saloon brawl, a third inadvertently caught two fellows with a stolen car when he stopped them to ask a racing result, and the fourth was shown in domestic bliss with his fiery young wife.

It was the acute observation and sharp humor of Troy Kennedy Martin's script that caught the attention, and the performances of Jeremy Kemp, James Ellis, and Joseph Brady got full value from it. In fact, the entire thesp contingent was first-rate, and John McGrath's direction was steeped in atmosphere.

With later installments, and the Z-Cars in operation, there will be presumably more drama. Meanwhile it's set up a fine framework. Otta.

CRYING DOWN THE LANE
With Elvi Hale, Delphi Lawrence, Peter Sallis, Paul Stassino, Edward Cast, Gregory Phillips, Alex Gallier, Topsy Jane, Neil Hallett, Pauline Taylor, Keith Barron
Producer: Prudence FitzGerald
Writer: Ivan Roe
30 Mins., Mon., 8 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

BBC-TV's new six part serial "Crying Down the Lane" got off to a moderate start, though it's hardly the sort of subject to compel weekly viewing. Novelist Ivan Roe, making his first stab at tv scripting, revealed a flair for characterization and incident, but his dialog was mainly pedestrian.

The author has described the serial as "a man-on-the-run story with a difference," but from the first part it's hard to define what the difference will be. So far, it was a run-of-the-mill adventure, in which a father returned from America to claim custody of his son. The gimmick in the plot was that the ex-wife, now living with a diplomat, had moved into a London Embassy—and that technically was foreign soil, so the moppet had to be abducted and that was accomplished all too smoothly in the first part.

Prudence FitzGerald's production put the accent on speed, and there were an adequate variety of backgrounds to emphasize the action. A highly professional cast filled the principal roles with vigor, notably Edward Cast as the father and Elvi Hale as a sob sister. The youngster was appealingly portrayed by Gregory Phillips, and Paul Stassino as the diplomat and Delphi Lawrence as the kid's mother, were the heavies. Myro.

Democracy Was a Kid

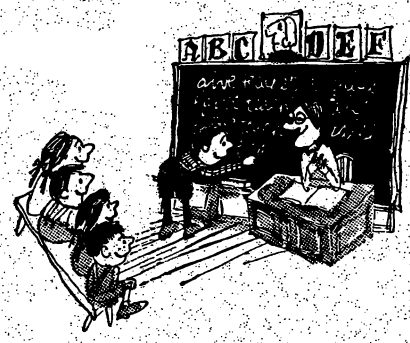
The newly-arrived visitor from France couldn't understand why he saw neither soldiers nor children on New York City's otherwise bustling streets. The kids, he quickly assumed, must all be at work in the factories; but how does a country get along without soldiers patrolling its boulevards?

These were just two of the "oddities" that intrigued Alexis de Tocqueville shortly after he came here in 1831 to study our young nation at first hand.

Almost one year, 7,500 miles and many puzzlements later, he started homeward to begin writing "Democracy in America." The completed work came to be acknowledged not only as the classic portrait of our life in that era, but as a remarkably timeless study of America's national character.

Through no coincidence at all, "Democracy in America" is also the title of the weekly, half-hour series that will have its world premiere this evening (8:30-9:00 EST) on the NBC Radio Network; it is the Tocqueville book on which most of the 14 programs of dramatizations and dialogues are based.

The series has been prepared by the Division of General Education of New York University with the assistance of The Fund for Adult Education. George E. Probst, associate professor of American history, New York University, researched and directed the programs.



Tocqueville and his companion, Gustave de Beaumont, reacted acutely to all they saw and heard during their travels here. They were gladdened, for example, by the strange concept of compulsory schooling (that's where the kids really were), but found it hard to reconcile this with the low wages paid to teachers and the suspicion with which the truly educated man was generally regarded.

They were enthralled by the exotic cries of street vendors hawking such commodities as whale oil, oysters (a penny each) and "lemons from the warm countries."

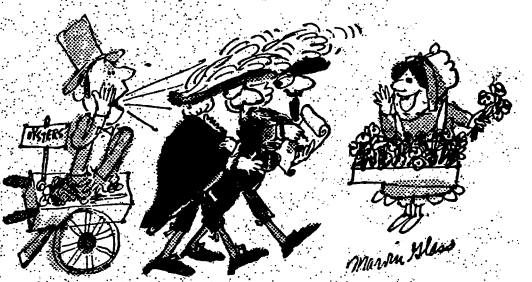
They were surprised to find the Territory of Michigan a "vast solitude" where—in contrast with conditions in France—land cost almost nothing but a man's labor came very high indeed.

In visiting Governor Enos Throop in New York City, the two aristocrats were amazed to find the State's chief executive staying at a boarding house. (The explanation: domestic help was simply too hard to get.)

They were impressed by the morality of American women. "I must say," recorded Tocqueville, "that if one were to enter American society with the purpose of accomplishing seductions, one would find one's time largely wasted."

In mercantile circles, they found men much too wrapped up in trade to give any thought to the suitability of their wives. They concluded somewhat incredulously that an American businessman could live an entire lifetime without ever realizing he'd been married to the wrong woman.

At a society gathering, they noted that conversation seemed to begin just as the music started, "and this is very understandable when you've heard a certain amount of American music."



And, in their research into American law, they were startled at the way one jurist expressed his credo: A good judge ought to come at a criminal the way he goes for a bottle of port; try him carefully, then punish him severely."

But if Tocqueville raised a Gallic eyebrow at some of the apparent crudities of life in this youthful, high-spirited land, he was also pleasingly fascinated by the informality of it all—the phenomenon, for example, of "everyone shaking hands with everybody, known or unknown.

Tocqueville's alternating respect, wonderment, admiration and fault-finding as he surveyed such areas as politics, religion, education and the social structure may well make this one of the most important and most entertaining developments in recent broadcast history. What's more, as a chronicle of American democracy in 1831, the program holds a further distinction: It may very well be the first major radio series ever written about a fifty-five-year-old adolescent.

Mad. Ave.'s Healthy Response To FTC's War on Illegal Ad Trickery

The Federal Trade Commission's recent decision handed down in the case of the phony sandpaper used in the Colgate-Ted Bates "rapid shave" commercials was by all odds the toughest and most significant in recent years concerning broadcast advertising.

Although most advertisers and agencies have become conditioned to honesty in blurb production in the more than a year since FTC stiffened, the Colgate decision—with all five commissioners concurring—definitely brands as illegal trickery the use of spurious props or mock-ups in tv commercials. Because of the conditioning, advertiser reaction to the ruling has pretty much been "business as usual." But, as a commercial producer put it, FTC's actions in the last year or so brought ad men to the sudden realization that the blurbs they make have a "relation to the public interest." When the action was taken against Colgate, for instance, Benton & Bowles issued a directive that absolutely no trickery was to be used in any commercial production. Ted Bates reportedly has been clearing several storyboards with FTC before production.

And because of the FTC, says the producer, a lot of the cynicism has gone out of the business. "They don't laugh anymore and use another company's beer because the color is right."

In the Colgate blurbs, plexiglass with sand applied was used as a prop for sandpaper, which allegedly could be shaved clean by the lather's "supermoisterizing." Colgate and Bates were directed to refrain from using not only the commercial at issue but any which employed fake mock-ups or demonstrations. And the Commission made plain the importance it attached to the decision as a precedent for the whole industry to follow (provided it isn't upset on appeal to the courts, of course).

Commissioner Philip Elman's opinion, which reversed the findings of Hearing Examiner William L. Pack, was couched in broad language denouncing the whole run of tv commercial practices regarded by FTC as false and misleading. Said the opinion:

"The limitations of the (tv) medium may present a challenge to the creative ingenuity of copywriters; but surely they do not constitute lawful justification for resort to falsehoods and deception of the public. The argument to the contrary would seem to be based on the wholly untenable assumption that the primary or dominant function of tv is to sell goods, and that the Commission should not make any ruling which would impair the ability of sponsors and agencies to use tv with maximum effectiveness as a sales or advertising medium.

"Stripped of polite verbiage, the argument boils down to this: Where truth and tv salesmanship collide, the former must give way to the latter. This is obviously an indefinable proposition. The notion that a sponsor may take liberties with the truth in its tv advertising, while advertisers using other media must continue to be truthful, is patent nonsense. The statutory requirements of truth in advertising apply to tv no less than to other media of communication."

The opinion upset Hearing Examiner Pack's conclusion that Rapid Shave's blurb was innocuous puffery in these words: "The argument that (Colgate and Bates) only indulged in a little harmless 'puffing' is obviously out of place. They represented unqualifiedly that Rapid Shave will dramatically facilitate the shaving of sandpaper and they were demonstrating this fact before a tv audience to prove it. Both of these were factual representations and neither is true."

The opinion was strong to the point of sarcasm: "In this case the pictorial test of Rapid Shave, proving to any doubting Thomas in the vast audience that 'By golly, it really can shave sandpaper!' was the clinching argument made by the commercials. The 'sandpaper test' was conducted as the announcer said, 'to prove Rapid Shaves super moisturizing power . . .' Without this visable proof of its qualities, some viewers might not have been persuaded to buy the product. One need only consider the difference in the impact of these commercials on view had they been told, honestly and truthfully, that what they were seeing tested was a plexiglass mockup, rather than what they thought and were told they were seeing, namely, actual sandpaper.

"The difference between telling and not telling the truth, could in this instance at least, have been the difference between an effective and ineffective 'sell.' In such circumstances, the claim of 'harmless exaggeration' (raised by the firm and agency) is rather hollow."

Elman zeroed in on the defense that a decision against Colgate would turn the tv world upside down by barring use of props to simulate reality. He pointedly stated the decision had nothing to do with props used in dramatic portions of a program, explaining: "No one objects to the use of papier mache sets to represent western saloons or an actor's drinking iced tea instead of the alcoholic beverage called for by the script. The distinction between these situations and the one before us is obvious. The set designer is not attempting, through his depiction of the saloon, to sell us a saloon, nor is the actor, sipping his drink, peddling bourbon. There is a world of difference between a casual display of steaming "coffee" that is really heated red wine (again, because of tv's 'technical difficulties') and a commercial showing a closeup of what is actually red wine to the accompaniment of a claim that the high quality of the sponsor's coffee is proved by its rich, dark appearance—which the viewer can verify for himself simply by looking at the 'coffee' on the screen.

Similarly, an announcer may wear a blue shirt that photographs white; but he may not advertise a soap or detergent's 'whitening' qualities by pointing to the 'whiteness' of his blue shirt. The difference in all these cases is the time-honored distinction between a misstatement of truth that is material to the inducement of sale and one that is not."

RTP Also as Distrib On 'Cartoon Classics,' 'Jungle' Kiddie Entries

Radio & Television Packagers, producer of "Cartoon Classics" and "Jungle" series, has taken over U.S. distribution of the packages formerly handled by Banner Films.

RTP prexy William D. Clayton says the reason for the switch is the "special handling" required for the two series, which combine entertainment and enlightenment—"a new dimension in programming for children of all ages."

Company has recently put into distribution the third group of 104 "Cartoon Classics" with initial sales to WOR, New York; WGN, Chicago; CKLW, Windsor-Detroit; KHJ, Los Angeles; and other markets. WRCV, Philadelphia, recently bought the complete "Cartoon Classics" package, totalling 320 episodes.

Third group, titled "Journey to the Beginning of Time," tells the story of the development of life on earth. Story revolves around four youngsters who visit the American Museum of Natural History and later discover a mysterious river in Central Park that takes them to the beginning of time. There also are fairy tales and undersea stories in the third package.

According to Clayton, both the "Jungle" and "Classics" series have not only boosted ratings of kid shows, but have won approval of parents, teachers and boards of education. Series are prepared with consultation of experts. "Journey to the Beginning of Time," for example, has been reviewed by Dr. Edwin H. Colbert, chairman, department of Paleontology, American Museum of Natural History.

Both series have been dubbed in Spanish and are playing in Mexico, Puerto Rico, Brazil and other Spanish markets. Sales also have been made in England, Australia and Japan.

Nov. Billings In Slight Decline For British Com'l TV

London, Jan. 16.

At $26,661,600, November commercial tv billings dropped by more than $870,000 when compared with figures for October, according Media Records statistics. Total of November ad revenue garnered by the 13 independent contractors was $24,018,400 while the government took $2,643,200 in tax. This compares with October figures of $24,805,200 in station revenue and $2,727,200 in tax.

Again Associated - Rediffusion headed the list and chalked up $4,774,000 in November ad revenue. Associated TeleVision followed closely with $4,332,400 ($1,906,800 from London and $2,525,600 from the Midlands. Granada-TV took $4,379,200 and ABC-TV trailed the majors with $2,945,600.

Radio Review

PRIMA DONNA
With Mary Garden
Producer: James Wilson
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
BBC, Aberdeen, Scotland

The life and career of Mary Garden, operatic prima donna, were examined sketchily but with atmosphere in this 30-minute program. Miss Garden, who created some of the top operatic roles of this century, now lives quietly near the village of Torphins, less than 30 miles from her native Aberdeen, Scotland.

Former diva, now 84, told how when the time came to stop, she told herself: "This is the last, and I made up my mind to retire." Her tip for aspiring singer-actresses: "When you get over the age of looking like the person you are singing, then don't do it!"

Miss Garden emerged from the program with a strong dominating personality shining through. She related how, in a long life, she has never had any doubts, and how her art was her whole life. Gracefully, she admitted to her technique having been given her by God.

U. S. days with the Chicago Opera Company and also in films for Samuel Goldwyn (one was "The Splendid Singer") were also recalled by Miss Garden, who said she liked working best of all in Paris and Chicago. She also paid tribute to Strauss as a great conductor.

Recordings were included in program, but the show could have usefully filled in more on the personal life of the singer and her present interests in retirement. Gord.

THE DAY a man came home

If this man looks familiar, it's because he is.

Steve Allen is looking at a scene from his boyhood. Soon Chicago will look at Steve and with Steve when he comes "Home Again." That's the name of the new series WBKB will initiate this winter.

Another home town boy who will attempt to recapture his past is Archibald MacLeish, prize-winning poet, public servant and well-known educator. From time to time we hope other famous Chicagoans will come "Home Again."

"Home Again" is warm, full of heart. It's humorous, sprinkled with chuckles. It's thoughtful, laced with nostalgia.

It's typical of WBKB's over-all programming in that it is different.

That's the sort of television station we run here in Chicago. It comes naturally to us because of the "Climate of Creativity" that pervades the studios and offices of Channel 7.

Are your clients taking advantage of WBKB's "Climate of Creativity"?

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week five different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

(*) ARB's October 1961 survey covered a multi-week period. Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program are listed, with the multi-week rating of all programs in the time period given.

BIGGER THAN EVER

WPIX-11 started its Popeye show in the 6-6:30 p.m. strip back in 1957, and it's been tops from the start.

This fall, WPIX began playing the NEW Popeye cartoons — and only the new ones — the Popeyes that King Features is now producing specifically for TV.

And now, WPIX's Popeye audience is
BIGGER THAN EVER...

897,400 kids per average telecast
38.0% share of audience

FIRST IN ITS TIME PERIOD BY 80%

With his new films
POPEYE IS BIGGER THAN EVER.

Pro Grid Plum To CBS at $9,300,000 In Two-Year Pact

CBS-TV, with an assist from Congress, signed a $9,300,000 deal with the National Football League, giving the web exclusive tv coverage of the 14-week regular-season schedule of NFL in 1962 and 1963.

Web is expected to offer the NFL games first to the national and regional sponsors which had the NFL schedule initially with the web. Ford Motors and Marlboro Cigarets had the three nationally telecast NFL games prior to the court's nix on the deal. Regional tabs had been picked up by oil companies, various beer labels, etc.

In the late summer of 1961, after litigation in the courts, Congress passed a bill exempting professional football, basketball, baseball and hockey leagues from antitrust law in the area of a single network television contract. Bill was signed last October by President Kennedy.

This law made it possible for the NFL and CBS to enter into the new two-year agreement providing for equal distribution of tv rights money among NFL member clubs.

CBS-TV Sports v.p. William C. MacPhail said all games each Sunday will be broadcast by CBS-TV on a regional basis. In addition, there will be national telecasts on Thanksgiving Day and on Saturday after the close of the college football season.

NFL and CBS had entered into a similar agreement, calling for the same terms, last April 26. That contract was signed in San Francisco and immediately submitted to federal court in Philadelphia for an opinion on its validity. NFL felt the move was necessary because of a 1953 ruling by Judge K. Grim of the Philadelphia court containing language which the NFL thought applicable in an antitrust sense to a single network contract.

After nearly three month's consideration, Judge Grim ruled the NFL-CBS contract void on July 20, and subsequently turned down a rehearing request by the NFL on July 28. It was after that that Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N.Y.) introduced the bill which was passed by Congress.

Sponsor Holes In CBS-TV Entries

There are sponsor holes now or to be filled in three CBS-TV's "Bob Cummings Show," 'Checkmate" and "Defenders."

The Nutri-Bio deal for half-sponsorship of "Bob Cummings Show" never came off, leaving the show half sustaining currently. Skein remains a shaky entry and probably won't go beyond a 26-week run.

Liggett & Myers at the end of April is due to drop out as alternate half-hour sponsor of "Checkmate." Kimberly Clark, which had "Defenders" on an alternate hour basis, is cutting back to an alternate half-hour, starting March 24. Kimberly Clark is putting its money saved into CBS-TV daytime. Sponsor bought four alternate quarter hours in "Love of Life," "House Party," "Password," and "Verdict Is Yours."

In the daytime, CBS-TV has won a renewal from Binney & Smith for an additional ride on "Captain Kangeroo."

Nighttime, P. Lorillard has bought minutes in "Frontier Circus," and "Ichabod and Me." Also buying participations in "Circus" is Vick Chemical. Kellogg's now is the new alternate week sponsor of Monday's "Pete & Gladys."

Peterson's Chi Slot

Donald H. Peterson has been named director of advertising, promotion and press information for the ABC central division and its Chicago o&o, WBKB-TV.

He replaces James M. Ascher who resigned for a foreign post with the U. S. Information Agency. Frank J. Little has been appointed Peterson's assistant and Patrick G. Mulvihill has been added as publicist.

VARIETY ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots complete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and average share of audience is furnished. Top competition an competitive ratings also are highlighted.

Henry J. Kaiser's 'Ugly American' In Reverse For TV

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

The good side of "The Ugly American" by the same authors, Charles Lederer and Eugene Burdick, is being developed for a tv series as a possible network entry next season by Henry J. Kaiser. It is believed to be the first time that two best-selling authors completely reversed their literary concept.

Tom McDermott, veepee of Four Star, has both Burdick and Lederer under contract and an outline is being developed by them. Kaiser reportedly has the series under consideration as replacement for the current "Follow the Sun," which on the basis of its present ratings won't be renewed for next season.

Kaiser is interested in creating a more favorable image of the American abroad because of his widespread interests around the world.

Tighten ABC Reins On Its O&O Setup

In a move to tighten network control over its owned & operated stations, ABC-TV has split up its tv and radio o&os under two different directions. Julius Barnathan, who had been v.p. for affiliates tv stations, takes over the new spot of prexy of the five television o&os. Stephen C. Riddleberger takes over the prexy role for the six radio o&o's. Riddleberger had been v.p. for all 11 of the ABC o&o's, but his duties had been chiefly liaison between local and network management.

Under the new setup, more direct intervention into the operation of the o&o's can be expected in such key areas as sales and programming. As with all webs, the ABC o&o's, particularly in television, have been a decisive factor in the web's profit picture and the aim is to beef up this division of the network to the utmost.

Robert L. Coe, vice-prexy in charge of tv station relations, is stepping into Barnathan's previous spot.

BEN LYONS SETS UP BRIT. TV PROD. UNIT

London, Jan. 16.

Ben Lyon, currently light entertainment chief of Associated-Rediffusion, commercial tv contractor for London on weekdays, is to set up his own company next month and package vidshows for both the commercial web and BBC-TV. Move means Lyon won't stay on at A-R after his contract expires on Feb. 15.

Exec states he will not get down to details of his new enterprise until after he's quit his present job. He hopes to secure international names for several projects on the stocks but, at this stage, precise details have not been worked out. For instance: the company has no name yet.

This will be Lyon's first entry into freelance production. He was, however, production chief with 20th-Fox in Britain from 1948-50. Prior to that he was on the company's casting staff in the U. S. Lyon joined A-R in 1959 as light entertainment topper and has helped present nearly 100 shows.

Kraft's CBS Radio Buy

Kraft Foods, division of National Dairy Products, is returning to network radio through a 21-week contract with CBS Radio, calling for an average of 16 participations a week on behalf of Kraft Margerine.

Schedule consists of a series of intermittent commercial exposure of five or four weeks' duration. Schedule takes effect on Feb. 5. Participations will be within various news broadcasts and "Dimension" features.

Agency is Needham, Louis & Brorby.

3 Networks Plotting 'Operation Satellite' for TV Next Fall

The heads of the three network tv news departments plan to see Space Administrator James E. Webb shortly to consult on "the biggest and best and most representative" tv program done by the United States.

Bill McAndrew of NBC, Dick Salant of CBS and Jim Hagerty of ABC have agreed to work together on the "historic" program to be transmitted across the Atlantic next fall. Show is to be the first to be beamed to Europe via space satellite tv. By fall, the webs expect special receiving stations will have been fully constructed in Europe. Webs hope to get the government to send up a working satellite at that time and the signal from here will be bounced to Europe off the space vehicle.

Stanza will probably have a news peg, since it seems the webs agree that the satellite transmitting system, whether to or from Europe, should be reserved essentially for news stories.

At a forum last week given by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences' N.Y. chapter the use of the satellite was discussed. It was there agreed also that things that could go on film should continue being shipped abroad by film, and that news should get the live transatlantic treatment. Academy members heard NBC's Julian Goodman tip the forthcoming meeting with spaceman Webb.

Even Educ'l Stations Yen Features-For-TV

St. Louis, Jan. 16.

The St. Louis educational tv station, KETC, has obtained 15 feature films from St. Louis ABC affiliate, KTVI.

The films will be scheduled Wednesdays at 7:30 p.m., beginning Jan. 24, in a move to pick up audience interest in the station's nighttime schedules. Kickoff film will be "Gunga Din," to be followed over a 13-week period

White House Tour

p.m. NBC-TV will carry the vidtaped program in the same slot on the same night. ABC-TV will delay its telecast until Friday, Feb. 16, slotting it at 7:30 p.m. for a kiddie tune-in.

The broadcast, conceived and produced by CBS News, has been under preparation for several months by Perry Wolff, producer, Arthur Bonner, associate producer, and their staff. It was supposed to have been telecast earlier this season by CBS-TV, but got a nix from Mrs. Kennedy then. Broadcast was later revived with Mrs. Kennedy's blessing. President Kennedy now also will appear in the program, coming in for the final few minutes.

Charles Collingwood will interview Mrs. Kennedy and narrate the broadcast. Vidtaping by CBS began Monday (15). Turn of events, gives CBS newsman Collingwood exposure on all three webs.

KHJ Trims AM Sked

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

KHJ radio station abruptly chopped its broadcast day by 25%, eliminating midnight-to-six a.m. show presided over by disk jockey Jack Wagner. Also axed were two engineers and one male secretary.

Program director Arnie Schorr acknowledged that biz on wee hours' show had been skimpy; so did Wagner, who reported he received word only hours before he was to have gone on that show abruptly had dropped. He gets two weeks severance pay. His salary was $16,000 per year (bit over AFTRA scale for six-hour nitely hitch), paid on weekly pro rata basis. Recently KHJ tried to shore up show by bringing in Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom for gagfests between shellac spins

WISN-TV Axings

Milwaukee, Jan. 16.

WISN-TV, the Hearst-owned station here, pink-slipped its promo-publicity director, Art Barnes, and its merchandising manager, Carl Vogt, at the year's end.

Barnes had been with the station four and a half years. He's been replaced by Jack Crowley, who was previously account exec for WISN at its agency, Carl Nelson & Associates.

Network Hearing Defers To Orbit

Washington, Jan. 16.

America's effort to place a man in orbit has prompted a postponement of the hotly anticipated beginning of the windup phase of Federal Communications Commission's network programming inquiry. The sessions will get underway Jan. 24 instead of 23 as originally scheduled.

CBS asked for the delay because of broadcasting's coverage of the event.

It wasn't said, but it might be assumed that the networks hope to score some points with the Commission by giving the event blanket coverage. And, if the hearings started on the day of the space shoot, the Commissioners obviously would not have time to view the live coverage.

Anticipating a big crowd and big press coverage, the first week at least will be located at the cavernous Interstate Commerce Commission hearing room, where the programming hearings of 1959 were conducted initially.

CBS is tentatively slated to take up the first week, with NBC next and ABC the third week.

Ottawa — Canadian Broadcasting Corp. headquarters staff, now in eight different builings in Ottawa, will move into its own building in 1963. Tenders are invited for a seven-story, three-wing structure to cost $3,000,000, located on a 15-acre site on the Rideau river in Ottawa's south section.

Broadcasters Sound Alert: 'What's Rep. Celler Got Up His TV Sleeve'?

Washington, Jan. 16.

Although newspapers are expected to be the prime target, broadcasters (especially those who own newspapers) should keep an apprehensive eye peeled on the upcoming investigation by Rep. Emanuel Celler on concentration of news media.

The Brooklyn Democrat and Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee pledged that his probe will be both impartial and thorough. But fact remains that Celler has never been hailed as a friend of broadcasting and especially likes to get his licks in at the networks.

Celler issued this statement of the objectives sought by his Antitrust Subcommittee: "The subcommittee intends to explore in a thorough, objective manner, the causes, effects and possible cures of the growing concentration of ownership in the news field, resulting in a dwindling variety of news and comment available to the public in many parts of the country.

"We are not gunning for anybody, nor are we concerned with anyone's political views. But we are anxious that the people have access to diverse news and opinions, and that the true picture of the media of news communication be presented to the public.

"Remedial legislation may grow out of this inquiry after all the results are in. The subcommittee hopes it will have the cooperation of the public, and the publishing, radio and tv industries. We are quite sure that we will have the earnest cooperation of the public agencies.

"Editors, reporters, owners of newspapers and broadcasting companies, labor leaders, publicists, writers, columnists—all will have the fullest opportunity to express their views."

Minow Carries Torch for More U's to Ease Need for Regulation

Washington, Jan. 16.

Seeing green pastures in the vast UHF band, Newton Minow is showing signs of change of tack—pressing hard for development of the U area in hopes the big regulatory stick may become less needed.

The Federal Communications Chairman made his first speech to the National Press Club, explaining his main purpose in accepting the invite was to make a public pitch for all-channel receiver legislation.

Minow bluntly told the luncheon group, overwhelmingly broadcasters, reps thereof or trade pressers, that unless UHF is opened up, the alternative is even tougher regulation. He averred:

"For just as surely as a commercial is wrapped around a station break—the television industry in the long run faces one result or another: more competition or more regulation."

And, indicating his campaign for UHF will be fought in his usual energetic style, Minow held out another threat.

If the tv set manufacturers and broadcasting industry don't get behind FCC's proposed legislation for all-channel receivers, eventually the Commission may be forced to take the "extreme" move of simply ordering tv to switch to UHF. He urged, as the "painless" way for both public and industry, enactment of all-channel receiver legislation. Under this, manufacturers would be obliged to make sets capable of receiving both the V and U bands, since all other types would be barred from interstate commerce.

The pressure to remedy the situation via a direct move to U (failing passage of the all-channel measure) would mount as the other non-broadcast services put the heat on for the U space now lying fallow.

Minow made plain he is a free enterprise man at heart and implied he has backed more stringent regulatory moves as of necessity rather than penchant. Plugging for a wide-open tv spectrum via UHF, he argued the result would be a battering of tv fare through competition and diversity.

He put it this way: "A free, open, competitive system has brought us to the highest standard of living . . . I think that all of us would insist that the sinews of this system be extended to every phase of our lives—and I see no reason why tv should be excluded from its benefits.

"Today, in tv, we find a situation where we are physically able to go a lot further toward free enterprise, and I fail to understand why so many otherwise staunch defenders of our way of life resist this direction.

"Surely the broadcasters who are most sensitive to what they regard as tightening regulations should welcome this growth and should be willing to accept this competition. A wider field means a rich variety of services for many tastes—and more voices to share the resistance to government."

In reference to latter idea, Minow was deadpan serious in wielding this lure—more UHF channels in operation would increase the broadcasting tribe and swell the ranks of opposition to tough regulatory policies with which he's been identified. In other words, an effective way to stop Minow.

As for his own choice, Minow said: "My vote is for more competition. And my faith is in the belief that this country needs and can support many voices of tv—and the more voices we hear—the better, the richer, the freer we shall be."

Minow, who in the past has harped on the public ownership of the airwaves, made a point in the Press Club speech of the difficulty in drawing a line between what's public and what's private in the broadcast field. Accenting his belief in the private ownership of the medium, he said: "No one has seriously advocated that we alter the underpinnings of our tv system. No one I know of has proposed government control or ownership of tv. We are determined to preserve our own unique mixture; a tv industry based on freedom of expression, privately owned, and operated for a private profit—but which, because it uses scarce channels on the public's airwaves, must also operate in the public interest."

"We wind up with a quasi-public industry regulated by a quasi-judicial agency called the FCC. When we search for ways to improve our tv system we often wind up with quasi-solutions."

In all his cerebrations on the subject, the Chairman said he's arrived at this conviction: "What this country needs is more television, not less."

tion, without warning, fired promotion manager Art Barnes and merchandising manager Carl Vogt).

A few who were involved in the yearend shuffle in Chi went out of one broadcasting revolving door and into another. Don Dillion, exec producer of WBBM-TV whose pink slip was dated Jan. 1, went straight to WBKB in the same capacity on Jan. 2. Jim O'Rourke resigned as midwest sales manager of WGN-TV when he hooked a ride with WTVJ, Miami, Fla.; and Jerry Healey gave up an announcing chore at WBBM Radio to become program manager of WJJD.

Stan Brightwell, a director at WNBQ, got off the local treadmill by signing on with NBC International, and somewhat before the past year ended Matt Vieracker, longtime general manager of WBKB, did likewise with ABC International.

Time was when the networks treated their o&o stations as farm clubs for creative and executive personnel, but those days are gone, and the fellow who toils in the hinterland vineyards today—unless he's a crack salesman—doesn't have much of a future to look to in broadcasting.

Rylander's NBC Promo Awards Parlayed Into Bigtime Station Event

Winners of the fourth annual NBC-TV promotion managers' awards have been picked by ad agency execs.

There were a hundred entries in this year's contest and they included stations that reportedly carry almost as many—or as many—CBS-TV and ABC-TV stanzas as they do NBC's. After four years, surprisingly, NBC-TV still offers the only national prizes for all-round promotional accomplishments by local tv stations. The Broadcast Promotion Assn. gives out awards, of course, but only for on-the-air-promotional achievements.

The NBC promo boss, veep Al Rylander who is part of the overall Syd Eiges public relations staff at the web, decided this year to break winners into two categories. In the past there was some doubt whether smaller tv stations, with smaller budgets, should be placed in direct competition with larger tv stations, in larger markets and with larger budgets. Consequently, NBC promo decided to give duplicate awards to winners in the "under $700" and "over $700" categories. Money refers to the compensation the stations receive from the network for about an hour's worth of time.

Big station winner was Caley Augustine, promotion boss of WIIC-TV, in Pittsburgh. Second and third places went to Kirt Harris, promotion topper at KPRC-TV, Houston, and Donn Winnthers, promotion chief at WBZ-TV, Boston.

Their first, second and third place counterparts in the "under $700" category were Jim Knight of WTRF-TV, Wheeling; Cal Mahlock of WKJG-TV, Fort Wayne, and Frank Doherty, WWLP-TV, Springfield, Ill. All six men are being treated by NBC to the now traditional junket to Hollywood and Las Vegas.

Each category had six more winners, who get prizes ranging from RCA color sets to portable tape recorders.

NBC claims that the 100 respondents in the annual contest devoted over $10,000,000 worth of their coin and energies in 1961 to overall promotion. Over 40 stations, for instance, held parades to boost audience levels in the hometown markets and over 55 stations went along with an NBC-supported guess-the-Top 10 audience contest last fall.

shooting, took between four and five weeks.

The four-part blurb is somewhat of a triumph for Schnitzer, who says he's been promoting the "slice of life" type commercial for more than a decade. This one, he says, was approached from a purely cinematic standpoint which was carried out through casting, set, story and shooting technique. He is back with the Lawrence org on the coast after a short time with Filmways and recently as director of tv series segs, including "Lassie."

"Lots of directors don't direct. They referee," says Schnitzer, who believes the best commercial director is a man with film background who really bosses the production and who brings strictly film techniques to the "90-foot dilemma," the one minute commercial, that is. And that one-minute commercial he considers a demanding art form that embraces every phase of the theatre.

Sitting on the panel with Minow will be Fairfax M. Cone, chairman of the executive committee of Foote, Cone & Belding ad agency; Ward L. Quaal, exec veepee and general manager of WGN Inc.; and Harry Kalven Jr., professor of law at U. of Chicago Law School. Panel will be moderated by Sun-Times columnist and tv personality, Irv Kupcinet.

With the Station Reps

A check of rep firms shows there has been no breakthrough in the sale of 40-second spots that would take up the longer primetime chain breaks provided by the networks last fall.

Only two advertisers so far (unless there is some undisclosed testing underway) are making 40-second placements. Shell, in a nationwide spot campaign, is buying up nighttime 20's, 60's and 40's. Gulf is doing likewise, and one of the reasons offered for the two gasoline company 40's is the tight situation on availabilities in the category. Esso, for instance, has the newscasts around the country pretty much sewed up.

A solid trend, however, is current with spot advertisers, and thats' the purchase of six and seven-week flights instead of the longer campaigns that used to provide contracts up to a year. The trend has not hurt spot biz, since renewals have been consistent in virtually all cases of the short buy.

Briefs: Bolling has picked up WEAT-AM-TV, West Palm Beach, and WINQ, Tampa-St. Petersburg. Former was with Weed, latter with Eastman. Both are Rex Rand stations . . . of it live is so that the fronters can be used promotionally in each town.

A few years ago, Sylvester (Pat) Weaver tried to set up a 15-city network in tv, on the assumption that the 15 largest cities in the country still get as much as 80% of the potential video audience for the U.S. He gave it up after awhile, basically since it was hard lining up a coaxial tie, but Circuit-Television hardly plans to use a wire layout even though each production probably won't hit more than 15 towns. Instead, the whole plan is built about the actual touring.

Cost of the project, which includes either a 60 or 90-minute stanza, also includes all the promotional buildup. It's reported that on this basis the charges will be comparable to a full network setup.

Circuit-Television hopes to start by touring three or four programs simultaneously. And the pitch initially will be to have touring tv stanzas so that a given major advertiser can hit those tv markets where he needs special merchandising stress.

Paulucci to Fight for Rights Of 'Small Client' in Bigtime TV

Jeno Paulucci, boss of the 15-year-old Chun King food line, has a twofold story to tell: How tv has helped build his company to potential $40,000,000 annual outfit and how tough things are for a "small to middle sized business man" when he wants to buy time on a tv network.

Paulucci's company had an advertising budget of $2,250,000 last year. That was when the company grossed $30,000,000. Since he anticipates $40,000,000 in '62 and since he apportions his budget in direct line with sales, the new budget will be about $3,000,000—not had for a "small" company but, he indicated, not enough to make it easy to get a one-hour special on network tv.

Paulucci last week said that if other things didn't interfere, he definitely plans to make himself available to the Government as a witness during the upcoming FCC hearings with the tv webs in Washington. That'll be just one more thorn in the webs' sides.

"I feel somebody should be there to holler his head off," the Chun King boss declared. "I think this business of giving preference on tv to the big companies is for the birds . . . How can the small grow larger if all the favors are for the giants?"

He was referring to the traditional habit of the media of giving preferential space and time treatment to the largest bulk advertisers.

Paulucci started Chun King in Duluth, Minn., 15 years ago, because he was looking for a food line where there was room to expand. The national Italian food market, normally a natural for a guy named Paulucci, was glutted, he pointed out. Chinese food wasn't. First year's gross was about $400,000, but the big strides came when Chun King started spending about 60% of its ad budget in radio and tv spots. That was two years ago.

Chun King has used "the soft sell" of Stan Freberg. Since Freberg did so well in what Paulucci calls "one-minute shows," the foodman figured that Freberg could do pretty well, even though untried in the major tv program area, in a 60-minute soft sell.

He told Freberg to go to N.Y. a few months ago and work with the Chun King agency, BBDO, in getting time cleared for a 60-minute special. They got turned

"leaves the channel open for applications by both commercial and educational interests. Should both apply, the public interest question of commercial vs. educational use of the channel in that area may be fully explored in a comparative hearing."

Noting the "confusion" over the ultimate status of Channel 7, FCC said it would hold off on any applications for use of that assignment for a "reasonable period of time."

Chairman Newton Minow and Commissioner Rosel Hyde concurred in part but favored setting Channel 7 aside in Calais for education. Commissioners John Cross and T. A. M. Craven dissented in part but concurred in not reserving the channel for education.

KTTV WINS ROSE PARADE RATING SWEEPSTAKES FOR 7TH CONSECUTIVE YEAR!

■ With a choice of 5 of the 7 Los Angeles TV stations carrying the spectacularly beautiful Tournament of Roses Parade, Angelenos traditionally choose KTTV. KTTV's 34.0 average share of audience, with a rating high of 21.0, almost doubled the nearest competition.*

Significantly, the KTTV total audience exceeded the combined audiences of the two network stations carrying the event.

■ What clearer indication could there be of viewer preference for KTTV coverage of major Southern California events! Through the years, KTTV has built this audience loyalty by carrying more local "live" events than any other station in the country. Spectacle...sport...tragedy...human interest...when something important happens in Southern California...people depend on KTTV to be on the scene.

dictions about the coming year on his front and all drew applause for their turned phrases and pontifical prognostications.

Running in two more entries than CBS and to a man foreseeing nothing but chaos and defeat in the year ahead, the NBC lineup included:

Joseph C. Harsch from London; Cecil Brown, Tokyo; John Rich, Paris; Pierce Anderton, Berlin; Frank Bourgholtzer, Moscow; James Robinson, Southeast Asia; Welles Hangen, India; Bernard Frizzell, The Congo; and Wilson Hall, Latin America.

Harsch perhaps struck the only note that could possibly be called delightful when he said Britain's entry into the European Common Market just might force Ireland to really strike out on its own or rejoin the Empire. The year could, he said, see the end therefore of "the happiest hostility in history."

Both races were run before SRO crowds and were indeed well received. They lent something to the new network posture which last year meant an expenditure of $55 million by the three on news and current events.

The whole thing left at least this intriguing thought: If anything had broken overseas last week, ABC would have had the field to itself.

down by NBC-TV and CBS-TV, Paulucci charged. But finally, ABC-TV cleared time between 6:30 and 7:30 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 4.

"I was quite surprised to see ABC take it," Paulucci said. "But we took the time because it was all we could get. Besides, I think the Freberg show will be for the family. It'll broaden our audience and offset the bad time."

Paulucci said he refuses to interfere with Freberg's tv invention in any way. "Read the script? No, I don't want to see it; I don't like to read anyway. And if I see the finished tape (shot this week), it's only because I paid for it and my ego says I ought to be first. But change it, no!"

Price War Looms On TV Receivers In West Germany

Bonn, Jan. 16.

It looks as if a price war is looming for television sets in West Germany.

The country's largest catalog house, Quelle, a sort of combined Montgomery Ward-Sears type of operation, has just released a catalog in which the prices on its tv sets are dropped as much as 15%. Quelle, which also has large stores in key German cities, is likewise dropping the prices on its retail outlets.

The new prices as of March 1, 1962, in the Quelle outlets and book-ordering, will be down as much as 127 German marks (about $32) less than previously.

Some of the name brand television set makers had raised their prices slightly in October and November, anticipating a big Christmas sale, which of course materialized. But it is now felt that many of these big producers, in order to fight off the competition, will have to drop their prices again.

With the recent growth of rebate houses in West Germany, the discount war is looming here in prices for such big items as television sets. The West German Cartel Office has recently got into the scrap, with queries as to whether it is legal to maintain fixed prices, and whether the discount houses have the right to drop prices on brand merchandise.

Biggest discounting is allegedly going on in the country's iron-rich Ruhr area, where some of the major dealers announced that after Feb. 1, they will no longer be bound to fixed prices on the television sets of well-known manufacturers. And in an article published in the German Radio Retailers, the top member of the board of the association noted that the radio industry fought for 13 years before it realized that it can survive in spite of price-slashings, and television will apparently go the same way.

There are currently about six million television sets in West Germany—one for every eight people—and some sellers figure that without some price advantages, it will be difficult to move out many more sets.

Atlanta—Bob Mann, veteran of 25 years in news handing on newspapers, radio, television and wire service reporting, has been named news director of WQXI, Atlanta indie now owned and operated by Esquire Broadcasting Co. # Tokyo's TV Viewing Habits

Tokyo, Jan. 16.

Children of parents with college educations spent less time watching tv than those of less schooled parents, according to survey on influence of tv on youngsters conducted by Education Ministry. The survey, third of its kind, sampled elementary, junior high and high school students of nine representative prefectures.

It revealed that elementary school children spent an average of one hour and 40 minutes watching tv on weekdays and two hours and 20 minutes on Sundays and holidays. Boys were found to spend 10 more minutes before their sets on an average day than girls.

Survey further disclosed that viewing time of children fell off proportunately to length of time a set was in the household.

Children of fathers with only elementary school educations spent nearly one hour a day more watching tv than children whose fathers had been to college. The spread became greater when the education of their mothers was considered.

Children of fishing and mountain areas were found to spend much less time viewing tv than youngsters living in large cities, industrial areas and farming communities.

High school students and youths with jobs watched tv for an average of one and a half hours on weekdays and two hours on Sundays and holidays, the survey revealed. It was also found that this category of subject spent more time in study and reading when their household had no tv set.

Most popular programs among the high school and working group were modern dramas, claiming 24.7% of the preferences. Detective and mystery plays scored 14%, comedies 11.7%, news 11.4% and action plays, 11.3%.

Contrary to some beliefs, murder and gangster shows scored only 10%, although youngsters sampled said these made more lasting impressions.

McCormack Keeps House Shut to TV

Washington, Jan. 16.

New House Speaker, John W. McCormack (D.-Mass.) today (Tues.) temporarily torpedoed opening House Committee hearings to television coverage.

In a ruling from the chair, McCormack said he agrees with the late House Speaker Sam Rayburn that televised House Committee meetings violate House rules.

But he noted that the House can, by a majority vote, change its rules any time. Sentiment is growing among House members for tv coverage, and the possibility exists a majority may change the rules later this year.

Rep. George Meade (R.-Mich.), a strong tv proponent, asked McCormack for the ruling.

Two Gemini Pilots Pacted By NBC-TV

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

NBC-TV is picking up the tab for two pilots to be filmed by the newly-formed Gemini Productions, and has agreed to pick one of the projects as a series for next season. Partnered in Gemini are Ralph Edwards and Herbert Hirschman, the latter producer of the hit series, "Dr. Kildare," until he ankled MGM-TV last month.

The projects to be piloted are "Logan's Cove," a 60-min. action series, and "Tomorrow's Newspaper," a half-hour anthology dealing with the theme that everybody's destiny is predetermined.

Gemini, headquartered at Revue, will shoot the projects there. Hirschman is exec producer and is now casting both vehicles. Ziegler, Helman & Ross repped Hirschman, MCA Edwards.

Untapped Features

United Artists, Warner Bros. and MGM.

As of mid-July, '61, it's estimated the post-'48 Hollywood derby racers still had the following number of pix up to that July, '61 cut-off date: Allied Artists, 257 pix; Columbia, 343; 20th-Fox, 178; United Artists, 272; Warner Bros., 201; Metro, 338; Walt Disney, heavily engaged in tv production on his own, to date has kept his 41 post-'48 features off the market.

Even majors such as Metro are releasing pix to tv faster than they are producing. Metro has about 15 features on its current schedule. Metro tv, releasing post-'48's at the slow rate of 30 per year, still is outdistancing the now current production rate.

When will the famine really set in? In About five or six years the pool is expected to be dry indeed. Referred to, of course, are first-run pix. The reruns will be around for years and years after that. In fact, any regular perusal of the VARIETY-ARB feature charts, which marks the first-run and reruns, will find reruns holding sway in market after market.

In the meantime, the law of supply and demand is operating in key markets throughout the country and prices are going up. Waiting in the wings still is that estimated $265,800,000 tv plum yet to be plucked by the Hollywood majors for their post-'48 pix, in short supply by tv standards.

'Films of '50' Sales

Seven Arts' has sold six more markets on "Films of the 50s." Of the three "volumes" now on the market, four of the six stations bought the latest, volume III.

WBEN-TV, Buffalo, KSD-TV, St. Louis, KHOU-TV, Houston, and WOC-TV, Davenport bought the newest group. KHJ-TV, L.A., and WTOL-TV, Toledo, bought volume II.

In all, the latest group is sold in five markets, and volume II is in 85 markets, according to Seven Arts.

British Regional TV Acquiring A Distinct Flavor Of Its Own

London, Jan. 16.

Television Wales & West, independent regional station with a 2,500,000 strong half-Welsh, half-English audience, is to run a locally-produced program — spotlighting clairvoyant Maurice Woodruff—against BBC-TV's "Dr. Kildare," one of the web's most powerful entries. Move is indicative of the small stations' general desire to be as independent of the majors as possible and, more specifically, of an upbeat in home-grown programming.

TWW is the local outlet that bought "87th Precinct" from NBC-International, and became the first regional to buy a major series outright from the U.S. Program controller Bryan Michie is now hawking this round other local stations and already Anglia—TV and Ulster-TV have bitten while Tyne-Tees-TV and Southern-TV are sniffing the bait interestedly.

As of the moment, British regional contractors can't whip the production wheel into action because of the actors' layoff but, nonetheless, are making their mark on the network. Anglia-TV, for instance, beams "Survival," a nature-study program, to two-thirds of Britain and contributes eight plays (some 60, some 90 minutes) a year to the indie network under normal circumstances.

Further example of a yen to originate fare of national acceptability as well as their locally-aimed shows, is the plan to produce inter-region, half-hour dramas. Six regions were to be involved but the idea has been blocked by Equity's labor holdoff. Nevertheless, the first two of these plays which were produced by Southern-TV before the strike, have been picked up by Granada-TV for national screening later this year.

The project—for which topflight writers were used—is pencilled in to start afresh when the performers' dispute is settled. Other instances of local stations feeding the network are "This Wonderful World" from Scottish-T and "Land Of Song" from TWW.

But besides contributing to the commercial web's schedule, the regional stations have got down to producing many hours of local broadcasting. According to the Independent Television Authority, the last count saw the nine small stations producing 70 hours of tv per week, while the four major originated 49 hours.

One reason for the regional execs' enthusiasm for the local-appeal show—TWW, for example, produce between 10 to 12 hours a week—is that they seem to stand up well against the broader formulas of the nationally-flavored programs. Ulster-TV found a successful local show in "With A Fiddle And A Flute" which topped the TAM (Television Audience Measurements Ltd.) ratings after only a couple of airings. UTV has now extended the show to 45-minutes and it has developed into a cast-iron local winner. "Roundabout," the stations' 45-minute topical magazine is also a favorite in Ulster and features in the lists regularly.

Southern-TV reports classy ratings for such entries as "Home Grown," a local talent skein, and "Beat Your Neighbor," a cash quiz held in different Southern towns. Both shows are easing nearer and nearer to prime time slots and currently are going out at 7 and 7:30 p.m.

But although more recently-formed country stations like Grampian-TV, Westward-TV, and Border-TV have still to rely heavily on the network — they produce, on average, only six hours of local video a week—the area stations are maturing fiscally and in production techniques to such a degree that, like TWW, they may soon see themselves in a position to oppose toprated network product.

90 Mins., Sun., 2:30 p.m.
FORD, SCHLITZ, CARTER
CBS-TV (tape)

(JWT, DCS&S, SSC&B)

With football out of the way, CBS-TV has returned this 90-minute sports potpourri which last season scored with some brilliant coverage of on and offbeat events. But the fact that a show of this sort takes chances, even with the safeguard of videotape, was pointed up in the Sunday (14) outing at the Steamboat Springs, Col., Winter Carnival.

A heavy snowfall made it tough going for contestants, particularly in the finals to select ski jumpers for the four-man U. S. team that will compete in the Polish world championship next month and also for the slalom. The inclemency also apparently caused the CBS crews a good deal of trouble. Faulty tape reproduction was evident from certain camera locations throughout most events.

Still, the show managed a few exciting moments in horse-drawn cutter racing and saved its reputation for the esoteric with horse-drawn skiing youngsters plucking rings off poles with javlins.

This year's show host, Jack Whitaker, did a generally good job, aided in the expertizing by Olympic skier Art Devlin. There was a tendency, however, to over-dramatize some of the lesser events. Show is booked solid with a trio of sponsors which, at least in the Steamboat Springs coverage, called for a disturbing number of blurbs. Bill.

YOUNG WORLDS '62
With Virginia Graves Wieschoff, moderator; others
Exec Producer: Ned Cramer
Director: Neal Finn
30 Mins.; Sat., 3 p.m.
WCBS-TV, N. Y.

Young people from far away and nearby lands lit up the screen Saturday (13) afternoon, offering an encouraging half-hour for a tired world. The occasion was the 16th annual New York Herald Tribune Forum for High Schools, a project which brings many gifted high school students to the U. S. for a three-month visit.

The opening telecast of this 13-week series was devoted mainly to what the teenagers expected to find in the N. Y. Metropolitan area. The good humor and warmth reflected in their vision was a sight to behold. The world's safe if these youngsters from 36 countries represent the dominant strain in their respective societies.

Mrs. Virginia Graves Wieschoff, Forum director, lent able leadership to the lively discussion. Final few minutes were taken up by the youngsters meeting American families with whom they will live while in this country. Horo.

LEE, THE VIRGINIAN
With Thomas Mitchell, narrator
Producer-Writer: John McGiffert
Director: Lynwood King
30 Mins. Mon. (15), 8 p.m.
UNION CENTRAL INSURANCE
NBC-TV (film; tape)

This was a slight contribution by NBC special projects unit, particularly if one considers other cultural stanzas done by this network subdivision. Telling in still pix and narration the life of the Confederate Army chief, it had only time to strike at the highlights of Lee's brilliant career and gentle nature. Still and all, it was worthy of airtime, because, at worst, it was better than more typical tv fare.

Thomas Bitchell narrated this piece rather self-consciously. Music by Robert Emmett Dolan was okay and the tieing together of the various stills by director Lynwood King, while redundant, was neat. Art.

OPINION IN THE CAPITAL
Producers: Mark Evans, Martin Weldon
Director: Stuart Cameron
30 Mins., Sun., 8:30 p.m.
WTTG, Washington (tape)

Senate GOP leader Everett Dirksen, the man with the golden tongue, was a good, timely catch for Metropolitan Broadcasting's new interview program, "Opinion in the Capital," Congress having returned last week.

A genial lawmaker, the Illinois Republican was interviewed by two equally genial personalities from Metropolitan's Washington outlet, WTTG-TV. Mark Evans and Martin Weldon, v.p. and news director respectively, did a good job of eliciting Dirksen's views on President Kennedy's State of the Union message, the various issues Congress will tackle, right-wing extremism, Katanga, etc.

It was all done in a relaxed, informal fashion without looking staged. The needle-and-hot-seat style of interviewing was spurned by Messrs. Evans and Weldon who treated their subject like a numan being rather than simply as a target for loaded questions. As much, if not more news, may be elicited if the interviewee feels at home instead of on the defensive, according to one theory of the art.

Even if Dirksen doesn't always make hot copy, (especially without his partner, House Republican leader Charles Halleck), a sensual pleasure can be derived from just listening to his gliding, polysyllabic rhetoric. Jay.

MEET THE PROFESSOR
Producer: Jack Mitchell
Director: Robert Delaney
Writer: Ira Marion
30 Mins., Sun., 2:30 p.m.
ABC-TV (film)

ABC-TV's "Meet the Professor" gets a lot of human interest into its investigation of the country's higher education facilities, a probe which otherwise might be very dull viewing, by concentrating on a different academic personality each week.

In the return preem Sunday (7), the man of the half-hour was MIT Prof. Huston Smith, a typical tweedy, dedicated type who has the rather unique job of teaching the humanities to engineering, science and math students. Smith, who may have had reservations about the task when he went to MIT, said he had discovered that bright people develop an enthusiastic interest in just about anything they undertake, thus the future scientists and engineers turned out to be much like once regular line students of the arts. In fact, he said, the students voted 42 to two to attend a metephysics class on Washington's birthday.

ABC cameras cased the prof in conference with one student, in seminar, on the lecture platform and relaxing by feeding ducks on a pond near his home ("Life of the mind, to say nothing of the spirit, needs restoration").

Both in the seminar and lecture segs, director Robert Delaney apparently managed to cull moments of particular interest, as in the latter with Smith discussing Eastern religions and British diplomacy in India. Seems pornography was flooding the Indian mails, but with Albion restraint, the British postal regulation read, "No obscene literature may pass through the mails (unless it's religious)." Bill.

MATTY'S FUNNIES
Producer: A. C. R. Stone
Writer: Bob Clampett
30 Mins., Sat., 7 p.m.
MATTEL TOYS
ABC-TV (film)

(Carson-Roberts)

Unlike many of the cartoon half-hours on the network nighttime slates this season, ABC's new "Matty's Funnies" has no appeal whatsoever to the adult audience. Like most of the daytime animated grinds for kids, this Snowball, Inc., production has lots of noise and wild and violent sight gags to keep moppett eyes glued to the screen.

Main characters are to type — Beany, a lad like any other; Cecil, the seas sick sea serpent; Captain Huffenpuff, skipper of the Leakin' Lena; Crowy, the lookout bird; and Dishonest John, the hersuited heavy.

Various segs got a lively assist from special music scored by Jack Roberts and Hoyt Curtin; Bob and Sody Clampett; and Eddie Brandt. The animation, supervised by Art Scott, was par for the kiddie video course.

In the show caught, the best seg was a hunt for the wild man from Wildsville, which utilized a lot of hip talk and had the sea serpent, the series' most charming character, in a number of fairly imaginiative and funny situations. Bill.

ABC'S WIDE WORLD OF SPORTS
With Jim McKay
Exec Producer: Roone Arledge
90 Mins.; Sun., 5 p.m.
GILLETTE; LIBERTY MUTUAL; GENERAL MILLS
ABC-TV, from various points

(Maxon; BBDO; Knox-Reeves)

With the finale of the American Football League season, ABC-TV is maintaining the strenuous life on Sunday afternoons with the second year of "Wide World of Sports," nifty 90-minute stanza which fully lives up to its title. Last Sunday's stanza (14), the second in the series, ranged from the sunny clime of Acapulco to the frozen tundras of Grossinger's in upstate New York to cover some recent competitions in water and on ice.

At Grossinger's, a crew picked up the world's championship barrel-jumping contest, a slightly exotic but highly exciting ice-skating sport in which the contestants, mostly French-Canadians, hurtle over a progressively lengthening chain of barrels until a winner emerges. From Acapulco, the water skiing championship meet provided the main event for the show with some superlative shots of the various contestants in the women's and men's divisions doing their jumping and slaloming stunts.

The ice and water events were alternately spotlighted on the show for a good change of pace. Camera work was excellent throughout in capturing the peak moment in every turn. Also standout were the commentaries which were lucid and helpful in explaining the fine points of form involved in the various sports. From Acapulco, Jim Simpson and Stew MacDonald assisted Jim McKay, the regular host on the series, while from Grossinger's, Curt Gowdy handled the fall-by-falls. Occasional interviews with the athletes at the various locales helped furnish a personal touch.

An added feature from Acapulco was a shot of a dare devil diving off a 136-foot cliff into the Pacific Ocean. Herm.

LONESOME VALLEYS OF KENTUCKY
With Bill Small Narrator
Writer: Small
Producer: Chuck Hall
30 Mins., Thurs. 10:30 p.m.
WHAS-TV, Louisville.

One of the "WHAS Reports" series, Lonesome Valleys of Kentucky took a close look at the mountain area of Eastern Kentucky, a once thriving section, now peopled by natives, most of whom are unemployed. Automation has taken a heavy toll from once prosperous coal miners, and judging from this documentary, the outlook is bleak for many young people, who are fast migrating to the larger population centers in search of employment.

Older residents continue to hang on, hoping that someday they will again be needed to mine the coal. But new, improved methods of extracting the coal, and strings of coal cars leaving the area, give little hope to the oldsters who have spent most of their years in the mines. Several of the film shots depicted dying towns, and shacks occupied by families who have accepted bread lines as a way of life.

Much of the film was shot by Bill Small, WHAS News head, as he visited several small communities and interviewed the residents.

Recorded background music was of the folk song genre, and heightened the general hopeless outlook for Kentucky's "depressed area." Show stressed that good wages do not come back; in over one-third of the counties of Southeast Kentucky, the average per capita income is less than $800 a year. Small made no attempt to editorialize, and to suggest a solution, but with picture and narration, gave viewers facts and figures which brought home the drab outlook for the citizens of the area. The theme was the fact that more coal was being taken out of the area than ever before, but fewer miners were working.

Musical theme "I have walked the lonesome valley" opened and closed the show. Fred Wiche was credited with film and editing. This WHAS News production gives an honest, though depressing look at a Kentucky problem. Wied.

Joan Sutherland Aussie TVer (Sullivan's Tape)

Australian opera singer Joan Sutherland is going to appear on Australian television. Her Aussie appearance will be a repeat on tape of the one she did last Dec. 3 on Ed Sullivan's U.S. tv stanza, making it the first time that any portion of a Sullivan CBS-TV'er has been shown abroad.

Charles Michelson, agent here for several Aussie commercial outlets, spent a month dickering with the Sullivan people in order to get the four-minute Sutherland extract for consumption in her homeland. Because of rulings on overseas replay payments by the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, the network has been charry about releasing Sullivan tapes abroad. Ditto rules by the American Federation of Musicians. As a matter of fact, Michelson initially tried to get a Sutherland extract from NBC-TV's "Bell Telephone Hour" and failed.

Use of the four-minute Sutherland seg marks the first time an American-made vidtape will be used down under.

price and the intelligence of performers very cheaply.

Gleason also spoke of psychiatry, occultism, politics, rock 'n' roll, show biz critics, etc. His opinions were marked by acute insight mixed with intellectual hangovers from infancy, a common characteristic with "self-educated" men. But, most importantly, his opinions were strictly his own and always interesting.

Asked by Susskind what worlds were there left to conquer after mopping up in television, legit, disks and now films, Gleason replied: "Well' there's Mars, Venus, Saturn . . ." Helm.

DuPont Show of the Week

It came as quite a surprise, since television's pieces of memorabilia tend to be maudlin but Ken Murray's "Hollywood—My Home Town" was a clear-headed entertaining hour on the Jan. 7 edition of "DuPont Show of the Week" over NBC-TV.

Taking essentially "home movies" that he has made since 1927 when he first arrived in Hollywood, Murray gave the tv audience a chance to o.o. the frivolity and lighter side of the Hollywood greats. There were films (Murray isn't a bad photographer) of John Barrymore, Ward Bond, Pat Boone, Eddie Cantor, Frank Capra, Charles Chaplin, Gary Cooper, W. C. Fields, Russ Colombo, Douglas Fairbanks Sr., Cary Grant, Jean Harlow, Bob Hope, Leslie Howard, Boris Karloff, Richard Arlen, Burt Lancaster Jack Lemmon, Tyrone Power, Jack Oakie, Tom Mix, Frank Sinatra, Jimmy Stewart, Robert Stack, Spencer Tracy, Rudolph Valentino, Rudy Vallee, Sonny Tufts, Dick Powell and Harriet Nelson. This is about half the list.

A good deal of credit for the success of this intentionally limited outing must go to writer Royal Foster, who helped keep things honest, intelligent and balanced.

Hardly a view of Hollywood's serious side, still it was a pleasant if faintly self-conscious look at filmsville. Art.

DISKS BOOMING AS PREMIUMS

Victor Eyes More Longhair Biz Via Fewer Releases & Personal Service

After closing its books on 1961 with a Christmas sales rackup that was 25% to 30% ahead of the previous year and the firm establishment of six new pop artists (Al Hirt, The Limeliters, Peter Nero, Ann-Margaret, Neil Sedaka and The Tokens), RCA Victor is priming for the new year with a special drive on its classical (Red Seal) product.

According to George R. Marek, Victor's v.p.-general manager, classical sales have been lagging (they're somewhere between 10% and 17% of the total industry take) and the figures are not proportionate with the cultural boom that the country is now experiencing. It's Marek's theory that the growth of self-service disk retailing has been detrimental to the classical field.

Unlike pop record buyers, Marek says, the classical buff likes personal service and guidance from the retailer and his sales staff. However, he sees some glimmer of hope that there will be a return to "the old-fashioned record dealer" with the increase in the number of shops that are returning to and specializing in personal service with listening booths, charge accounts and sales personnel who are familiar with the recording repertoire.

Marek believes that the record manufacturers themselves also can

Pickwick Nets $60,280 In 6 Months Ended Oct. 31 On Sales of $1,834,053

Pickwick International sales for the six-month period ending Oct. 31, 1961 hit $1,834,053 corresponding to an 84.7% increase over the same period the previous year. Firm's earnings during this six-month period was 20c per share, which compares with 11.7c per share for the same period a year ago.

The six-month report to stockholders also notes a jump in net income from $35,393 during the six-month period in 1960 to $60,280 in '61. Cy Leslie, Pickwick president stated: "Our earnings during this current six-month period have been computed on 300,000 shares which give effect to the company's public sale of 100,000 shares of new stock.

"The previous period's earnings were calculated as if there were 300,000 shares then outstanding. Your company received the proceeds from this offering Nov. 6, 1961, after the close of the six-month period reported herein. Since then, our sales have continued to show impressive improvement over the like period last year."

Pickwick handles lowpriced promotional, kiddie and instructional records.

RIVERSIDE HANDLING CLEM McCARTHY LP

The voice of famed sportscaster Clem McCarthy will be preserved for posterity via a Riverside Records' album. Called "Clem McCarthy," the disk was produced for the label by Bud Greenspan, who, in addition to his work as an ad agency commercial producer, has put together several documentary waxings on sports and other subjects.

The platter will feature actual broadcasts by McCarthy of several classic athletic events. Also to be heard on the disk will be Ed Sullivan who will do the narration, featuring data on the announcer and the events he covered.

McCarthy has been severely ill for some years, the victim of Parkinson's Disease. A foundation bearing his name has been set up to raise money to fight the ailment. A portion of the proceeds from the sale of the disks will go to the foundation.

Connie Francis Inks New 5-Year MGM Disk Pact

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

Arnold Maxin, MGM Records prexy, has repacted Connie Francis to a recording contract for an additional five-year term. Simultaneously, it was disclosed that Metro, parent company, has inked the singer-actress to star in three films.

Morris Levy & Phil Kahl End An 8-Yr. Partnership

An eight-year partnership between Phil Kahl and Morris Levy wound up last week. Kahl sold his interest in the Patricia, Kahl and Planetary Music organizations as well as Roulette Records and the Roundtable, a supper club on New York's eastside.

Levy purchased Kahl's stocks in the various enterprises for an undisclosed sum. The settlement goes into effect immediately.

Before teaming with Levy in 1953, Kahl had been general professional manager of Disney Music in the east. He also was affiliated with Disney's firm on the Coast and before that with Santly-Joy Music (now known as Joy Music).

A few months ago, Joe Kolsky, Kahl's brother, left Roulette, where he was sales chief, to form his own label, Diamond Records. Kahl says that his decision to terminate his partnership with Levy was in no way connected with his brother's recent move.

Kahl expects to reveal his future plans, which will still center on music biz activities, within the next couple of weeks.

TIEINS WITH MFRS PUSH PRODUCTS

By EDDIE KALISH

Use of disks as premium and promotional material for consumer purchasing inducement continues to turn up with growing regularity in connection with all manner of low-priced products. Within recent months there have been disk tieins with razors, shampoo, liquid mending products, hairdressing, cigarets and all kinds of things including disks. And the premium disk biz is expected to grow.

That the record is an effective product pusher is exemplified by the American Tobacco Co. which, as part of a recently-begun ad campaign built around the phrase "Remember how great cigarets used to taste?," marketed an LP of million-sellers under the title, "Remember How Great?". The platter was available for $1 plus 10 empty packs of Lucky Strikes, the subject of the ad push. The deal was also given an extensive ad campaign of its own.

The company is now coming out with a "Remember How Great? Volume 2" which will be available through March for the same dollar and packs arrangement. Major Sunday supplements throughout the country will carry the promotion, with two-page inserts featuring the album jacket in full color scheduled for magazines. The promotion is also being featured on in-store displays, and tv commercials pegged to the offer will be spotted on Luckies' network telecasts.

Columbia Record Productions (Col's premium production arm) has assembled the package which includes tunes by Tony Bennett, Cab Calloway, the Champs, the Chordettes, Rosemary Clooney, Percy Faith, Gogi Grant, Frankie Laine, Guy Mitchell, Patty Page, Jo Stafford and Andy Williams.

Top Names Involved

Csida Riding Herd on Cap Singles As Part of New Realignment Plan

Capitol Records' singles operations is now Joe Csida's baby, Csida, Cap's veepee for eastern operations, will now direct all aspects of the company's singles output, including domestic and international artists and repertoire, sales policies, promotion and and merchandising.

The assignment is part of Capitol's plan to organize its record business into three separate, semi-autonomous product lines—singles, pop albums and classics—each headed by a senior executive having complete authority and responsibility for the attainment of sales objectives.

According to Alan W. Livingston, newly-appointed exec in charge of firm's records and phonographs group, all Capitol's artists and repertoire producers working principally in the singles field will will now report directly to Csida. Previously, the firm's singles a&r staff operated as part of the creative service division headed by Livingston. Under the new set-up, producers working principally in the album field will continue to report to Livingston.

Handling Nashville

As part of single-record responsibilities, Csida will take charge of the label's recording operations in Nashville. Paul Wyatt, Cap's newly-appointed a&r producer in Nashville, is currently setting up permanent quarters for the label's country and western activities in that city. Wyatt will report directly to Csida.

In his capacity as veepee for

Jack Gold Moving Into Pic Biz Via Rouen Prods.

Jack Gold is moving into the pic business. Gold, a music publisher and record manufacturers, has formed Roven Productions Inc., to turn out feature films.

Two pictures are planned for release this year with titles and shooting dates to be set later.

Cameo-Parkway Going Public At $7 Per Share Top

Washington, Jan. 16.

Cameo-Parkway Records Inc., of Philadelphia, has asked the Securities & Exchange Commission to register 200,000 shares of Class A common stock. The securities will be offered to the public at a maximum of $7 per share.

Of the shares going on the block, 40,000 are held by the company and 160,000 by Bernard Lowe, prexy of the firm.

According to SEC, the record firm derived 99% of its 1960 revenues from Chubby Checker and Bobby Rydell disks. For the first nine months of 1961, the percentage was pegged at 85% from the Checker-Rydell parlay.

Of the net proceeds from the company's sale of stock, $120,000 will go for the purchase or production of additional master tapes for future release and the balance for acquisition of contracts with vocalists, working capital and other corporate purposes.

The company has outstanding 212,500 Class A and 353,000 Class B common shares (convertible share for share into Class A). Lowe owns 165,000 Class A shares (and proposes to sell 160,000 shares) and all of the Class B stock.

London Names Magraw Pop Material Boss Of Product From O'seas

Jack Magraw has been appointed pop material boss of both 45 rpm and LP product coming from England and Europe for London Records. Joe Fields will continue to handle the material coming from English Decca and will now be responsible for the release, promotion and sales of the 45s and LPs.

Fields will take care of product being recorded by Decca personnel in England only while Magraw's domain will cover material from English Decca's European affiliates including Teldec, Fonior and DuSon as well as being responsible for product arising from agreements with Durium in Italy, Oriole in England and Pye in England.

Meantime, Lee Hartstone, London's veepee-general manager, claims a jump of 25% in net sales for the nine-month period ending Dec. 31 over same period in 1960. London is the wholly owned subsidiary of English Decca and distributes the parent company's product on the London label in the U.S. In addition, London is active in the American pop field with such indie lines as Monument, Hi and Felsted, among others.

WB TAPS APPLEBAUM EASTERN A&R CHIEF

Warner Bros. Records is reopening its New York artists and repertoire office with the appointment of Stan Applebaum as eastern director of a&r for the diskery. He reports to J. K. Maitland, WB Records prexy.

In addition to his a&r post, Applebaum has a separate contract as an exclusive WB artist. Also an arranger and conductor with credits on Broadway, pix, tv and niterles, he will continue outside arranging on a non-exclusive basis.

In the past year Applebaum has had a good chart success via work with several pop artists including Connie Francis, Neil Sedaka, Bryan Hyland, Ben E. King, Chris Connor and others.

His appointment closely follows the recent naming of Jimmy Hilliard to the post of Coast a&r director, for the label.

Conniff's 'Love,' Hirt's 'Horn,' Channing's 'Blondes' Top New LPs

RAY CONNIFF SINGERS: "SO MUCH IN LOVE" (Columbia). Ray Conniff isn't satisfied to follow the patterns of previous LP clicks which makes almost every new entry of his an exciting listening experience. This time out he gives the lead to his singers, pairing them off with a coupling of tunes to make a love story. For instance, he's paired "Chances Are" with "It's Not For Me To Say," "Autumn Leaves" with "Just Walking In The Rain" and "Dancing On The Ceiling" with "Dancing In The Dark," among others, into a romantic medley that the programmers and the home spinners will go for in a big way. Chalk up another winner for Conniff.

AL HIRT: "HORN A-PLENTY" (RCA Victor). Working with an arrangement laid out by Billy May (who also conducts the orch), Al Hirt provides another solid trumpeting session. His tootling continues to have the drive that brought his previous packages to the top and this one won't have any trouble continuing the sales spree. The repertoire, too, will pleace many. Strong samples are "That Old Feeling," "Baby Won't You Please Come Home," "Love Makes The World Go 'Round" and "Do Nothin' Till You Hear From Me."

CAROL CHANNING: "GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDES" (Caedmon). Anita Loos' jazz age classic, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," is virtually Carol Channing's private property and now the spinners can share the joy. She is the definitive Lorelei and her readings from Miss Loos' work is a comedy gem that will develop into a surefire bread-and-butter item for the label. The work has been slickly adapted and directed by Howard Sackler who has jazzed up the spoken word with rhythmic melodies of the era happily delineated by Charlie Katz and his Stonegrove Serenaders.

BERT KAEMPFERT ORCH: "WITH A SOUND IN MY HEART" (Decca). This Deutsche Grammophon/Polydor import will find easy acceptibility on the U.S. turntables. Bert Kaempfert has already paved the way with several clicko singles and the lush orch sound with a rich trumpet lead is familiar to most disk fans. Package contains lotsa nifties among which are "Yellow Bird," "O Mein Papa" and "Secret Love." They're all pleasing.

DAKOTA STATON: "DAKOTA AT STORYVILLE" (Capitol). More of Dakota Staton's dynamic song stylings have been wrapped up in this package. Thrush has a vivid way with a song but she really seems to pull out all stops when an audience is pushing her on. She gets that special push from the Storyville (Boston) crowd where this package was put into the groove and numbers like "Music Maestro, Please," "Don't Get Around Much Anymore," "Is You Is Or Is You Ain't My Baby" and "Mean and Evil Blues" sound better for it.

CAB CALLOWAY: "BLUES MAKE ME HAPPY" (Coral). Cab Calloway has shelved his "hi de ho" technique for this excursion into the blues field. It's not familiar Calloway but it's good and could win him a completely new following. He approaches the blues repertoire in varied moods but each fits the particular song perfectly and gives it an interesting new dimension. The swinging "Learnin' The Blues" and the spirited "The Birth Of The Blues" show how Calloway gets the most out of different attacks.

"THEY'RE STILL LAUGHING" (Capitol). The comedic routines included here were culled from vaudeville, radio and burlesque and serve as a solid dish of show biz nostalgia. With George Jessel as narrator (he also does his "Phone Call To Mama" routine), the heyday of the "un-sick" comic is recalled with punch. Frank Fontaine does his "The Sweepstakes Winner," Jack Pearl recreates his Baron Munchausen, Lou Holtz his "Maharajah," Joey Faye & Jack Albertson slam through "Floogle Street" and Sid Marion & Julius Tannen essay the Weber & Fields' classic "A Glass of Beer." It adds up to a lot of fun and should please even those who weren't around in the "good old days."

TIMI YURO: "SOUL" (Liberty). Timi Yuro's potent vocal style is once again in evidence and those who've helped her crash through the pop market have another enjoyable offering. The concentration is on her ballad styling and Belford Hendricks' quiet arrangements give her the importance she deserves. Her "Stardust" is a standout but such others as "If I Didn't Care," "A Lovely Way To Spend An Evening" and "Then I'll Be Tired Of You" are not to be overlooked.

DELLA REESE: "THE CLASSIC DELLA" (RCA Victor). Pop tunes that have been developed from classical themes is the peg for this album. She's done this before in a single try, "Don't You Know" and succeeded so this is more of the same and quite good. The orch interpretations by Glenn Osser are full-bodied and Miss Reese gets plenty of mileage out of "Moon Love," "My Reverie," "If You Are But a Dream" and the like.

THE VIENNA PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA: "TREASURES OF VIENNA" (Angel). The music of the Blue Danube flows in full force here. It's schmaltzy but it's always engaging offering a gemutlich beat that's easy to listen to. Rudolf Kempe conducts the Vienna Philharmonic through Johann Strauss' enchanting "Tales From The Vienna Woods," "Emperor Waltz" and "Thousand And One Nights" with a style that only natives could deliver.

BURL IVES: "SONGS OF THE WEST" (Decca). Balladeer Burl Ives goes west in this roundup and even though the repertoire is built along familiar lines it remains a folk album of quality. Ives' style is simple and direct and he makes such standards as "Home On The Range," "The Last Roundup," "Cool Water" and "Empty Saddles" good to hear again.

ROD McKUEN: "IN SEARCH OF EROS" (Epic). This is a moody piece of poetic material centered on, as the subtitle says, "Loneliness and Love in the Age of Eroticism." Rod McKuen is writer-reader and he delivers with a quiet sensitivity that could win over some romanticists.

SAM BUTERA & THE WITNESSES, LOUIS PRIMA: "THE CONTINENTAL TWIST" (Capitol). It's now time for the soundtrack waxings from all those Twist pix to hit the market and this is one of them. With numbers from the pic "The Continental Twist," this platter features the instrumental and sometimes the vocal stylings of the Cost rock 'n' roll group, Sam Butera & the Witnesses and also features Louis Prima. Complete with the big Twist beat, vocals from Prima and Butera and general excitement from the group, the package is a good bet for the twistin' set. There are some strictly r 'n' r tunes included as well as some Twisted versions of tunes like "Kansas City," "Perdido" and "The Continental."

DICK RUEDEBUSCH: "MEET MR. TRUMPET" (Jubilee). Trumpeter Dick Ruedebusch and his five sidekicks offer some crisp jazz dynamics somewhere between dixieland and swing on this multi-tempo set. Their tunes range from the driving "Limehouse Blues" and often-humorous "Tiger Rag" to slow blues treatment of "Gambler's Blues." Ruedebusch displays ample flexibility on his horn pushing strongly on the uptempo numbers and turning on the mellower tones for the slower tunes. Also on this set there is a sampling of the blues vocal work of Chuck Hedges, the band's clarinetist who acquits himself well in both categories. It's a pleasant sounding package which can please several elements of jazz taste through the group's tightly augmented patterns.

PERRI LEE TRIO: "A Night at Count Basie's" (Roulette). The rollicking organ work of Perri Lee, along with the percussive and driving tenor stylings of Eddie Chamblee and the solid beat provided by John Kriegh on drums gives this package a swinging (and even twistable on occasion) sound. There are rapid-fire jazz stylings mixed with bouncy blues stuff and an occasional ballad with a beat here, and all add up to a solidly palatable item for jazz buffs and generally those who like their music served up with a beat. The session was recorded at Count Basie's New York jazz spot and provides a nice showcasing for this catchy trio. Gros.

LAWRENCE WELK
Presents His Newest Hit Album for Dot Records—"MOON RIVER"

Y. . . . Kapp Records introed 20 new LP releases and several new singles at distributor conclaves last week. The diskery is giving a 10% discount on new and catalog material, with dated billing . . . the label has also set a deal with Harry Belafonte Enterprises for an LP by Miriam Makeba, South African singer, entitled "The Many Voices of Miriam Makeba."

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

THE MARCELS . . . MY MELANCHOLY BABY
(Colpix) . . . . . Really Need Your Love
The Marcels' "My Melancholy Baby" (Shapiro, Bernstein-Vogel) puts the bomp into another standard for results that should be similar to this combo's "Blue Room" workover. "Really Need Your Love" (Columnt) is a good ballad in the contemporary groove.*

SAM COOKE . . . . . ONE MORE TIME
(RCA VICTOR) . . . . . Twistin' The Night Away
Sam Cooke's "One More Time" (Kagat) is a solid ballad with the kind of melodic lilt which could push it all the way. "Twistin' The Night Away" (Kagat) is a fair entry in the current twist cycle.

DAVID CARROLL . . . . THE WHITE ROSE OF ATHENS
(Mercury) . . . . . Slaughter On Tenth Avenue
David Carroll Orch's "The White Rose of Athens" (Peter Schaeffert) is a colorful instrumental by the "Never On Sunday" composer who could repeat with his Greek-styled motifs. "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" (Chappell) is a slick conception of the theme from this extended work.*

PAUL ANKA . . . . . THE FOOLS HALL OF FAME
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . Far From The Lights of Town
Paul Anka's "The Fools Hall of Fame" (Spankat) is another potent juve-angled ballad created and projected to the hilt by this performer. "Far From The Lights of Town" (Spankat) is a more routine entry.

ADAM WADE . . GOOD TO HAVE YOU BACK WITH ME
(Coed) . . . . . How Are Things In Lovers Lane
Adam Wade's "It's Good To Have You Back With Me" (Paxton) gives this fine singer the kind of simple ballad which he delivers with commercial impact. "How Are Things In Lovers Lane" (Winnetont) is another pleasing ballad slice.*

JIMMY DEAN . . . . . THE CAJUN QUEEN
(Columbia) . . . . . To A Sleeping Beauty
Jimmy Dean's "The Cajun Queen" (Cedarwood†) continues the saga of "Big Bad John" and should continue in the same click groove. "To A Sleeping Beauty" (Songsmiths-Remick) is a sentimental recitation effectively delivered.*

PAT BOONE . . . . . PICTURES IN THE FIRE
(Dot) . . . . . I'll See You In My Dreams
Pat Boone's "Pictures In The Fire" (Spoone) is an excellent ballad with a juve-angled lyric which this singer handles in fine style. "I'll See You In My Dreams" (Feist*) is a simple and neat version of the great oldie.*

ANDY GRIFFITH . . . . A GOOD MAN IS HARD TO FIND
(Capitol) . . . . . Flop Eared Mule
Andy Griffith's "A Good Man Is Hard To Find" (Mayfair) gives this performer the kind of monolog which he whips into a religioso fervor. "Flop Eared Mule" (Andickt) is a bright country hoedown.*

JOHNNIE RAY . . . . . A LOVER'S QUESTION
(Liberty) . . Nothing Goes Up Without Coming Down
Johnnie Ray's "A Lover's Question" (Edent) gives this singer the strongest ballad he's had in some time and he belts it in a way that the teenagers will go for. "Nothing Goes Up Without Coming Down" (Edent) is an okay torch entry.

PATSY CLINE . . . . . SHE'S GOT YOU
(Decca) . . . . . Strange
Patsy Cline's "She's Got You" (Pampert) is a strong tear-jerking juve-angled ballad delivered in highly appealing style by this countrified songstress. "Strange" (Cedarwood†) is another okay side with a similar mood.

TONY MIDDLETON MEMORIES ARE MADE OF THIS
(United Artists) . . . . . Drifting
Tony Middleton's "Memories Are Made of This" (Montclare) brings back this hit of a few years ago in a fresh, swinging arrangement featuring a fine rocking vocalist. "Drifting" (Triot) is a good ballad also delivered with some arresting angles.*

SOLOMON BURKE . . . . . I ALMOST LOST MY MIND
(Atlantic) . . . . . Cry To Me
Solomon Burke's "I Almost Lost My Mind" (St. Louist) is a slow-tempoed ballad with exceptional savvy by this fine blues singer. "Cry To Me" (Mellin-Progressivet) is another strong blues side due for plenty of spins.

JOE DOWELL . . . . . THE SOUND OF SADNESS
(Smash) . . . . . The Thorn On The Rose
Joe Dowell's "The Sound of Sadness" (Painted Desertt) is an interesting rocking ballad set in a fine vocal and instrumental arrangement for commercial impact. "The Thorn On The Rose" (Aldont) is another strong ballad conception to hold attention.

RONNIE GALLANT . . . . . IN THE NIGHT
(Warner Bros.) . . . . . The Hole In The Wall
Ronnie Gallant's "In The Night" (Selbonnt) is a fine torch rocker delivered in a very stylish groove by this singer. "The Hole In The Wall" (Selbonnt) is a frantic rhythm number in a familiar technique.

EUGENE CHURCH . . . . . THAT'S ALL I WANT
(King) . . . . . Geneva
Eugene Church's "That's All I Want" (Recordot) is a swinging rhythm number with a cute lyric belted neatly in the blues idiom. "Geneva" (O-Cal†) is a more routine shuffle entry. Herm.

BILL GIANT . . . . TOMORROW'S CLOWN
(MGM) . . . . . Poof!!
Bill Giant's "Tomorrow's Clown" (Leeds) is dressed along big ballad lines with a strong vocal personality to build teener response. "Poof!!" (Aberbacht) is just a fair entry that will have difficulty moving around the spinning circles.*

Philips Disk Line Bows in U.S. Via Mercury Records Sales Web

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Chi headquarters of Mercury Records last week announced entry into the U.S. of the Philips Records line of disks. Mercury veepee Irwin Steinberg said that the line will be introduced through Mercury channels, but the Philips label would eventually have its own promo, sales and distributional setup.

Philips Records are produced by Philips Phonographische Industries of The Netherlands, the huge European industrial complex which purchased Mercury through Consolidated Electronics Industries Corp. last August.

Lou Simon, formerly with Supreme Distributing Co., Cincinnati, has been tapped as sales manager for Philips' debut in this country. The first group of albums under the new label will be released Feb. 1. Current plans call for 96 longplay albums and 100 seven inch 45 rpm pop singles in the first year's releases.

Headquartered in the Chi offices of Mercury, Philips U.S.A. will record principally in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Nashville. Philips U.S.A. will also record throughout the world, using its American recording staff to wax talent under contract to Philips Phonographische. The Philips label will be in the same price range as Mercury.

It's possible that the distributorships set up for Philips records may be utilized to introduce the European-made line of Philips phonographs into the U.S. at some later date.

Swedes, West Germans Clash Over Tune Similar To Nazis' 'Horst Wessel'

A minor international debate has developed over the release in West Germany of a Swedish disk called "Alpens ros." When marketed there in December a scandal developed among W. Germans who claimed that the tune was based on one of the most notorious tunes of the Nazi era, "Horst Wessel Song." Swedes have retorted that "Alpens ros" not only is about 100 years old but is also one of the most popular and frequently recorded Swedish folk tunes.

One thing is clear—the song as released in W. Germany is a rock 'n' roll number and about 10,000 copies have been put into circulation there. It is also being distributed around Europe. The question seems to be just what it is a rock 'n' roll version of. In W. Germany the controversy is stirred by the feeling that it is too reminiscent of "Horst Wessel Song" no matter what it is.

In retort, the Swedes are claiming that it is the Germans' bad conscience that is causing the uproar. W. Germans say that the Swedes should have realized the similarity between "Alpens ros" and "Horst Wessel" before the disk was released. To this, Swedes have countered that many of their countrymen would not recognize "Horst Wessel" while the younger generation would not know it at all.

At any rate, the song is on the W. German jukes and is also being aired on its radio stations. In Sweden it has become one of the country's best sellers ad it's going well in W. Germany too.

Gale Packaging Gershwin Show for 4-Wk. Tour

The first package show organized by Gale Attractions will be "A Night With George Gershwin." Starring in the unit will be Rhonda Fleming, Earl Wrightson, The Ray Charles Singers and Skitch Henderson conducting a small symphony orchestra.

The show, which will commemorate the 25th anniversary of Gershwin's death, will begin a four-week tour March 9 and will cover the U.S. and Canada. Among cities already lined up are Boston, Montreal, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Hershey, Pa., and Washington.

WB Sets Distrib Deals In Greek, Spanish Mkts.

Warner Bros. Records has set deals in Greece and Spain for marketing its product there. RCA Espanola of Madrid will handle the line in Spain and Greek Phonograph Record House of Athens will do the same in Greece. The deals were handled by WB international director Robert B. Weiss with the Spanish diskery's managing director, Bernard T. Ness, and the Greek outfit's Georgios Orphanidis.

Disks will be released under the Warner Bros. imprint and will include singles, EPs and LPs by the WB roster as well as soundtrack waxings from "Parrish" and "Fanny." Radio, press and point of purchase campaigns to spotlight the line are being worked out for the new areas.

Roulette Dec. Biz Topped $700,000

Roulette Records, which began mildly in 1961, finished the year in good shape grossing upwards of $700,000 during December, according to Morris Levy, the diskery's topper. The company's strong year-end activity was the result of 1961's music biz bonanza, The Twist.

Roulette was among the first labels to realize the dance's potential by tieing up the name of the Peppermint Lounge (where The Twist rose to fame) and signing Joey Dee & the Starliters who preformed at the club. Dee's combo also made a film, the soundtrack of which was released on Roulette.

Dee's single, "The Peppermint Twist," and his album, "Doin' the Twist at the Peppermint Lounge," scored successful year-end sales for the label. The soundtrack from Par's "Hey, Let's Twist" also began to register as 1961 ended, backed by Par's tiein promotionally.

The diskery saw some action, according to its sales chief Bud

TRAD JAZZDISKS HIT BRITISH BESTSELLRS

London, Jan. 16.

Swing to Traditional (Dixieland) jazz here is so pronounced that jazzdisks now feature as bestsellers. First two silver disks (for more than 250,000 copies sold) have been won by Trad musicians Acker Bilk and Kenny Ball.

Bilk has now topped 300,000 copies for his version of "Stranger On The Shore" and Ball has exceeded the 250,000 mark with the Russian tune "Midnight in Moscow."

U.S. Cleffers May Get Fees From British Disk Plays

London, Jan. 16.

Current agitations by the Songwriters' Guild of Great Britain could result in U.S. cleffers getting fees for such of their songs that are performed in public via disks —i.e. broadcasts, jukeboxes, record hops, etc.

SWG maintains that Phonographic Performance Ltd., an organization set up by British diskeries to collect aforementioned fees for public performance of disks, should grant a slice of the money to songwriters.

At the moment, PPL deals out cash to artists, musicians and publishers but leaves out the writer. According to the SWG, this situation is ludicrous and discriminative but as the PPL money is shelled out on ex gratia basis it is difficult to bring anything other than moral pressure to bear.

Victor Knight, secretary of SWG, says U.S. songwriters stand to gain more out of a change of heart within the PPL set up than do their British counterparts, as the majority of pop songs recorded in the U.K. are of Yank origination.

Says Knight: "It's high time that a share of (PPL) revenue was paid direct to writers instead of leaving it up to publishers to split their cut. You hear a lot of publishers say they share the money with writers, but you seldom meet writers who have received any."

British Sheet Music Sales Rise 13% In '61 as Rock 'n' Roll Exits Scene

London, Jan. 16.

Now that rock 'n' roll has left the British music scene, there is a marked rise in the sale of sheet music, says Frank Walsh, owner of the biggest sheet music store in London. Allowing for the Yuletide rise, he states that business has jumped by 25% this month following a progressive increase over the last 10 months.

Eyeing the number of ballads and instrumentals currently featured in pop music charts, the publisher sees the tide turning for sheet sales. He states that a big hit today will top the 100,000 mark, whereas a year ago an equivalent click would have sold less than half that figure.

Part of Walsh's optimism is shared by other pubberies, Lawrence Wright, for instance, has experienced a slight resurgence in sales. Traditional (dixieland) jazz versions of "Pasadena," "That's My Home" and the updated treatment of "Jealousy" have stirred some dust on Wright's shelves and sales manager Sid Richardson records a 20% increase in this aspect of the biz.

At Keith Prowse Music, among the biggest publishers here, the view is held that a big hit will sell better than a couple of years ago but lesser songs have little or no appeal to sheet buyers. With the demise of the market for printed songs, says KPM exec Bill Phillips, the seasonal fluctuations have vanished. Now, a hit will sell at any time of year—even summer. Business has been building, he says, but compared with yesteryear figures, it is still slow.

Kassner clicks, says manager Max Diamond, have been topping the 50,000 mark but he opines that market may not be as perky as other pubberies think (or say). Playable songs which make it on disks are often good for sheet sales, too, he says. At the moment, there happens to be a flock of such tunes on the plug list.

Execs at Chappell's estimate that over this year the trade generally experienced a 13% rise in sheet sales. Whereas a couple of years ago, says Chappell's Eddie Rogers, a number would get into the top 20 listings if it sold 400 copies a day, today it has to be in the four-figure bracket at least.

According to Rogers, big hits these days are bought at the rate of 5-7,000 per day and it is believed that Chappell's top song at the moment, "Moon River," is well above 25,000.

Dana Sues Roulette Over Album Release

Los Angeles, Jan. 16.

Bill Dana filed suit in L. A. Superior Court last week against Roulette Records, asking $100,000 damages for release of two comedy albums which he charged were illegally distributed. He also asks an accounting and an injunction to halt further sale of the records.

Albums involved are "My Name is Jose Jimenez" and another in which he is partnered with Pat Harrington. Both were cut from master tapes of the Steve Allen show and originally released under the Hanover-Signature label, with the "My Name" album selling more than 1,000,000, according to Dana's attorney, David Licht.

Suit was filed originally against Hanover-Signature in New York a year ago asking $59,000 damages, but this company has since gone bankrupt with masters of the two albums turned over to Roulette.

Also named in the suit are two Roulette distributors, Diamond in Los Angeles and Eric in San Francisco.

Col Shuffles Top Dept. Personnel

Columbia Records launched its 1962 campaign with a personnel reshuffle. Major move was the upping of David Kapralik to the post of eastern director of pop artsist & repertoire.

Since April of last year, Kapralik has been coordinator of pop a&r. Now, he'll be responsible to Col president Goddard Lieberson for supervision of the activities of producers and other persons assigned to the pop a&r departments of both Columbia and Epic Records.

On the business affairs level, Walter Dean has been appointed veepee in that department. He'll work with the a&r departments in negotiations for the acquisition of

Folk Fest at B'klyn Dept. Store Pulls 2,500 Patrons; Promoters Call It a Click

Over 2,500 customers turned out at the Abraham & Straus (Brooklyn) Department store folk festival Saturday (13). Sponsored by the A&S Junior Fashion Board, the all-day fest was set up on a co-op deal with Elektra Records, several guitar companies and A&S to jointly promote their product.

Six out of the seven scheduled Elektra artists showed up for the show, including Oscar Brand, Ed McCurdy (who also emceed), Gucla Gill and the Oranim Zabar, Will Holt, Gene & Francesca and Jean Ritchie. Absent was Bob Gibson. The outing included guitar seminars, autographing and performing by the folkniks. Records and guitars were on hale at a special counter set up for the event which was staged near A&S's disk and music section.

Guitar companies represented in the setup included Goya, Harmony, Gretch, Kaymaker and others. There was no admission charged and the event was publicized in co-op and instutional ads by the store and participants, with all concerned figured as having benefited from the outing. The fest was packaged by Troubadour Productions.

SAM HALL JOINS S-B

Sam Hall has taken over as educational and sales representative for Shapiro, Bernstein and its affiliated catalogs, Skidmore and Columbia Pictures Music.

Hall was previously sales manager and educational director for Galaxy Music.

Disk Dealers Failed to Pay Their Fee In Antitrust Suit, Chi Attorneys Insist

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Chi attorneys for the Society of Record Dealers are heatedly denying a statement by SORD treasurer Lou Shapiro that they withdrew from the record dealers' antitrust suit against four major record clubs for any reason other than that they were owed money by the Society. The law firm, Marks, Marks & Kaplan, received permission to withdraw from the case last Wednesday (10).

The present suit was initiated in 1959. It alleges a conspiracy to violate the Robinson-Patman Act and Sherman antitrust laws on the part of Columbia, RCA Victor and Capitol record clubs.

Shapiro was quoted in New York as saying that it was hard for him to believe that money was the factor in the withdrawal, since the Society had continued to pay the firm of Marks, Marks & Kaplan. He also said that the lawyers had not cleared the last $500 check that he had sent them in October of last year.

Robert Marks, a partner in the law firm, said here that he had warned SORD several months ago that he would have to withdraw his firm from the case if the Society did not catch up with some of the back money owed. Marks refused to say how much is owed, but it has been estimated by other parties at $22,000. Marks also said that he had cleared every check that his firm had received.

Marks also contradicted Shapiro's statement that the case would be over in a year and that SORD had a 75% chance of winning the case. "Its a class suit against companies with substantial financial resources," Marks said, "and I can't imagine anyone predicting that such litigation would take only a year.

"The 75% figure is just not the way we operate. We thought then, and we think now, that the case can be won. We just can't continue to support them financially any further than we have."

Marks said that he harbored no ill feeling toward SORD, but felt that Shapiro's remarks were "gratuitous" and left room for unfair implications. He refused to comment on whether Marks, Marks & Kaplan would sue the Society for the money owed.

ABC-PAR LABEL UPS GARR TO COAST V.P.

Irwin Garr has been named vice president in charge of Coast operations for ABC-Paramount Records. He will headquarter in Hollywood at the American Broadcasting Co. offices there and will report to Larry Newton, the diskery's veep in charge of sales.

Garr has been with the company for over four years, first joining it to head its publishing outfits, Ampco Music (ASCAP) and Pamco Music (BMI). In addition to his duties with the pubs, he also was national director of promotion and was subsequently named v.p. of the pubs.

Jimmy Dean Light $2,607 In 2 Regina, Can., Shows

Regina, Sask., Jan. 16.

Two performances of the Jimmy Dean show in Exhibition Auditorium last week grossed a disappointing $2,607. Tickets were scaled to $2.50. Attendance total was only 1,175 in the 1,860-seat house.

With Dean were Patsy Cline, Joe Dowell, George Hamilton IV, Bobby Edwards and the Billy Grammer band. Marlin Payne, of Billings, Mont., handled the Canadian tour, with Charlie Underhill as local promoter. Newspaper and radio advance was strong.

Decca Shifts Verzola

Lou Verzola, a 10-year vet with Decca Distributing Corp., has been named Los Angeles branch manager. The L.A. branch serves lower California, New Mexico, Nevada and Arizona.

Verzola joined Decca as a salesman in Buffalo, and moved from there to posts in Washington and Albany. For the past four years he has been branch manager in Philadelphia.

Hosiery Co. Sues Paar, Ramrod Prod. For 22G

Bankhead Homestead Hosiery Corp. filed suit in N. Y. Federal Court last week against Ramrod Productions and Jack Paar for $22,000 for alleged breach of contract.

The suit charges that on Feb. 1, 1961, Bankhead and Ramrod signed an agreement stating that a commission would be paid the plaintiff if Bankhead obtained or would purchase from Ramrod a disk featuring a well-known entertainment personality. The complaint further states that, prior to Feb. 1, 1961, plaintiff obtained the Jiffy Sew Co. (a manufacturer of a liquid mending product), which agreed to purchase from Ramrod a disk featuring Paar.

Under the agreement, it is alleged, the defendants agreed to pay Bankhead 10% of the initial deposit plus 10% of the recording, with payments not to exceed $100,000. The suit claims that Jiffy paid defendants $100,000 deposit and an additional $120,000 for the purchase of the waxing. It is alleged that Ramrod has refused to pay the commission as stipulated in the earlier agreement, although the money was duly demanded.

The Chairlady And the Agenda

By HARRY GOLDEN

Charlotte, N.C., Jan. 16.

I do not make a speech in the Los Angeles area (Bonds for Israel, synagogues, temples, social-action forums) without my friend Wolfie Gilbert, the songwriter ("Waitin' For the Robert E. Lee," "Ramona," and a few hundred others).

When the chairlady calls the hotel to see if I have arrived, I always say: "I'd like to bring a guest, Wolfie Gilbert, the songwriter." Generously the chairlady accedes, and to please me they move chairs around to put my guest right up there on the dais.

During the portion of the program when the chairlady is thanking different people for the floral designs, the placecards, and such, I hand a note up to her, "Please introduce my friend Wolfie Gilbert, the songwriter." This is perhaps cruel because the slightest intrusion on the typewritten agenda in front of her could throw the whole thing out of gear, but she frantically accedes: "And I want to introduce to you a friend of our guest speaker, Mr. Wolfie Gilbert, the songwriter."

Wolfie rises, but instead of bowing he walks directly toward the microphone with arm outstretched ready to grab it. The chairlady looks at her agenda and retreats in panic. She does not know that for the first 40 years of his life Wolfie was a song-and-dance man in vaudeville.

Once he lays hands on that mike, Wolfie says, "This is my 75th anniversary." Wolfie doesn't hide his age, and every January he sends out a folder listing all his song hits. The pamphlet, good for the whole year, also carries annual birthday greetings from Eddie Cantor, George Jessel, George Burns, Milton Berle, a host of ASCAP officials, and in recent years I have been included.

During the most recent appearance on my program Wolfie continued: "Yes, this is my 75th anniversary and next week is Mother's Day. I helped make mothers famous with my song, 'My Mother's Eyes'," and here Wolfie begins to hum the song. In the meantime the chairlady, in tears, has retreated to the wall holding her agenda, but the audience loves it. I have really given them a bonus and as Wolfie begins to recite, "Waitin' for the Robert E. Lee," with that right index finger of his waving on high ("Sorry I do not have an accompaniment"), he goes into a little soft-shoe tap, and I s.. there thinking that at least Wolfie Gilbert is not what's wrong with this world.

MGM Execs' O'seas O.O.

Arnold Maxin, president of MGM Records, and Gene Moretti, label's foreign sales manager, left Sunday (14) for an overseas trek to visit the MGM/Verve affiliates and distributors.

Maxin's 10-day tour will cover London, Paris and Tamburg while Moretti will go on an extended trip that will cover the key countries in MGM's overseas network.

Merc Gets 1st Off-B'way Caster Of the Season

The first off-Broadway original cast album of the season will be released by Mercury Records by the end of February. It is the LP of the score from "All in Love," currently at the Martinique Theatre. The tuner has book and lyrics by Bruce Geller and music by Jacques Urbont.

Produced by George Peters and Herbert Steiman, the score is published by E. B. Marks Music. According to Hal Mooney at Mercury, the platter will feature the original cast backed by fuller orchestral accompaniment than that at the Martinique where twin pianos are the only backing. It will be a one-disk, double-jacket set and begins recording next Monday (22).

There are seven pieces from the show now available in sheet music form, with the copies being sold at the theatre as well as in stores. According to Mooney, singles from the score are also being planned by Mercury.

The show itself may be doing some travelling. Under negotiation is an edition to be produced in Copenhagen which would later tour Europe. Peters and Steiman are also talking with Par's Telemeter about a Canadian showing of "All in Love" via the pay-tv route.

Some of the show's tunes have had some tv and club exposure and David Atkinson, the tuner's star, will be making an appearance on PM East next week during which he'll do some of the songs. Other cast members include Gaylea Byrne, Lee Cass, Mimi Randolph and Christina Gillespie.

Combo Review

3 MISTERS & A MISS
Hotel President, K.C.

After an absence of more than four years, dinner dancing has returned to the Hotel President's deluxe Drum Room for the fall and winter season. Providing rhythms for terping are Hal Cowan and a new group, the Three Misters and a Miss Cowan has been in the Drum Room as organist for about six years, and now heads this unit at the keyboard.

He has surrounded himself with Vic Colin at the accordion, Dick Hersh on drums to round out the instrumentalists and with Millie Fling on vocals. Colin is a vet musician who headed his own unit for several years, and at one time played this very room. Hersh adds a good baritone vocal to his drummings. Withal, the unit offers about anything the dancer wants from pops and standards to Latins and novelties. Able keyboard work of Cowan and Colin's accordion gives a plentiful fullness to the music and yet holds it in the mellow mold.

Miss Fling is known hereabouts from work in summer theatres, the fall Lyric opera and other musical fronts and brings a fine soprano to the stand. She vocals show tunes and established favorites to the customers' delight, and adds lotsa feminine charm to the proceedings.

Always good on cuisine, the Drum Room now is picking up some later evening trade and continues to adhere to the no-cover, no-minimum policy. Music begins at 8 with dancing and vocals from 9 till midnight. Quin.

Inside Stuff—Music

The American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers is now pushing jazz. The Society has issued a special 100-page booklet, containing a listing of jazz recordings in the ASCAP catalog, together with the names of the performing artists, composers and publishers, and the record number.

In the preface of the book, Stanley Adams, ASCAP president, states: "Jazz is one form of music which is uniquely American and which has become identified throughout the world with our nation. The vitality of American jazz rhythms has created a vast and enthusiastic international audience. It is one American export which hurdles all economic and political barriers." The booklet is being distributed to radio-tv program directors as well as ad agencies.

Five British diskeries have agreed to cooperate with BBC-TV in presenting 12 new and unpublished native compositions for the "Song For Europe" competition from which the winner becomes an entry in the Eurovision Song Contest held in Luxembourg March 18. Disk companies will release "Song For Europe" entries on Feb. 12, day after the contest.

A new "freedom jingle," entitled "What Have You Done For Freedom Today," written especially for radio and tv by Len McKenzie of Tony Faillace Productions, and sung by Frankie Laine, will be offered to stations across the nation as part of the 1962 Freedoms Roll-Call program scheduled for Feb. 15-28. In addtion to the jingle, a "Celebrity Platter" LP will be made available to radio stations with messages by James Stewart, Admiral Radford, Fred Astaire, Duke Ellington, Toni Fisher, Pete Fountain and The Kingston Trio, among others.

After winning plaudits throughout South Africa for his "Dances Of India," and impressive performance in Tagore's play "The King Of The Dark Chamber," classical dancer Bhaskar recently cut two tunes for the rock fans in a Johannesburg studio just before leaving the Republic. Due for release on the Gallotone label, the tunes are oriental-flavored "The Last Maharajah" and "The Jungle Queen," both Bhaskar compositions, the latter having lyrics by New Yorker Evans Burke. Singer is backed by a vocal chorus of Indians and Africans, and an orthodox Western rhythm group.

Disks' Premium Boom

directly with a product at a special all-inclusive price. Artists like Steve Lawrence & Eydie Gorme, Connie Francis and Jack Paar have been involved in such promotions.

A similiar all-inclusive special price deal was worked with a special sports documentary disk of "Great Moments in Sports" and bonus or cutrate disks have been offered as inducement for the purchase of records themselves, not to mention the whole record club and rack sales operations.

As a result of the increasing interest in disks as a premium item, several companies have developed thriving premium divisions within their overall operation for the purpose of placing, producing and working out deals for disks as premium and promotional items. This has become a big business for some companies, involving personnel and capital.

An interesting outgrowth of this development is that some of these deals are worked out on a reciprocal basis whereby products to be used as premiums are exchanged. So that, on the one hand, a disk may be the premium item for the promotion of a product and the diskery, in turn, may then use a product made by that company to promote something in its line like phonographs. Thus there is the element of co-op advertising whereby both product and diskery benefit.

Form Special Diskeries

Special record companies have been set up for the sole purpose of arranging and producing premium deals with manufacturers. In almost all cases the tieins with disks such as the Lucky Strike and the razor (Gillette) deals work very nicely. For the diskery that has specially produced a platter for the promotion, it often results in a million-seller and in almost all cases the product using the disk as a premium benefits greatly from the tie-in over the counter.

It is felt by some record men that not enough disk premium work is being undertaken. Since the disks are generally an effective premium item because they are almost always specially produced for the promotion and are unavailable through any other source than the product with which they are offered, plus the fact that more and more record playing equipment is being sold all the time, it is felt that the use of platters as premium material will increase.

With several diskeries currently operating premium departments and with special record companies forming to cater to the record premium market, it is figured that manufacturers and advertising agencies will be using disks more regularly in their customer incentive programs.

An increase in the use of disks for this purpose was shown over the past year and, owing to the success of most of these promotions, the growth will probably continue. Almost every big manufacturer is involved in the premium area in today's business market where competition has become so keen and advertising has undergone such a strong development. The use of disks is expected to play a more important part in this scene.

Csida

eastern operations, Csida will continue as the company's senior executive in the east, and will continue to direct Cap's activities in the Broadway show field, coordinating his efforts with Livingston, to whom Csida now reports. Most recently, Csida tied up the original cast album rights to Richard Rodgers' "No Strings," which is scheduled to open on Broadway March 1.

Csida will now be spending considerably more time in Nashville and Hollywood than he has in the past and, according to Livingston, "one of his prime responsibilities will be the uncovering and development of promising new recording artists. The search for new talent will be emphasized in all aspects of his expended responsibilities."

Other Duties

According to Livingston, Csida will continue to bear exec responsibility for publicity and public relations, headed by Brown Meggs, Cap's Hollywood-based director of p.r., and will provide advice and counsel to Jack Levy, general manager of Cap's music publishing subsidiaries, Ardmore Music and Beechwood Music.

Csida joined Cap in March, 1960, as senior exec for all of the company's eastern operations. In February of the following year he was elected to the company's board of directors.

In the other areas, the firm's classical activities have been assigned to Lloyd W. Dunn, who will, in addition, continue as the firm's veepee for marketing. Pop album production will be directed by Livingston himself. Under the new setup, each of the three veeps will direct all activities within his respective product line, including a&r, merchandising and promotion.

Summing up the realigment, Livingston said, "In today's market, we find ourselves operating in three different and distinct business—singles, pop album and classics. Our new organization faces up to this fact of life by permitting a specialization not possible before, and by giving a key executive in each of these areas the opportunity and the authority to follow through from start to finish—from concept to consumer."

German Operas Teeming With American Singers

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin, Jan. 16.

"In Germany, it's opera around the clock!" The man who said this was the late Mario Lanza. He referred to the fact that even medium-sized towns have an opera house. It impressed him that Germans are so "terribly opera-conscious." Not even the Italians compare.

In all, there are nearly 70 regular full season opera houses in this country. Add a number of houses which operate on a "sometimes - stageplay-sometimes-opera" basis. Not to forget also various mobile opera groups.

But the situation has its drawbacks too. "Basically, it's an unhealthy situation," thinks Horst Goerges, chief dramaturgist of Deutsche Oper Berlin, the new ultra-modern opera house in the divided city. "One hardly can expect something big or special of a small-town opera house. The performances there are often rather amateurish."

Notwithstanding, the situation gives newcomers, and Americans, plenty of opportunity to get a job. One recent estimate is that upward of 700 American singers are working in German opera. This number probably dwindled within the last two years but it's still remarkably big.

Take for instance the Deutsche Oper Berlin, an enterprise of high artistic standard, which has, according to its monthly journal, a total of 57 soloist singers on its roster. Of the 22 female singers, only 10 are Germans while the others come from abroad. Of the 12 foreign singers, no less than eight are U.S. citizens. Of the 35 male singers, 23 are Germans and the greater part of the rest is of American origin too.

"Aida" production at this house, employed five Americans of whom Gloria Davy sang five performances in the title role. Jess Thomas (Radames) and Donald Grobe (the messenger) were seen in the preem performance and follow-up showings. Later, American Eugen Toben took over the part of Radames while his countrywoman, Regina Resnik, played Amneris.

A Mixture

Goerges gave the local production of Giuseppe Verdi's "Aida" an amusing international slant. He called it "an opera composed in Italian style, dealing with Egypt, playing (as it loked like as per the staging) in the Congo, sung by Americans in German language, staged by the cousin (Wieland Wagner) of Verdi's biggest competitor (Richard Wagner)."

Foreign visitors are often surprised to find so many opera houses in Germany. But they keep forgetting that opera is not a "business" in this country. All the houses get, if not owned outright by the State, State subsidis. So the production of an opera is never associated with a commercial risk.

Deutsche Oper Berlin presents nine new stagings each season. The key to the schedule is as follows:

4 classical operas (from Gluck to Richard Strauss)
2 classical outsiders (old operas which have been seldom produced)
2 contemporary operas
1 ballet program

Berlin public still shows an obvious predilection for the classical stuff, which is to say such items as Verdi's "Aida," Puccini's "Butterfly" etc. The dramaturgist of Deutsche Oper admitted that without state funds this house would probably have not dared to produce contemporary opera such as the recent Giselher Klebe "Alkmene."

Germans dislike revealing financial figures and therefore reporters usually omit such questions. In the case of Deutsche Oper Berlin, it's very hard to calculate the costs of a production, the more so as the greater part of the soloists draw a regular monthly salary and not, as at the Met, a single performance fee. Roughly speaking, an average singer gets—if he's used or not—600-800 D-Marks per month.

Established headliners, such as Gloria Davy, often equal 2,000 marks ($500) if not more per performance.

Deutsche Oper Berlin has around 800 people on its payroll. The orchestra alone consists of 120 people, while the choir has nearly 100 persons at its disposal. This house cost 27,900,000 D-Marks (nearly $7,000,000), largely contributed by the Bonn. Acclaimed as one of this country's most beautiful opera houses (excellent acoustics too), it stands on Bismarckstrasse talent and properties as well as continue to handle problems involving financial requirements and other relations with talent unions and to supervise the operations of Columbia's music publishing subsidiaries, April Music and Blackwood Music.

On the distributing end, Donald England has been promoted to director of sales for Columbia Record Distributors. He'll be responsible to Ken Glancy, Columbia Record Distributors veepee, for providing general management and sales direction to the activities of the distribution branches.

In other personnel moves, Robert Teitelman has been promoted to the post of general plant manager. Succeeding Teitelman as plant manager in L.A. will be Martin Paulson. Paulson's spot as manager for order service and production control at Col's Terre Haute plant will be taken over by John Rehorst.

Concert Review

New York Philharmonic
(George Solti, conductor, John Browning, Soloist.)

The latest N.Y. Philharmonic guest conductor of the many who pass in review before subscribers and critics, is the Hungarian-born George Solti who made a very promising debut last season at the Met. He is music director of Covent Garden Opera in London and chief conductor of the Dallas Symphony and the novelty he introduced to his debut-program at the Philharmonic was a most welcome one: the Sinfonietta by Leo Janacek, a Czech composer who has been neglected in this country. (His opera "Jenufa" hasn't been given here since 1924.) Sinfonietta is an effective, masterfully written and scored piece with a folksy quality and it easily was the highlight of the otherwise conservative and not too original program.

In Mozart's piano concerto (B flat, K. 450) John Browning's reading was efficient but somewhat tense and nervous and prevented the feeling of flowing ease a true Mozart style is associated with generally. The Schumann Symphony no. 4 was full of color and emphasized well the lyricism and the ever changing mood of the piece. Goth.

Sahl-Sommers Pay Tiff Over L.A. 1-Niters Ends In Amicable Settlement

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

One of the most protracted pay disputes in years here has been settled to satisfaction of all concerned. In November AFMusicians' Local 47 ruled that, for the one-nighters Mort Sahl was playing at Pasadena and Santa Monica auds, singer Joanie Sommers had to be backed by 21 musicians. On previous road dates only the Lou Pagani Trio backed her. Result: she didn't work.

Later chirp demanded pay of Sahl and Pagani sought his salary from Miss Sommers. In the settlement agreement Sahl hasn't paid Miss Sommers (reportedly her salary for the two dates would have been $1,250) but chirp has paid the Pagani combo its $425. Pagani squawked to Local 47, which insisted Miss Sommers pay. Sahl, however, has given thrush $1,300 to help defray cost of hauling trio and its equipment on six-week tour of gigs which preceded local dates—both of which lost money.

Miss Sommers currently is working in support of Donald O'Connor in show at Sahara, Las Vegas, and getting $2,250 weekly. She's solidly set for niteries April 10-July 1 and her salary in boites in rising. For a stand at Blinstrub's Boston, in May she will get $4,000 weekly.

Roulette's Biz

Katzel, on other outings as the year ended, including waxings by the Barry Sisters, Count Basie, Maynard Ferguson, Sarah Vaughan and a team-up of Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington.

The company is moving into 1962 with the debut of a new label, Laughtime Records, which will have Belle Barth as its first artist. Other Roulette outings will include Ferguson, Basie, Miss Vaughan, Pearl Bailey teamed with Louis Bellson, Kenny Bass, and a package featuring the Rev. Adam Clayton Powell. In the singles department, Roulette a&r directs Henry Glover, is prepping disks by the Cleftones, the Regents, Dinah Washington and Jimmy Anthony.

Richmond & Settle

Mike Settle, folksong writer, singer and instrumentalist, has signed with Howard Richmond to write and record via the latter's Hollis Music publishing and mastering branch. Settle has already completed two tunes for Hollis and plans call for him to record some masters for the firm.

Formerly with the Cumberland 3 folk group, Settle has played some singing and strumming dates in New York recently and has penned the tunes "Sing Allelujah" and "Little Boy," both in the folk groove.

Prado Renews Victor Pact, Torme Inks With Atlantic, Other Deals

Atlantic to Release Disks Of Lu Pine and Campus

Atlantic Records and its subsid Atco have set distribution deals to handle disks by two singles outfits. The deals involve Bob West's Lu Pine label and Steve Schulman's Campus imprint.

Atlantic will handle national distribution of the Falsons' "I Found Love" and 'The Swim" on Lu Pine. Atco will do the same for the Philadelphians' "Coming Home To You" and "Church Bells" on Campus. Both disks will remain on their original labels, with campaigns underway by Atlantic and Atco's promo staffs to move the platters.

be held responsible for the decline of classical sales by "over-releasing" and "duplication."

It's in the areas of "releasing" and "service" that Victor is concentrating its efforts on the new classical push. The company will now cut down on its Red Seal release schedule and has inaugurated a Dealer Special Service program whereby a consumer can order an out-of-stock record from a retailer through a Victor Special Order Service and have the record mailed to the store or his home in less than a week's time.

Victor is backing up this program with a hefty ad-promotion budget. According to Marek, a "special and substantial fund" will be made available to those interested in participating in the program.

For its kickoff release, which will cover the January-February period, Victor is scheduling six piano albums. Artists represented are Artur Rubinstein, Van Cliburn, Sviasoslav Richter, Earl Wild, Serget Rachmaninoff and William Kappell. As an added fillip, each album will be "piggy-backed" with a copy of the recently released LP. "Keyboard Giants of the Past" at no extra charge.

Although the first release is made up of six LPs, Marek emphasizes that this doesn't necessarily indicate that a pattern has been set for future release schedules. "You can't confine yourself to patterns in the entertainment business," he says, "and RCA will keep pace with demands."

Proved in Pop Field

The cutback on releases has already proven its point at Victor in the pop field. The company released 139 pop albums in '61, compared with 150 in 1960, but sold in excess of 1,000,000 more units of new product over the previous year.

"The only pattern on the Red Seal drive," Marek adds, "will be fewer releases and more promotion."

In an allied move to get more exposure for its product, Victor last week closed a deal with a Ginn & Co., a Boston firm specializing in the educational publishing field, to represent the record company as sales agent to schools and colleges. Ginn will also work closely with Victor in the development of appropriate records for education.

Already established in Victor's educational catalog are a "Basic Record Library for Elementary Schools," a 21-album collection annotated and graded for the elementary music program; "Adventures in Music," a series designed to give children in the first six grades an assortment of composers, periods and styles, and the soon-to-be-released "Instruments of the Orchestra," which will present 36 instruments and sections performing concert excerpts in full orchestral context, with a special teaching guide.

Want Blue Sabbath

Glasgow, Jan. 16.

A move is being made in the industrial townships of Motherwell and Wishaw to have all cinemas open on Sundays. Managers of local film houses have had talks with council representatives.

RCA Victor tagged Perez Prado to another longtermer. The Latino bandleader has been with Victor for the past 13 years. He's now being managed by Herman Diaz Jr., son of the International department topper at Victor.

Atlantic: Mel Torme

Mel Torme has signed with Atlantic Records. The composer-singer-musician will begin waxing for the label in February when he returns from a national college tour. Also slated is a taping session when he opens in April at the Bal Tabarin, London.

Capitol: Barbara Dane

Barbara Dane, blues-folk singer, has joined the Capitol stable. Her recording sessions will be supervised by artists & repertoire producer Curly Walter.

Warner Bros.: Mel Henke

Mel Henke, composer and arranger, has signed as an artist with Warner Bros. Records. Negotiations were handled by Mike Maitland, WB prexy, and Charles H. Stern, Henke's representative. No terms or release dates have been disclosed. Of late Henke has been active as a composer and creator of commercials for several sponsors.

Sherator: Chuck Clark

Sherator Records has added singer-guitarist Chuck Clark to its roster. His first release is due this week.

Ala: Timothy Hay

Timothy Hay, who once recorded for RCA Victor as "The Wanderobo," has been signed to Al Anthony's Ala label. His first recording session is scheduled for Jan. 25.

Reeba: Ted Spiryda

The newly formed Reeba Records will begin activity with rock 'n' roll singer Ted Spiryda. Reeba is owned by Joey Vance who records for Mercury Records under the Ali Baba handle.

Can. American's New G.M.

Bernie Lawrence has succeeded Neil Galligan as general manager of Canadian American Records.

For the past year, Lawrence has been in charge of sales and promotion for the label.

Pa. Liquor Board Revokes License Of Philly Cafe in B-Girl Crackdown

Philadelphia, Jan. 16.

The State Liquor Control Board has ordered revocation of the license of the Moulin Rouge, one of the more flagrant of the Locust St. bistros specializing in B-girls and exotic dancers.

The license for the cafe, owned by Fel-Bar Inc., is to be revoked Feb. 1. The board charged that the Moulin Rouge allowed entertainers to associate with patrons, and that the dancers asked board investigators to buy champagne at $17 a bottle.

The club owners denied all the charges and have an appeal against the revocation pending in Quarter Sessions Court. The Moulin Rouge received a previous citation and 120-day suspension, and has figured in several police actions since Fel-Bar obtained the license in March, 1960.

The action was the first to be taken here following the State Liquor Board's passage of a new regulation outlawing the solicitation of drinks in taprooms and cafes.

The regulation carries penalties of $100 to $500 in fines and license suspensions or revocations against violators. Board chairman A. D. Cohn promised stringent enforcement.

"There will be no semblance of a Barbary Coast anywhere in Pennsylvania," Cohn declared. "There are too many decent, law-abiding and self-respecting licensees in the State to tolerate the cadging of drinks by B-girls and similar ilk. The small minority of licensees who may welcome or encourage the practice must and will go."

Previous liquor board rulings have banned the use of barmaids and entertainers to promote sales. The regulation has been a death blow to the "girlie" entertainment parlors along Locust St., the thoroughfare whose activities are believed in large measure responsible for adoption of the new ruling.

Hotel Men Urge Theatre As Part of Mpls. $6-Mil. Auditorium Expansion

Minneapolis, Jan. 16.

If a group of local loop hotel owners and other businessmen has its way the $6,000,000 municipal auditorium expansion and improvement program will be changed to provide in the heart of downtown, a large theatre, among other things.

The theatre would be in conjunction with large convention facilities, including a 3,500-seat assembly hall and involving an expenditure from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000.

The present auditorium is on the loop's fringe and the group feels that the convention facilities, etc., should be closer to downtown's heart. The proposed new 2,500-seat theatre would house traveling attractions and probably supplant the Orpheum, primarily a film theatre, for legit subscription season and similar touring shows.

A meeting will be held this week between the group and the citizens' committee to discuss the new proposal.

Latin Quarter, N.Y., Back To Names With Liberace

Liberace has been signed for an engagement at the Latin Quarter, N.Y., starting March 14. It'll be the spot's first name engagement since its present show opened in October. It's also Liberace's first cafe engagement in New York since hitting the bigtime. He has eschewed Gotham since his stand at the Palace several years ago.

Eddie Risman, managing director of the Latin Quarter, has also signed Rip Taylor and Rudy Cardenas to open April 17, and Davis & Reese on the show to follow.

RAY CHARLES MOVES TO QUASH DOPE RAP

Indianapolis, Jan. 16.

Municipal Court Judge Ernie Burke, following a preliminary hearing last week, said he would rule Jan. 30 on a motion to dismiss narcotics charges against blind jazz musician Ray Charles. Through his attorney, Charles contended that his arrest last Nov. 14 in a local hotel was improper.

Two detectives, who testified an informant had sent them to the hotel, said they searched the suite and found marijuana, traces of heroin as well as needles and a syringe. At the Jan. 30 hearing Judge Burke will also rule on a motion to suppress evidence.

Minn. State Fair '61 Net Soared To Big $155,367

Minneapolis, Jan. 16.

Showing a big gain over 1960, the 10-day Minnesota State Fair came through with a $155,367 net profit last year, its Agricultural Society sponsor was informed by secretary - manager Douglas K. Baldwin. The 1960 fair's net earnings were only $13,723.

There were an attendance of 1,119,595, third largest in the exposition's history, and total receipts of $1,445,000 in 1961. The receipts accrued from adults' 50c and children's 25c admissions, concessionaires' rentals, grandstand shows' grosses and the share of the Royal Amerian Midway Shows' take.

Baldwin reported that the larger profit was mainly due to reduced expenditures for improvements to the 300-acre fairgrounds. The $1,445,000 gross in 1961 compares to 1960's $1,290,089, a $157,911 gain.

Every person passing through the Minnesota State Fair gates even including employes, performers, officers and concessionaires, as well as those covering the exposition for the newspapers, is required to pay admission every time he enters.

Revenues of Minnesota's 96 county and district fairs also rose in 1961. The take climbed some $31,000 from the previous year, totaling $1,759,408, according to figures just revealed.

Net profits of $394,878, however, was slightly under those of 1960. This was because of a boost in expenses, a report explains. The fairs spent $1,364,528 to put on their shows last year, it was disclosed. Of this amount, $293,592 went for entertainment and nearly $100,000 for advertising.

Ailing Mathis Cancels Feb. 17 Copa, N.Y., Date

A back injury has caused Johnny Mathis to cancel his Feb. 17 engagement at the Copacabana, N.Y. Don Sherman was to have been on the same bill. Both performers will play out the stand at a later date.

No replacement will be set. However, Mathis' two-weeker will be made up by extending the engagement of Dick Haymes and Fran Jeffries, starting Feb. 6, for an additional week, and Tony Bennett and Phyllis Diller will begin their stand one week earlier on March 1.

BEV AADLAND'S N.Y. DATE

Beverly Aadland has been signed to open at the Living Room, next Wednesday (24). This will be her first date in midtown New York, although the former companion of the late Errol Flynn has worked in numerous nabe spots.

On the bill with her will be singer Choo Choo Collins.

Fla. Hotel's Show Policy

The George Washington Hotel, Jacksonville, Fla., is installing a show policy starting Jan. 28. Noel Sherman has been signed to produce the layout.

On the initial bill will be Peggy Womack, Gil Johnson plus an eight-girl line.

Agencies Broadening Operations As Act Demand Spreads to More Cities

Talent agencies expect to widen operations as far as names are concerned during the new year. It's no longer possible for many of the headliners still in name status to select a few of the top cities in the U. S. to the exclusion of others. The acts that formerly played New York, Chicago, Miami Beach, Las Vegas and Hollywood have found that they must now go into Vancouver, Omaha, Kansas City, New Orleans, among others.

It is not only because the drawing power of many names has eroded in the larger towns throughout the years resulting in shorter runs, but some of the niteries have been eliminated and activity has become more widespread.

The second run of cities now finds it possible to get names such as Joe E. Lewis, Hildegarde, Sophie Tucker, Tony Bennett, and others in that category.

This situation denotes both a shrinkage and an expansion of the nitery orbit. There are less cafes in the some of the top cities. Miami Beach, Chicago, Hollywood and New York have cut down the number of niteries. At the same time the lesser cities have expanded to the point where they can afford names to provide excitement.

In Chicago, for example, with the shuttering of the Chez Paree several years ago, the centre of name activity has moved to the hotels. Some of the comedy names that were regular at the Chez have gone to the inns.

However, the hotels cannot absorb all the comedians who worked the cafes. The other cities in addition to cutting down the number of cafes, have been using headliners from other fields. Disk names, for example, have supplanted some of the topliners. Rising costs have also caused tightening of budgets.

The net effect for talent agencies is the rise in costs. Where they had only to service a few cities intensively, they now have to cover the map completely if they are to get their share of the market. This has caused an increase in toll calls, wires, and they have had to entertain more buyers than ever before.

John McKnight to Get 25% Aqua Carnival '62 Net Under Deal With NBC

Under terms of a limited partnership between NBC and John McKnight, the latter will realize 25% of the net profits of the Aqua Carnival which he'll produce for a summer run at the N.Y. Coliseum. Show is slated to open June 4. McKnight's take will rise to 40% during 1963 and will reach 50% in 1965.

The limited partner is NBC which put up $50,000. It will get 75% of the net for the first year, 60% during 1963 and '64 and 50% thereafter. NBC's investment was made through Alfred R. Stern, president of the net's Enterprises Division which handles the net's outside financial participations.

This will be the first Indoor water show to be presented in New York during a summer. McKnight was connected with the water show at Flushing Meadows Amphitheatre, site of the 1939-40 World's Fair. The same amphitheatre will be utilized again for a water show during the forthcoming World's Fair with bandleader Meyer Davis and Radio City Music Hall producer Leon Leonidoff in charge.

Under present plans McKnight's Aqua Carnival will run twice daily with a $3.50 top. No plans as yet have been made for a tv spec based upon the water show. It's obvious, however, that NBC will get first crack at it should the possibility of a telecast arise.

Gypsy to Star in 'Star & Garter' Vegas Revival

An old legit and vaude property is slated for revival. "Star and Garter," which was produced two decades ago by the late Mike Todd and starred Gypsy Rose Lee, is being revived by Mike Todd Jr. and Miss Lee for presentation in Las Vegas with Gypsy in the top role. The unit, originally produced for a Broadway legit run, was later toured in vaudeville.

The venture will be backed by Izzy Rappaport, the Baltimore exhibitor, long a friend of the original producer, who also had an interest in the show when it played the vauders.

The producers are aiming for a Broadway production following its Vegas run.

McClellan Com. Subpoenas Five AGVA Execs in Probe of Tie With B Girls

The Senate Investigations subcommittee, headed by John McClellan (D.-Ark.), has issued five subpoenas to various organizers of The American Guild of Variety Artists. Those served with papers include the lower echelons of the union, with none in the New York headquarters served at this point.

Those given papers are Ernie Fast, the union's Midwest regional director; Jerry Baker and Max Turk, of Miami Beach; Smiley Hart, organizer in Tampa, who was formerly in St. Louis, and Steve Ferrari, his St. Loo successor.

The subcommitte as yet has not decided whether a fullscale investigation will be launched into the union's affairs although probers have been peering into union affairs in many cities where AGVA maintains offices. It was also emphasized by a subcommittee spokesman that even if a witness is subpoenaed there is no guarantee that he will be called. The maneuver is largely to keep prospective witnesses from fleeing the country.

The subcommittee has been looking into AGVA's alleged inking of B-girls and prostitutes as members and is attempting to determine whether these femmes have any influence in the AGVA elections.

Ernie Fast Hospitalized

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Ernie Fast, Midwest regional director of AGVA, is recuperating from minor surgery in Miami Beach.

Hospitalization will delay his appearance before the Senate subcommittee probing alleged connections between strippers belonging to AGVA and criminal syndicates.

Book Mitzi Gaynor For St. Paul Winter Carnival

St. Paul, Jan. 16.

This city's 76th annual 11-day Winter Carnival, starting Jan 26, will be highlighted by film star Mitzi Gaynor who is bringing her Las Vegas stage revue for the events coronation of King Boreas XXVI in the Municipal Auditorium on opening day.

The King will reign over sports, entertainment and what's heralded as "midwinter madness." Visitors and home folks will witness the national outdoor speed skating championships, sports car races on ice, ski jumping championships, two parades, one on the first Saturday afternoon and the other a torchlight on the second Saturday night, and an ice fishing contest.

Int'l, N.Y., On Top Name Spree

Jack Silverman, operator of The International, N.Y., is splurging on one of the heaviest talent lineups since he became a boniface more than 20 years ago. Following the current layout, Silverman brings in the Ames Bros. Jan. 24 and follows with Gary Crosby, Feb. 14. George Jessel, supported by Lillian Hayes, opens Feb. 28.

Also booked are Eagle & Mann, April 11, as well as the Andrews Sisters, Dion and Neil Sedaka. Latter two will be given dates during the prom season.

The talent splurge is designed to put the International in the front nitery ranks in New York. Silverman hopes to be the only name spot on Broadway inasmuch as the Latin Quarter doesn't normally spice its shows with name talent until the summer.

USO REPS SCOUT ACTS FOR UPCOMING TOURS

Bert Wishnew, booking representative for USO, and Charles Burgess, musical producer for the soldier entertainment organization, are currently touring several cities auditioning talent for future USO tours.

The duo looked at acts in Miami Beach Monday (15), and will be in New Orleans tomorrow (Thurs.) and Friday. Talent selected will be utilized from four to 20 weeks for overseas units.

Primary need at this time is for comics, emcees and music combos. There are also employment opportunities for pretty girl singers and dancers. Because all travel is by plane, there is a limitation on the amount of props and weight that can be carried by performers. Acts must meet medical standards set by the USO insurance underwriters.

Minsky Producing Show For Orpheum, Seattle

Harold Minsky, producer of the current revue at the New Frontier Hotel, Las Vegas, has been signed to produce a show for the Orpheum Theatre, Seattle, which will run during the Seattle World's Fair. The Minsky layout is slated to open June 19 for six weeks. If the production works out well, there is a possibility of a shift to the larger Moore Theatre there.

Show will be geared to a burlesque flavor with names. Minsky is trying to assemble a cast of some top names who started in burlesque such as Bert Lahr.

Booking for Minsky was made by the William Morris Agency.

BACK FROM ORIENT

Bobby Phillips and Billy McDonald, of the Beverly Hills office of Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp., returned last week from a trip to the Orient.

Duo talked with talent buyers in Tokyo, Manila, Honolulu and Hong Kong during their 10-day jaunt.

Loew's Tests Sat. Kiddie Vaude Anew in N.Y. State

Loew's Theatres is making another try at Saturday vaude kiddie matinees. Chain has booked Joey Ross, of the "Car 54, Where Are You?" teleshow, for the Paradise Theatre, N.Y., on Feb. 3. In the past the chain has used The Three Stooges, among others, for the kid-vaude stanzas.

Ross will do the show in conjunction with two acts still to be signed. Its the only production slated by Loew's thus far this season for the moppet trade.

Nitery Ops Assn. Names Norman Its New Prexy

Houston, Jan. 16.

The Associated Clubs of America, ending a three-day organizational convention here Wednesday (10), elected new officers and tapped Chicago as the site for the next convention to be held Oct. 15-17.

Gene Norman, owner of the Crescendo in Los Angeles and also owner of GNP Records, was elected president. Saul Hochman, partner in the Crown Room in Indianapolis, was named first vice president.

Manny Rubin, owner of the Second Fret in Philadelphia, was voted second v.p. Doug Weston of the Cafe Troubador Theatre, L.A., was elected secretary, and William Martin, of the Trans-World Club, Houston, was named treasurer.

The board for the association comprises Bill Newkirk, Tidelands Club, Houston, chairman; Mrs. H. J. Neustaedter, Exodus Club, Denver, and Oscar Marienthal, Mister Kelly's, Chicago.

The group also organized opposition to a proposed bill now before the Congressional Ways and Means Committe that would eliminate as business expense tax deductions visits to places offering entertainment.

Plans were also made to make the first Neustaedter Award presentation—named in honor of the group's first president, Hal Neustaedter, killed this winter in a plane crash near Denver—at the Chicago convention in October.

The award will be presented on the basis of the best talent seen during professional talent auditions at the convention.

Talent Offices Eye Fresh Formulae To Lure More Biz From Outdoors

Talent agencies are seeking new directions for the outdoor business for the forthcoming season. Names, which have been the mainstay of many of the outdoorers for the past few years, are becoming harder to sell because of constantly rising prices, and the usual run of sight acts needs more elaborate casing in order to be attractive to the fair managements as well as the rural population.

The ideas that are cropping up anew are extremely varied. For example, the William Morris Agency is pitching a wide diversification which ranges from a Harold Minsky revue to Andy Griffith along with the usual types of talent that find their way to the rural circuits.

General Artists Corp. is pitching a combination of Joey Ross and Fred Gwynne, the leads in the teleseries, "Car 54, Where are You." Other agencies are combing the offbeat paths in order to come up with new interest for fairs.

The offices still will be marketing names. But the number of fairs still receptive to the top echelons no matter what the cost is fast dwindling. In some cases names failed to improve attendance. In others, they brought in audiences not really 4-H'ers at heart.

However, some name buyers insist that the fairs must start drawing from the cities as well if the entire fair structure is to survive. These buyers feel that they must get urban support for farm legislation, and what better way to start than through entertainment?

The agencies have not yet been able to revert to the formulae of some years ago when sight acts sufficed. Entertainment tastes have changed with the advent of tv. Thus video names seem to predominate in the new thinking around the offices disk talent is also being pitched, but more carefully than it used to be. Girlie shows a la Minsky may be ready for acceptance along the rural circuits. At least the agencies are trying to convince the fair managements that they can be a top drawing card.

Buffalo's Hard Winter Shutters Town Casino

Buffalo, Jan. 16.

Harry Altman has closed the Town Casino until March 17 when it will reopen with a show to include the Winged Victory chorus, McHarry & Dolores, and Dory Sinclair. It will close again the middle of May with its business then to be shifted to the Glen Casino in nearby Williamsville.

Although the fate of the Town Casino was in doubt, Altman said that the Glen Casino would remain open all year. There is also a possibility that the Town Casino will offer some one-night show bookings and will be available for banquets and special occasions.

For over a dozen years Altman has been one of the nation's chief talent buyers. Although he has made valiant efforts to keep the spot open during the past three seasons, current shuttering is the first to have taken place in midwinter. Snow has been exceptionally heavy here.

Philly Landlord Halts Jazzery

Philadelphia, Jan. 16.

Jazz on the Main Line has been brought to an abrupt halt by injunction proceedings. Ed Tracton, lessee of the Chetwynd, lounge and diningroom in the exclusive Chetwynd Apartments, Rosemont, had booked and played a number of jazz acts, including Chris Connor, Ahmad Jamal and Dakota Staton, when the management lowered the boom.

Matt Weinstein, manager of the apartments, invoked a clause in the lease declaring the restaurant was built primarily for the convenience of the tenants. Tracton was ordered to stop all his star attractions or close.

Room is permitted to have a pianist or background music, but all talent must pass a "non-jazz" test with Weinstein. Owners claim the name artists crowded the room and made it difficult for the residents to be served properly.

MIAMI BEACH SPOT BOWS

A new nitery, Rue 79, will open tomorrow (Thurs.) in Miami Beach. Sallie Blair and Sherry Kayles combo are on the proem session.

THE LOMANS

(BARBARA AND HAL)

VARIETY

"Barbara & Hal Loman, a pair of skilled dancers who work in the modern ballet medium. Their routines are fresh and meaningful. They seem to stay away from choreographic cliches and weave a story line into their numbers. Turn constitutes an entertaining bit by a pair of well-coutoured, skilled and highly disciplined dancers."

GENE KNIGHT
New York Journal-American

"The graceful dance duo of Mr. and Mrs. Hal Loman warmed up the customers . . . "Barbara Loman is shapely, comely, agile. Hal Loman is fleet-footed, dramatic, works to the point of exhaustion. He's a double for Frank Sinatra—but dances much better.

"This is the best dance team I've seen in some time."

BOB DANA
New York World Telegram & Sun

"The dance team of Barbara and Hal Loman was most impressive . . .

The dancers, Barbara and Hal Loman, earlier won the audience with their skill particularly a terpsichorean story impression."

FRANK QUINN
New York Mirror

The featured act on the bill is the delightful dancing team of Barbara and Hal Loman. Their act is bright, developing cleverly through the use of quick changes.

Prototype of Vaude Irish Tenors Dies

Gerald Griffin, 70, Spanned Many Media and Lands —Active in Theatrical Orgs

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Gerald Griffin who died Jan. 11 at Northern Dutchess County Hospital, Rhinebeck, N.Y. (at 70) was an oldtime vaudevillian and showbiz familiar, a kind of younger Fisk O'Hare in the old theatrical tradition of the Irish tenor. Several of his kinsmen were also entertainers, notably John Griffin, a brother, and Gerald Griffin Jr., a son. John was prominent on the film house presentation circuits and later soloist at St. Patrick's Cathedral in Manhattan.

VARIETY files disclose "New Act" notices on Gerald Griffin in 1911, 1917, 1922, 1936. First and last he was a singer of Irish songs, but also an actor in Hibernian sentimentalia. One turn which he travelled was a sketch of an aging man's reminiscences of Old Erin. By 1936 the VARIETY reviewer was noting Griffin as "the rotund tenor with a flair for Killarney airs."

He made a trip to Australia in 1914 and another obscure career item was his playing the lead in the dreadful first play of Moss Hart, "The Beloved Bandit," which was mentioned in Hart's autobiography, "Act One."

A member of ASCAP, Gerald Griffin's activities as a songwriter resulted in his heading the Songwriters Guild of America, 1936-1941. A born joiner and leader the deceased tenor was president of the Catholic Actors Guild, 1930-1936 and executive secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, 1940-1942.

A Close Clan

Not only was Gerald Griffin a personality on and off the boards but he came of a family always hot with charm and clan loyalty, including a sister, Marcella, deceased 1939, who had worked for Lord & Thomas in Chicago and New York. The late William Griffin, prominent in Tammany politics, founded and published the Sunday Enquirer in Manhattan. Now owned by the Generoso Pope heirs, that publication still employs sister Ethel Griffin. A son of Marcus Griffin, long a rialto columnist, is John David Griffin who currently conducts a well-regarded radio-video column for the N.Y. Mirror.

Of the original Chicago brood of 11, eight survive. They include ex-tenor John, now advertising director of Haire trade publications. His son, Father William Griffin of the Holy Cross institution at Fairfield, Conn., conducted the requiem mass in Kingston, Monday (15), for his uncle. Geraldine Moore is with McCann-Erickson. Eulalie Moore and Eileen Reidy are outside the theatrical-journalistic-ad agency backgrounds which characterized the Griffins. Their father, though long connected with Western Union in Chicago, was for many years a theatre critic on the side.

Gerald Griffin graviatated from the Paulist Choir in Chicago to minstrels and thence into the various performing media. In the heyday of vaude he toured in Britain, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand. During World War II he was active with the Shamrock Revue playing U.S.O. Camp Show itinerary. Punctuating all this, he had various tangential experiences in other businesses but was seldom far or long from show biz. Harassed by diabetes and a heart condition he had lost one leg by amputation and died of the complications of a second amputation. Toward the end of his time he was on a theatrical nostalgia kick via an "Old Timers" radio program on WHUC at Hudson, N.Y.

Spain's Small Fry Singing Stars

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, Jan. 16.

The unmistakable success at home and abroad chalked up by child screen singer Joselito has produced a rash of tot crooners on the Spanish film production scene, while the current percentage of the annual production chart devoted to young stars is close to one fourth of the total output.

Joselito scored a hit with his first film starter, "El Pequeno Ruisenor" (The Little Songbird). The nasal-pitched boy wonder went on to even greater success in "Saeta de Ruisenor," "El Ruisenor de las Cumbres" and "Escucha mi Cancion." His recent film triumphs include "Los Dos Golfillos" and "Bello Recuerdo." In addition, the fame of this little top-biller has long ago spread throughout the Spanish-speaking world and has even penetrated with commercial eclat to most of the middle eastern metropoles.

His heavy peseta income comes not only from film performances but from personal appearance tours up and down the bottom half of the western hemisphere, as well as from returns on some 60 RCA records of tunes from his pix. Joselito, in many parts of the world, has brought in more coin for his producer Cesareo Gonzalez than such recognized Spanish stars as Sarita Montiel, Carmen Sevilla and Paquita Rico, and producer Gonzalez proudly points out that Joselito is the only Spanish luminary with two appearances to his credit on the Ed Sullivan Show.

Joselito's closest competitor at the moment is 12-year-old Marisol. Discovered last year by producer Manuel Goyanes, Marisol has recorded a phenomenal boxoffice success in two films—"Un rayo de luz" (A Ray of Light), and "Ha Llegado un Angel" (An Angel Appeared). The talented young southlander who dances as well as sings, is being groomed as an international star with Hollywood as a goal in the not-too-distant future. Meanwhile, the young Miss from Malaga will next be seen in a major coproduction effort "The Emperor Waltz," for which Benito Perojo of Spain and Yank producer Nat Wachsberger drew up a gilt-edged budget. "Waltz" went into production last month in a genuine Vienna palace.

Close in line as a successful minor is Angelito who is billed as the youngest singer in the world, with two good grossers already to his credit and two more coming up. He has already achieved wide identification as Pachin, a name that appears in all his film titles: "Pachin," "Admiral Pachin," and his upcoming projects "Pachin and the Little Donkey" and "Detective Pachin."

Another budding song and dance film star, not yet turned 10, is Estrellita who is now making her debut in "Han Robado una Estrella" (They Stole a Star). Estrellita shows promise of reaching the heights her older colleague Marisol already enjoys.

Last, but not least, is Pablito Calvo—star of that semi-classic "Marcelino Pan y Vino"—a film that earned his discoverer, film director Ladislao Vajda, world wide attention and his producer-distributor Chamartin a young fortune. Pablito's handicap is that his talent is limited to acting without the added crutch of song or dance. But his popularity in Spain and Latin America is a fait accompli.

Market interest in child prodigies is logical because it is profitable. With the censors drastically curtailing adult themes in imports and local films, many producers are looking to this type of talent as a golden nugget at the boxoffice for young and old alike.

Las Vegas Like B'way

on the fact that the "Flower Drum Song" is presently outdrawing many other names including those for which $40,000 weekly has been expended. "Flower Drum" in toto costs $22,500 weekly and is doing the biggest business in town.

Of course there have been other musicals and dramas in Las Vegas, but none, with the exception of "Guys and Dolls" at the old Royal Nevada (now the Stardust Auditorium), have drawn the response of the Chinatown-based tuner.

Joe Wells Regime

The revitalized Thunderbird has taken on a new gloss since its recent takeover by Joe Wells, who had been a minority stockholder under the administration of the late Marion Hicks. Wells, instead of looking for "economies" which lead the hotel into constantly deeper deficits, looked around for realistic excuses to expand. He figured that the nitery room was the logical place to start, and having guessed right initially, is slated to start a $3,000,000 expansion program within 90 days. His first act was to bring in an expanded publicity staff headed by Maury Stevens, with an outlet in New York through Ted Deglin, with Larry Kammett as the account exec, and then he brought in Monte Proser, who after acceptance suggested the R&H musical. Proser and Stevens saw the show in Cleveland, and according to Stevens, Proser outlined the cuts and methods of presentation with all notes scripted on airsick bag while on a plane. That was the final production blueprint made. The rights were negotiated by Sammy Lewis & Louis Shur, and the result is the package running an hour and a half, which is tighter than the original Broadway show and accents comedy. The presentation has made Jack Soo, of the Broadway original, the most talked about actor in Vegas at the moment. He is playing the role originally essayed by Larry Blyden.

Wells is receptive to the theatre idea, but wants to expand other hotel facilities including more rooms and larger lounge space before he goes into theatre construction.

Theatres

A theatre, they feel, will be in keeping with the expansion plans of Las Vegas. The number of rooms is rising, there are more visitors as more airlines are putting Vegas on the schedule, and there is more auto traffic on Routo 91 in both directions. What's more, it's pointed out, the legits are opening farther away from New York in recent years. It's no longer the Boston, New Haven, Philadelphia axis before jumping to Broadway. They feel they can not only get tryouts to Vegas, but will offer additional financing to producers and a guaranteed profit for bringing shows to this town. Proser, due East this week, is talking this plan to producers.

The casino managers are pleased with this setup. They feel that they can get enough traffic into the casino even under this plan. The intermissions can be lengthened and there can be several trips to the tables during the course of a show. The function of a show, they say, is to create traffic into the casino, and they feel that legiters can do this.

At the same time, the Thunderbird lounge has gone to the other extreme under Dave Victorson management. They have created a large amount of traffic with a bill which consists of Carmen Cavallaro alternating with Twist groups. The effectiveness of the Twist was seen by the fact that at five ayem, the lounge was crowded with undulating couples. But, as the casino managers pointed out, the gaming tables weren't crowded. Proser is considering the installation of a revue such as "George White's Scandals" for presentation in the lounge as a lure for spenders.

However, the building of theatres as nitery adjuncts will in no way affect the operation of the niteries as presently constituted. There will still be a need for names, and with the constant expansion of the area, a hotel can house a nitery and lounge as well as a theatre for the eternal glory of the casinos.

Auto Show Review

Upper Midwest Auto Show

Minneapolis, Jan. 16.

Abbe Lane & Xavier Cugat, Rondos (5), Lou Nelson, Debutantes (3), Gordie Bowen Orch (15); Auditorium, Jan. 12-21; $1-$1.50.

This Auto Show's stage production comprises three other acts in addition to Miss Lane and her husband, Xavier Cugat, who, like her, knows what the public wants and helps his wife dish it up. The other acts are okay, but it's the Cugats who make the occasion worthwhile entertainmentwise.

This is a return visit to the Show for the Cugats, the couple having been one of its headliners two years ago. They seem to improve with age. Miss Lane impresses as increasingly glamourous and more expert in selling her songs and stepping. She invites any male member of the audience to come on stage and be her "Twist" partner, even offering to give some instructions. However, at the opening matinee none accepted the invitation—their loss—and seeing her go through the body gyrations was all the treat anybody could wish.

Cugat intoduces his wife, converses briefly with the paying guests, tells how much he and she like Minneapolis and how glad they are to be back. He also conducts the orchestra for her songs and dancing.

Comedian Lou Nelson glibly emcees the 60-minute vaude layout and stirs up laughter with his tatling, jibes, jests and amusing observations. The Rondos—three men and two gals—do sensational tumbling, balancing and high in the air somersaults. They use the full stage. Favorite standards go over well as vocalized by the Debutantes Trio. The locally recruited Gordie Bowen 14-piece orch backs the show nicely.

This Auto Show runs nine days, but the Cugats remained only the first three, the same as they did before. In their headline place, they were followed by Steve Lawrence, also in for three days, as is his successor, Jimmie Rodgers.

OBITUARIES

ERNIE KOVACS

Ernie Kovacs, 43, film and tv comic, was instantly killed Jan. 12 in Beverly Hills, Cal., when his station wagon struck a power pole. He had attended a baby shower for Ruth (Mrs. Milton) Berle at the home of film writer-producer Billy Wilder, with his wife Edie Adams, film-tv singer-comedienne.

Kovacs made one of the fastest ascensions in tv of any recent comic. His way-out bizarre humor in an eastern newspaper column caught the eye of the networks and ABC-TV signed him for a silent screen series and later his own way-outer for Dutch Master cigars. The heater had been his trademark and he is said to have smoked up more than a dozen cigars a day, the two-dollar kind and not DM's.

Screen Gems had been preparing the pilot of a new series with Kovacs as the lead in "Medicine Man." His next special for ABC-TV was slated for Jan. 29, most of which had been taped in advance. The show will go on as scheduled.

After Kovacs caught on in tv for his cocky humor, he was in demand for pictures and appeared, among others, in "Our Man in Havana," "Bell, Book and Candle," "Sail a Crooked Ship," "Strangers When We Meet" and "Wake Me When It's Over."

KENNETH MacKENNA
(Leo Mielziner Jr.)

Kenneth MacKenna, 63, film & stage actor and former story editor of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, died Monday night (15) in Hollywood. He had been ill several years with cancer, but except for several hospital confinements, continued working until the last few months.

Before going to Hollywood in the mid-1930's as an actor, MacKenna was an actor, director and producer in New York, playing leading roles in a number of notable productions. After serving as story editor and production executive for Metro for about 10 years, he retired two years ago and resumed his acting career. He served in the U.S. Army in both World Wars, as a Corporal in the Tank Corps in 1917-18 and as a Major in the Signal Corps in 1942-45, receiving the Legion of Merit for the latter.

MacKenna, whose real name was Leo Mielziner Jr., was born Aug. 19, 1899 in Canterbury, N.H., the son of the noted painter. He was educated in France, England and at Columbia College, and at first intended to be a banker, but in 1919 was seen by actress Grace George and offered a part in her producer-husband William A. Brady's presentation of "At 9:45."

He subsequently appeared on Broadway in leading roles in "The Nest," "The Insect Comedy," as John Shand opposite Helen Hayes in a revival of "What Every Woman Knows," "We Moderns," "By Your Leave," "Merrily We Roll Along," as Iago in a Robert Edmond Jones production of "Othello," and with Philip Merivale and Gladys Cooper in "Macbeth." He directed and produced but did not appear in "Co-Respondent Unknown."

Since resuming his acting career, MacKenna starred on Broadway in Dore Schary's drama, "The Highest Tree," and appears as one of the judges in the current film, "Judgment at Nuremberg."

Survivors include his wife, former actress Mary Phillips; his 89-year-old mother, Ella MacKenna Mielziner, and his brother, artist and scene and theatre designer Jo Mielziner.

GERALD GRIFFIN

Gerald Griffin, 70, actor, singer, songwriter and former exec secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, died Jan. 11 at North Dutchess County Hospital, Rhinebeck, N. Y. He was known chiefly as an Irish tenor but was active in many other areas.

Survivors include his wife, son, grandson, four sisters and four brothers.

Details in the vaude section.

RAJAH RABOID

Ray Boyd, known professionally as Rajah Raboid, a mentalist, died Jan. 11 in Miami Beach after a long illness. One of the leading magicos for years, he played top vaudeville circuits as well as the better supper clubs throughout the country. He was also a veteran in one-man shows.

In recent years Raboid was active in the affairs of the American Guild of Variety Artists, aligning himself with the insurgent group in opposition to the present administration. He was a national board member of the union at the time of his death.

Survived by wife, Elvira, who assisted him in his act.

SIR WILFRID EADY

Sir Wilfrid Eady, 71, who devised the Eady Plan for the film industry, died Jan. 9 in Lewes, Eng. He held many high offices in the Home Civil Service, being in charge of Air Raid Precautions from 1938 to 1940 and represented the British government in postwar financial talks between U.K., America, Canada and the Argentine.

Show biz knew him best as the man who drew up the plan bearing his name. It is based upon a levy paid by British exhibitors that goes into a fund for the benefit of British film production. He was also a director of the Old Vic Trust, the Glyndebourne Arts Trust and the National Film Institute.

Survived by wife and two sons.

SAM SAX

Sam Sax, 81, film producer and distributor executive, died in Hollywood Jan. 2. Starting with Universal as salesman in 1913, he was with Robertson-Cole and Metro prior to setting up own production-distribution firm, Gotham Pictures, later was Eastern Production Manager for Warner Bros. at its Vitaphone Studio in Brooklyn and headed WB's British Production before World War Two.

Widow, Lulu, and brother, Carrol Sax, survive.

CHESTER B. BAHN

Chester B. Bahn, 68, editor of Film Daily since 1936, died Jan. 8 in Los Angeles of a heart attack. He collapsed at Revue-Universal Studios and was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Joseph's Hospital, Burbank.

Born in Liverpool, N. Y., and educated at Syracuse U., Bahn was drama and film editor of the Syracuse Journal from 1912-1922. He left to become International News Service bureau chief in Syracuse, and later became chief editorial writer for the Syracuse Telegram and Sunday American. In 1935-1936 he was drama and film critic and Sunday editor for the Syracuse Herald. He was VARIETY's Stringer in Syracuse.

Survived by his wife, Irene, and three sons.

EBERHARD BECKMANN

Eberhard Beckmann, 57, general director of the Hessischer Rundfunk, Frankfurt branch of the West German radio and television network, died Jan. 3 in Giessen, West Germany, after a long illness.

One of the outstanding developers of new ideas and appealing programs, Beckmann was considered among West Germany's top authorities on television.

Born in the Rhineland, he first worked as a stage and film critic and journalist, then in 1933 joined the Frankfurt radio. Out of protest to the National Socialist party, he left the medium and spent the war years as a farmer on his property, after serving a brief sentence in jail as an "enemy" of the Nazis.

The Americans brought him back to radio, and in 1946 he was named general manager of Radio Frankfurt, which later developed into Hessischer Rundfunk radio and television.

Beckmann was a member of the executive board of the German UNESCO committee.

Surviving are his wife and three children.

JOSEPH TUNBRIDGE

Joseph Tunbridge, 75, composer and conductor, died Dec. 28 in Orpington, Eng. Originally a pianist and accompanist, he appeared at the St. James's and Queen's Halls. After a stint with Adeler and Sutton's Pierrots he became musical editor for the Star Music Co. He also was with Feldman's for 17 years in a similar capacity.

In 1927 he was playing with a cabaret act, The Four Fellers, when he was heard by impresario Jack Waller. It started a long association. Tunbridge composed music for nine revues for Harry Day. For Jack Waller he wrote the music for "Virginia," "Dear Love," "Silver Wings," "For the Love of Mike," "Tell Her the Truth," "He Wanted Adventure," "Mr. Whittington," "Yes, Madam," "Please, Teacher," "Certainly, Sir," "Big Business" and "Bobby Get Your Gun."

In 1953 he became paralyzed in his right arm and leg, but learned to write with his left hand.

EDWIN WHITNER

Edwin Whitner, 53, actor, died Jan. 5 in New York. A graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in N.Y., he appeared in numerous Broadway productions, road companies, stock and tele.

His Broadway credits include, "Only in America," "Magnificent Yankee," "Late Love," "I Gotta Get Out," "Houseparty," "The Enemy Within," "Ivory Door" and "One-Third of a Nation." He also toured the U.S. in numerous productions including, "The Late Christopher Bean," with Shirley Booth, "Witness for the Prosecution," "This Thing Called Love" among others.

Whitner also appeared for eight seasons with the Margo Jones' Dallas Theatre, playing more than 55 major roles. He also appeared on most of the major tv shows including "Armstrong Circle Theatre," "The Defenders" and "Kraft Theatre."

AFRIQUE

Afrique, 54, impressionist and vocalist, died Dec. 17 in London after a long illness. Born Alexander Witkin in South Africa, he made his first London appearance at the Windmill in 1934. Prior to that he had appeared with Sadler's Wells Opera Company.

He made several films and was seen regularly in pantomine as Abanazar. He appeared at the Palladium in 1936, 1937 and 1941 and at the Casino in 1948.

Afrique also had roles in many musical productions such as "Coronation Revue," "Black Velvet," "Black Vanities," "Stream Line" and "Funny Go Round." In New York, he appeared at the old Ritz Carlton Hotel and the Rainbow Room in 1937-38, then toured with Larry Adler in South Africa.

One of his notable impressions, which hit the headlines, was a silent impression of the then Prince of Wales which he was asked to withdraw.

BARRY O'BRIEN

Barry O'Brien, 69, legit manager and agent, died Dec. 25 in London. Originally an actor, he became a dramatic agent and producer in 1925. His first London production was "Meet the Wife" at St. Martin's Theatre in 1927.

Later he presented "Lilac Time" and "The Merry Widow" and in 1940 produced a stock season at the Coliseum. From 1940 he concentrated mainly on touring shows and provincial stock companies at Bournemouth, Southsea and on the Isle of Wight, among other places.

He also staged several tours of the International Ballet as well as a season of Alicia Markova and Bam Gopal in London.

His partner, Michael Hamilton, will continue with a production of "Doctor at Sea" which was being readied. O'Brien was a bachelor.

TOM POWELL

Tom Powell, 79, onetime minstrel man who worked with Al G. Fields; Primrose & West and Ward & Wade 60 years ago, died of acute indigestion Dec. 30 in Springfield, O.

Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y.

Carol Channing (with Peppy Moreale), Milt Shaw and Emery Deutsch Orch; $3-$4 cover.

The Empire Room's antidote for the post-New Year's Day doldrums is perhaps one of the sprightlier uppercrust comediennes, Carol Channing. She has come in with a brand new package of characterizations that should ultimately develop into one of her top saloon acts.

Miss Channing, who was the blond that gentlemen preferred in its musical revival some years ago, has since taken this lightheaded and equally lighthearted character through a variety of transformations. All of them with taste and a touch of zaniness which makes her a prime bet for any time of year in this hotel.

Miss Channing has worked hard with her new material. A lot of it still needs a touch, here and there, some editing and perhaps more workouts, but its excellence is readily recognized.

Miss Channing's turn is produced by Charles Lowe, with an Orry-Kelly and Miles White wardrobe and chapeaux by Emme. The musical direction is by Peppy Moreale. It's a rather large act which in less expert hands could be unwieldy.

There is an elaborate setup in which a folding screen permits Miss Channing to change costumes, working down from a full gown and up from a leotard. Her asides, while her head peeks out of the covering, are an integral part of the entertainment and make for an extremely well-paced turn.

Miss Channing pokes fun at a lot of things. There are spoofs of Marlene Dietrich, the Rodgers-Hammerstein school of musical thought and she takes apart a few of the top choreographers in one of her sassiest numbers, "Switchblade Bess." Also in for gentle ribs is Sophie Tucker, one of her predecessors in this room this season.

There are, of course, the opening theme, "Little Girl from Little Rock," and her closer "Diamonds Are a Girls Best Friend" for identification with Lorelei, Anita Loos' creation. Latter was in her opening night's audience.

Miss Channing's trademarks, aside from a ready projection of wit, a hurky voice, sassy throwaways and b coming leers, give her a most delightful turn on the floor.

The musical backing is by Milt Shaw with Moreale on the podium during Miss Channing's stint. Shaw provides a pleasant dance incentive. Emery Deutsch's expressive fiddle heads the relief crew for both dancing as well as listenable moments. Per usual, Louis Ziciardi presides at the tape. Jose.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, Cal., Jan. 9.

Eartha Kitt, Jimmy Ames, Evers & Dolores, Bill Alexander's Orchestra (10); $2.50 cover.

Eartha Kitt, six weeks out of a maternity hospital, seems to be out to prove that recovery in this field of human experience is faster than it used to be. She proves it, too, except when she tries to supplement the wide range of her multilingual singing with a few steps from an old Katharine Dunham dance routine.

Whether interested in the phenomenon of her personal recovery or because refugees from the storm country are beginning to pile into town, she is playing to capacity biz at the Chi Chi Starlite Room. She appears in a three decker orange-colored ensemble that contrasts with her black hair and dark skin like the tigress she can portray on occasion. She sings 10 numbers, starting with "I Had A Hard Day Last Night" and ending with the inevitable "C'est Si Bon."

She comes on wearing a stunning orange evening coat, topped by a fur neckpiece that drapped the floor. Later she tosses these to the floor and sings som tunes in an orange dress of the same material. She finishes in leotards also of the same orange hue, consuming nearly an hour in this slow strip.

She shows a wide range of emotion and volume in her singing but spoils some of her best numbers by laughing at the end of them. In fact, this laugh seemed to be the signoff of each song. It meant nothing. She also takes too much time vamping till ready. Her jungle numbers sing in native.

Jimmy Ames, Chi comic beings Jimmy Ames, Chi comic, beings out his musical saw routine and it is still good for laughs. His joke about an Indian fakir he met who could walk through fire and didn't mind the agony of it, explaining that he had once been a comic who had played the Chi Chi, deserved a bigger hand. It's true comics do have a hard time in this bistro.

Evers & Dolorez do a superb tight wire act for an opening. Miss Dolorez being particularly good while completing a barefoot routine over the quarter inch wire.

Edgewater Beach, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 4.

Ted Lewis with Eddie Chester, George & Peggy De Marlo, Chop Chop & Charlene, Bet. E. Martin, Don Davis Orch; $3 cover weekends, $2.50 weeknights.

It's nostalgia time at the Polynesian Room as Ted Lewis brings his troupe in for another stroll down memory lane. A fast-moving and charming petite revue in its own right, the show is immeasurably enhanced by the mellow patina of Lewis's master showmanship.

Ably abetted by longtime aides Eddie Chester and magico Chop Chop & Charlene and the artful ballroom stylings of terpers George & Peggy De Marlo, the session moves without a hitch from the beginning to the end of its hourlong format. Lewis has also added a young Chi thrush, Bet E. Martin, to the show, and she acquits herself as an attractive and promising chirper.

Lewis doesn't spare himself in the show, crooning "Most Unusual Day" as the DeMarlos gracefully whirl through a number behind him, joining Miss Martin in a duet of oldies and working with vet shadow Eddie Chester in the traditional "Me And My Shadow" (which then segues into a wild "Shadow Rock and Roll").

The old master wanders through Chop Chop & Charlene's polished magico turn, pulling yocks as he tries to duplicate their cigaret and dove production numbers. Each of the acts is pleasing in its own right, but it's Lewis's fine hand that welds them together into the charming show that it is.

Hotel Astor, N. Y.

Margie Fields, Peter Pip, Sasha Tormas, Dick Harding Orch; $3 minimum weekdays; $2.50 cover Fri.-Sat.

This new room in the Zeckendorf Hotel Astor is beginning to straighten out and fly right. The Emerald Room never had pretentions of being anything more than an intimate room in the heart of Times Square. And the management smartly has been feeling its way in building shows. Current layout perhaps is tops, although Margie Fields had to be replaced after opening night. She was rushed to a hospital at the end of the second show with an attack of flu.

Peter Pip (New Acts), an import from the Netherlands, is one of the standouts on this bill. Obviously, he has been around but not in this country.

Miss Fields, who appeared to be suffering from a cold opening night (Thurs.) after a two-day junket from the Coast, indicates possibilities with her singing of such tunes as "Wonderful World," "Lonesome Road," "Birth of Blues" and "Some One To Watch Over Me." However, her prolonged trip from the Coast plus her illness did not permit her to project in proper fashion. Lorraine Peters replaced Friday (12) night.

Violinist Sasha Tormas is a holdover from the previous show, but even after five weeks here, he is as solid a click as ever. A personable musician, he does not clutter up his routine with extraneous patter. His versions of "Man I Love" and "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing" are top-flight. Tormas' treatment of "Hot Canary," his recording of which is a let seller in Europe, is a rare treat including, as it does, the usual bird sounds and an uncanny introduction of bagpipes via his fiddle.

Dick Harding's orch plays the show and for patron terpsing. And, of course, there's the familar groceries of the Astor. Wear.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 3.

Nat King Cole, Corbett Monica, Garr Nelson, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (24); produced & staged by Jack Entratter; choreography, Renne Stuart; stage direction, Harold Dobrow; $4 minimum.

Difficult as it may seem, Nat King Cole tops his previous Sandstints with the current outing. He combines his familiar diskings with just enough new material to click solidly with a well-balanced turn with the smoothness which is his trademark, endorsing his reputation as one of Jack Entratter's jackpot attractions.

Opening and closing with "This Is A Lovely Way To Spend An Evening," the meat of Cole's session includes such numbers as "Aren't You Glad You're You?" "I've Got A Lot Of Living To Do," "Why Don't You Do Right?" (which has an earthy arrangement), "Unforgettable," "Avalon" and a dramatically effective "Where Did Everyone Go?"

He revives his amusing "Mr. Cole Won't Rock 'n' Roll," with a neat segue into "I Won't Twist," some delightful special material concocted for him by Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen. The Antonio Morelli orch (24) backgrounds, with Cole's guitarist, Johnny Collins, serving as a strong plus.

Corbett Monica, the suave, handsome standup comedian, is in fine fettle, and like Cole, tops himself. Most of his one-liners and situation stories are fresh, and he brings back some of the classic bits which have made him a Vegas fave.

A holdover Renne Stuart production number, saluting the circus and featuring the dozen comely Copa girls, with the big baritone voice of Garr Nelson fronting, is the curtainraiser.

Show is set for four weeks. Duke.

Crystal Palace, St. L.

St. Louis, Jan. 9.

"Letta Ripp!," an original musical revue starring Jack Murdock; $2 admission.

Jay Landesman, producer of the revues at the Crystal Palace, cabaret-theatre in humming Gaslight Square, is at it again. This time it's an oldtime mellerdrammer, "Letta Ripp!" complete with villains-to-be-hissed, sweet young country girls, slinky sirens and holier-than-thou heroes. Altogether, it spells hilarity.

Although the temperature was dipping below zero on opening night, a packed house turned up for the show and gave it a rousing reception. The book by New York ad man Ed Corley has no message and very little plot and the music and lyrics by Deed Meyer are far from deathless, but the laughs come thick and fast.

Jack Murdock, portraying a big town con man who has come to a small town to fleece the bumpkins, is superb, playing it broad and getting extra hisses from the audience in his frequent snide asides to the out-fronters. His partner in crime, Letta Ripp, as played in slithery Mae West style by Carol Lindsey, has a fine time of it belting out a song and insulting the country gentry.

The hero, Philbert Hogwash, pure as the driven snow, gets the shining-armor treatment from Chris King, and there's fetching doings, too, by Jama Anne as Penelope Pumpkinhead, the sweet and fluttery rustic belle pursued with low intentions by the villain.

Rounding out the cast are a passel of assorted fun types, including Guy Park Krause, an engaging Pa Hogwash; Chris Wallace as Chief Tommyhawk and Duane Jones as Sheriff Fallenarche.

"Letta Ripp!" will be on hand for four weeks, and it looks like solid boxoffice all the way. Bob.

Harolds, Reno

Reno, Jan. 9.

Wiere Bros. (3) with Mildred Seymour, Vivienne della Chiesa, Don Conn Orch (10), Al Johns conducting; no cover, no minimum.

A review of Harolds Club entertainment lineups in the last few years indicates Harold Smith Sr. follows no hard and fast rules in the selection of his shows for the intimate Fun Room atop the seven-floor gaming emporium. He has been known to book two acts back to back with neither having any outstanding marquee lure, he has billed capsule versions of a Can-Can show and he has contracted some of the top singles in the business.

For the current double bill, however, he has come up with one of the strongest packages since the room was opened. Vivienne della Chiesa, in her Reno debut, is proving a powerhouse attraction, and the co-billed Wiere Bros., familiar on the local scene, have proved their value many times to the Reno-Tahoe talent buyers.

In a smart, beautifully arranged 30-minute turn at the mike, Miss Chiesa shows both versatility and unerring choice of titles. And she has the full command to put across her wares in captivating style. With a minimum of chatter (there's suggestion she could go a bit heavier on the between-title verbiage to further establish the obvious personality), she vocals the likes of "Non de Mentican," "Sound of Music," "Our Love Affair," and "September Song" for full tabler endorsement.

She also makes with a couple of Italiano numbers for good effect. She is soft and impressive on the ballads, shows nice diction and phrasing and proves she knows her way around the uptempo things as evidenced by sock interpretation of "St. Louis Blues."

Miss Chiesa is a charmer and perfectly fits this intimery. She's ably backed by the Don Conn Orch with her personal conductor, Al Johns, at the helm. Conn band has been expanded to 10 pieces for this engagement.

The Wiere Bros., masters of timing, bring in basically the same show they've offered in past local dates, but with a few lines and gimmicks. The act has top visual appeal, what with the trio's clowning and facial contortions skillfully interwoven into the comedic routines.

The trio gets more from a brief violin solo situation than many acts could milk from a 15-minute prepared routine. Freres also include a bit of acro, tap, and hat trading for added appeal. Three are backed at the piano by Mildred Seymour, who gets into the act as boys make with the exit routine.

Carl Ravazza slated to open Feb. 6. Long.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 8.

Jack E. Leonard, Claire Hogan, John Frigo Trio; $2.50 cover.

It was zero minus one on the thermometer on the night that Jack E. Leonard opened at Mister Kelly's, but this didn't put even a small crimp in the SRO house for his opening show. As a matter of fact, some 50 hardy souls braved the bitter cold to stand in line outside to wait for his second show.

A good part of the crush was directly attributable to the fact that Chicago currently has its largest convention of the year—some 50,000 furniture men (usually good spenders)—but there's no doubt that Leonard is a potent draw in his own right in these parts.

Working with an ultra-responsive audience, Leonard is at his free-wheeling best in bullying the auditors with his rapacious wit, then breaking them up with anecdotes of his youth on Chi's west side. That Leonard is a fast man with a quip is clearly shown when it was pointed out that a ringsider whom he had been working over was Lou Groza, the pro football player. "So, all right," Leonard jabbed, "did you have to wear your cleats in here?"

Cliff Arquette, in town for an industrial show, got much the same treatment. ("He's a talented guy. I expect big things of him as soon as he finds himself.") On stage for nearly an hour, Leonard never let up.

Opening the show is songstress Claire Hogan, onetime featured vocalist with the Jimmy Dorsey orchestra. She has a mature style and plenty of vocalistic savvy, fashioning "Day In" a brisk uptempo jazz piece and shaning a swingy version of "Baubles and Bangles." Among her other numbers are a Jimmy Dorsey medley, "Why Do The Wrong People Travel" from "Sail Away," and "Hey, Look Me Over."

She is artfully accompanied by guesting Cy Coleman, who wrote "Hey," Coleman, in Chi for a recording date, frequently plays the London House (like Mister Kelly's owned by the Marienthal brothers) and volunteered his services for the opening night. Mor.

Terrace Room, L. A.

Los Angeles, Jan. 12.

"Les Girls," Barry Ashton revue featuring Pat Dahl, Oscar Cartier, Christine & Piroska, Dennis Parr, Ilona Schultz, Vicki Duran, Bobbie Blair, Jann Miller, Elizabeth Driscoll, Karen Kristy, Sylvia McDonald, Suzanne LeRoy; Skinnay Ennis orch (10); $2 cover.

This show marks start of the third consecutive year that Barry Ashton has been mounting the floorshows in this adjunct of Statler-Hilton hotel here, and, overall, it probably is the best. There is less (but enough) bare flesh than in past flourishes, costumes are more lavish, pace over the 65-minute route is brisk and there's not a talent sag from flagfall to finish.

Title tips motif, Gallic. Opening production number benefits from lush costuming and an artfully lighted backdrop representing Arc d' Triomphe. Christine follows with vocal sesh, in French. She's best on "Autumn Leaves." Then, after another Left Bank-ed production number, she works with regular partner, Piroska, in acro dancing of faintly Apache design.

A full-stage splash pegged on the Versailles fountains provides another field day for gals and garbs and segues into hotel's ice rink (only one west of Las Vegas) rising and Dennis Parr doing one of his slick blade routines. Brings down the house.

Pat Dahl pops up in audience and songalogs as she walks the mike to bridge stage wait while ice is boxed and background cleared. A rather promising rhythm singer, long on looks, she is most effective on "Anyone For Love," but should have her arrangements toned down. There's hint she could increase her impact by going more intime in style.

Oscar Cartier, standup comic who lately has been working Ben Blue's boite on west end of town, has some bright lines—particularly in his "drunk" patter—and proves the most effective comedian Ashton has had in any of his shows here over the two-year haul.

Finale, into which whole company is mustered, has an opera motif, with the girls bewigged and hoop-skirted in the manner of Marie Antoinette era, minueting to "La Traviata" strains warbled with no flat notes by Miss Dahl. Usually Ashton closes with bare-flesh flourish. This switch proves most palatable, judging by palm-pats. Costuming obviously costly, was partly amortized when Ashton used routine some months last year at Bimbo's, San Francisco.

Skinnay Ennis' band, longtime and popular fixture here, plays exacting book for show flawlessly—and it is nice to note he's been given an added trumpeter, long needed. Ennis' dance book, dating back to era and style of Hal Kemp, always is a potent pull for frequenters of the Terrace Room.

Because he can offer such solid booking, Ashton is enabled to make deft talent deals, and in the process make a buck for himself. Whereas this revue at $3,500 is a whale of a buy for the hotel, Ashton—by virtue of playing time he can offer here and elsewhere—is getting Cartier for $450 weekly. Miss Dahl for $300. Linegirls get AGVA minimum of $100. Talent outlay, like cost of all that costuming, gets amortized in the Ashton ledgers, presided over by his partner and oftimes mentor, Wolf Kochmann. Was.

International, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

Jack Silverman has an interim bill until he starts with the heavy artillery. His current headliner is Johnny Howard who has long been absent from the Broadway haunts. Being held over are the Hi-Lads and the Boots McKenna production which provides a lively base for the show.

Howard is a veteran comic whose work indicates that his upbringing in the profession was as a toomler in the Catskills. He always seems to be working to keep one step, at least, ahead of his audience. He switches from stories to sight routines to songs in an act which keeps him moving. A lot of his material shows its genesis and some of it, its age. But, generally, Howard provides an entertaining session.

The Hi-Lads, with their instrumentals and vocals, stand up well. The Boots McKenna Line, with its Twist finale, spices the show considerably. Mike Durso showbacks well Jose.

Square East, N.Y.

Bernard Sahlins, Howard Alk & Paul Sills presentation of "Seacoast of Bohemia," a two act revue featuring Alk, Alan Arkin, Severn Darden, Andrew Duncan, Barbara Harris, Lynda Segal and Eugene Troobnick. Material by the company, David Shepherd and Roger Bowen; music, William Mathieu; staged by Sills and Arkin; settings, Larry Klein; lighting, Gary & Timmy Harris; at the piano, Garry Sherman. Opened Jan. 18, '62; $3.50 admission weekends, $2.75 weekdays.

Still involved in a jurisdictional dispute between Equity and AGVA, the Second City company opened in Square East, a newly-renovated Greenwich Village club of its own last Thursday (18). Under the title "From the Second City" (the name of the Chicago cabaret theatre from which it originated), the unit played a stint on Broadway this season and, after folding there, moved to the downtown location where it played unofficially until the club's formal unveiling last week.

On the main stem the company was naturally under Equity jurisdiction but moving to its present location where booze is available in a cabaret format, the show is now operating under AGVA authority. Equity's beef concerns one of its regulations which governs the length of time between which a folded Broadway show can reopen downtown.

Squabbles aside, however, the show and the new club, called Second City at Square East, are first rate. Working under the title "Seacoast of Bohemia" (the name of one of the group's turns in Chicago), the company of five guys and two gals scores consistently with topical and satirical skits, set in a bright and snappily-paced format.

Among the topics to come under the group's guns are nuclear testing, psychology, Charles Atlas muscle building, opera, men's clothing styles and their salesmen, the national administration and Russian relations, outspoken army brass and bomb shelters.

A talented and sharp cast keeps the material fresh and pointed. They are a polished group of performers whose quick wit and fast thinking make them entertaining during the improvisational bits in the show. Versatility is the key to the work of the individuals and in this category Severn Darden shines with hilarious cameo bits.

Alan Arkin likewise comes through with several laugh-provoking moments, being particularly sharp in the deadpan department. Andrew Duncan is a pleasant performer whose straightman routines work effectively and Howard Alk does well in his respective castings. Barbara Harris has a fine voice that gets buried for the most part during the show and her colorful exuberance is always delightful.

Lynda Segal displays some lithe and athletic talents, along with a rubber face which work effectively for laughs and Eugene Troobnick turns in some generally pleasant profiles. In all, this new edition from the Second City group leads one to believe that it perhaps should never have been brought to Broadway in the first place since the company seems more at home and scores to much stronger advantage in this intimate atmosphere which more closely resembles its Chicago origin.

Some nice work has also been done on the room, with a clever, multi-entrance stage setup, ample lighting facilities and a generally warm decor. The room itself is a barn of a place but has been designed in a tasteful manner that maintains the intimate feeling the group needs for maximum effectiveness. Both room and company show ample justification for all time, money and effort that appear to have been put into this venture. Kali.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Dec. 29.

Myron Cohen, Jimmy Blade Orch; $3 cover weekends, $2.50 weeknights.

Camellia House broke away from a straight thrust formula with Myron Cohen a little over a year ago, and his success at that time encouraged Drake veepee Ben Marshall to regularly intersperse the chantootsies with comics. In his first return engagement, Cohen remains one of the most engaging dialect raconteurs on the nitery circuit.

The ex-textile salesman has retained his most potent anecdotes and has garnished the act with a batch of fresh newies. (Of three of the stories, he relates that he had told them to two other comics at lunch a few weeks earlier—and he's keeping a city ahead of them.)

Cohen's characterizations of Yiddish types, such as doting grandparents, prideful parents and worried businessmen, ring unerringly true and are delivered with an ingratiating tolerance and sympathy for the human foibles of his characters.

Cohen also has a knack for touching several of the current nitery-comic standards by viewing them through borscht-tinted glasses, and the effect, in most cases, is to give them added dimension and warmth. He toys with a few stories in other dialects with moderate success. However, he's so much at home with the lower east side and garment district mannerisms and intonations that the side excursions sound only experimental.

Jimmy Blade purveys his usual terpworthy beat between shows.

Cohen is in for three weeks. Mor.

Shamrock, Houston

Houston, Jan. 11.

Jon & Sondra Steele, Dave Astor, K. Bert Sloan-Dick Krueger Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Jon & Sondra Steele, favorites here, again present a pleasing show in room only half filled preem night because of unusual sub-freezing weather. Couple harmonize well, and each shares spotlight in well-paced 48 minutes.

Red-haired Sondra has fine pipes, and easily changes mood to fit particular tune. At times she's a pixy, at others she's carrying the biggest torch this side of the Statue of Liberty, and then she's a shapely sexpot. Jon has an easy-going personality, and his solos at 88s were extended when auditors demanded more. Among selections are "Slaughter on 10th Ave" and "Polonaise."

Dave Astor, billed as the last of the angry young men, is more sharp than angry with his standup comedy. He's on a short 16 minutes, barely time to warm a cold audience, but leaves to heavy mitting. He explores stocks, unemployment, foreign cars, politics, population explosion and the United Nations, among other topical topics.

He says that the peace of the world depends on one man—the UN translator—then shows how it could work. Astor has an album in the works, and with a break here and there could rise as sharply as Bob Newhart, for his material is fresh and pointed.

The Sloan-Krueger Orch, one of the regulars here, is back on the stand, and again excellent in show backing and for dancing, with Krueger fronting and Sloan directing.

Show plays two frames, to be followed by Connie Haines and Jack Durant Jan. 25. Skip.

Living Room, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 2.

Beverly Aadland, Tommy Hazard, Joe Parnello Trio; $2.50 cover.

Beverly Aadland's Living Room engagement runs through the huge furniture convention in Chi, and it's possible that her curiosity value will benefit from the horde of conventioneers that descend upon Rush St. at that time. As it was, six paying customers turned out for her opening show.

Miss Aadland's opening number is "Lady Is a Tramp," sung, as are her other numbers, in a somewhat limited-range voice that tends to go flat at the higher levels. Although she shows some evidence of coaching in singing and stagecraft, she is sufficiently ill at ease to give her act a nervous tone.

Among her other numbers are "Will You Still Be Mine," "When Your Lover Has Gone," "Zing Went The Strings" and "It's All Right With Me." She handles them in a voice that ranges from pleasant to strident.

Opening the bill is Tommy Hazard, a fresh and promising young singer. He has a charming and ingratiating way with a song, scoring particularly well with a fine lyrical rendition of "Street Where You Live." He also delivers "Who Cares" and "You Make Me Feel So Young" with savvy, and clicks with a neatly-arranged "Winter Medley." Both singers are astutely backed by the Joe Parnello house trio.

Bill is in till Jan. 23. Mor.

Harrah's, Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, Jan. 6.

Red Skelton, Elkins Sisters (3), Dorothy Dorben Singers and Dancers (13), Leighton Noble Orch (15); produced by Art Barbow; $3 minimum.

Unlike other Reno-Tahoe talent buyers, Bill Harrah is continuing a year-round policy of booking only the top acts in show biz, and he's bringing in some of the more potent names during this off season to lure the spenders to this mile-high swankery. Again, this time in the person of Red Skelton, Harrah proves the policy pays off.

But this date, biz-wise, is a repeat of his Tahoe debut — full houses for both shows each night, despite a couple of nights of laryngitis when his voice completely failed and the headliner was forced to revert to a full hour of pantomime. Tablers, despite the lack of verbiage and the accent on panto, greeted the comic with standing ovations, not a common reception in this locale for any entertainer.

In this outing, Skelton again proves he's in a class alone as a pantomimist as he acts his trademarked characters and classic routines. Introed simply as "one of America's great clowns," he immediately commands full attention with topical one-liners, stories, and situation stuff, and never loses a minute in the hour-plus he's on.

Albeit some are vintage lines, the Skelton style makes the retelling all the more interesting. His panto bits include a new father ogling his child through a maternity ward window, a prospector bitten by a rattlesnake, a chef mixing a dinner salad, and his famed mimic of an old man watching a parade, which commands full silence and activates the lachrymal glands. His infectious laugh his emphatic delivery, his seriousness when needed, his mobile face and his smart material combine for superb entertainment.

Taking the opening spot on the show are the Elkins Sisters in "Symphony in Motion." The three offer difficult acro-terp routines with impresive precision and timing. Each also takes a solo spot for specialty contorting. Trio can be rated as top-league for any room.

Rosemary Clooney slated to open Jan. 25. Long.

Basin Street East, N. Y.

Fortunately Ella Fitzgerald hasn't succumbed entirely to The Twist. She winds her close to 60-minute act with a brief but driving nod to the dance craze with a rhythmic special material piece about "Ella won't Twist." It's enough and doesn't spoil the taste of the superb sonaglog that preceded.

Apologizing for a slight cold, which wasn't too noticeable, Miss Fitzgerald was as sure as ever with a repertoire that ranged from her trademarked "A Tisket A Tasket" to her more recent disclick, "Mack The Knife." In between, she mixes up ballads and rhythm with delightful vocal techniques that keep the tablers happy and appreciative.

It's a long set for a thrush who puts so much into a song interpretation but "The Lorelei," "It Was Just One of Those Things," "Bewitched," "All Of Me," "Mr. Paganini" and "I've Got A Crush On You" seldom sounded better.

The Paul Smith Trio (piano, bass and drums) supplies the nifty backing that allows her to go through her pace without any trouble.

The Ray Bryant Trio precedes the headliner with a slick 30-minute session. Bryant's keyboard leads his bass and drum accomp through a varied repertoire but his "Little Suzie," a Columbia disclick still stands out. Gros.

Bal Tabarin, London

London, Jan. 2.

Diana Dors (with Danny Turner); Dickie Dawson; Frank Weir Orch. $7.50 minimum.

Paul Raymond, best known for his nudie shows and his strip revues at the Raymond Revuebar in Soho, has moved into the more elegant nitery field with this intimate restaurant in Hanover Square. He's set his sights high by opening the spot with Diana Dors and having booked Buddy Greco, Billy Daniels, Rose Murphy and Mel Torme as subsequent attractions.

As there is an obvious need for a late night spot in London with name talent, Raymond's new venture has every chance of success, though inevitably he will encounter the booking problem that has confronted other restaurateurs over the years—the shortage of name attractions which are available at an economic price.

Raymond is trying to ease the financial load by having separate dinner and supper shows, and therefore may be able to attract double the normal capacity of about 130. On opening night (New Year's Day) there was no choice of menu although that will undoubtedly be revised in the future. At $7.50 the room is reasonably priced by West End standards.

Strange as it may seem, this engagement marks Miss Dors' first West End appearance in cabaret, although she made her cafe debut in London at the nabe Room at the Top in Ilford last summer. On this occasion, however, the intro honors were handled by her husband Dickie Dawson, who raises a few mild laughs with his comedy patter. Sensibly he doesn't attempt to hold the floor too long and quickly makes way for the main attraction.

Miss Dors, in a bizarre gown, which can best be described by a male reviewer as a semi-crinoline of gold lame over a black velvet sheath, holds the stage for half an hour and keeps the best part of her routine to the end. She's strictly a personality gal and needs loads of special material. Instead, she delivers a succession of pops and standards, adequately sung but little more.

Among the items in her catalog, for example, are "Ain't Necessarily So," "Put on a Happy Face," "Come Rain or Come Shine" and "Almost Like Being in Love." Towards the end of her stint, the star does a chorus from "Wouldn't it be Loverly," then proceeds with versions of that number as might be delivered by Eartha Kitt, Mae West, Marlene Dietrich and Lena Horne. The routine is loaded with sharp takeoffs and there is a biting satirical touch to some of them.

Miss Dors will certainly bring the customers in and that's the first essential for any entertainer. But the customer, once inside, deserves a better performance than offered on opening night.

Resident combo at the Bal Tabarin is headed by Frank Weir, well known aronnd West End night spots. A bright and lively unit, it's handsomely suited to this intimate room. With Danny Turner sitting in at the ivories for Miss Dors' stint, the orch gave out with virile backing. Dance time sessions were in lively style. Myro.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, Dec. 29.

George Gobel, Sylte Sisters (3), Ben Arden Orch; $3 cover.

George Gobel's Chi engagements are always in the nature of triumphal returns, since it was from the Windy City that the ex-country & western singer broke into the big time. His current Empire Room stint is no exception, drawing large and appreciative crowds for both the opening night shows.

Gobel's portrayal of the travails of the little man beset by domineering females, arrogant bartenders and pushy cemetery lot salesmen strikes an immediate and responsive chord with the auditors. Even his anecedotes of high living in Las Vegas and Miami Beach are astutely tempered by his hayseed approach.

Comic also demonstrates a charming legituner voice in his rendering of "Own Little Island" from "Let It Ride," the short-lived musical comedy in which he starred, and in "There Was A Young Man," a spoof of barroom ballads.

Incorporated into his act are the Sylte Sisters, a vocal trio composed of Joan and twins Deanna and Deanda. They're a charming and fresh-looking threesome, but apparently in need of more seasoning.

Their vocal and personality projection is weak, and their song salesmanship captures the tablers only intermittently. Girls team up with Gobel in "Tumbling Tumbleweed," and take over on their own for "Hey Look Me Over," "Mack The Knife" and impreshes of other female singing trios.

Ben Arden's house orch backs the bill impressively and delivers some of the finest dance music around town. Mor.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

Comedienne-singer Dorothy Louden, a favorite with the sophisticated audiences at this eastside nitery, headlines a bill that offers as much bright satire as a lot of the revues current in town.

The high-spirited performer has some new material that is fracturing SRO auds, notably a devastating takeoff on Shirley Temple and a number in which she brilliantly apes the song styles of femme singers from the torchy belters to hip progressive jazz stylists.

Peter, Paul & Mary, twin-bearded guys and a svelt, straight-haired blonde, are a folk group with the distinction of sounding unlike the Kingston Trio. With guitar accomp by Peter and Paul, the trio presents a fine book of melodic and rarely-heard folk tunes, and adds mightily to the night's comedy with a wicked parody of "Old Dog Blue" as jazzed up for rock-and-roll presentation on the Dick Clark "Button Up Your Button" show. Lead singer contributes some sports car and plane imitations for sock variety.

Rounding out the bill is French singer Hughes Aufray. He's not much in the voice department, but projects with fine Parisian charm and dramatics. His rendition in French and English of the Ray Charles hit, "Hallelujah!, I Love Her So," is a crowning touch to the bill's high comedy. Bill.

Ritz Carlton, Mont'l

Montreal, Jan. 5.

Odette Myrtil, Johnny Gallant, Paul Notar Trio; $1.50-$2 cover.

The New Year in the Ritz Cafe opens with Odette Myrtil, a fave in this room and still one of the more personable performers to appear here. Long associated with musicomedies, she is splitting her time now between the occasional nitery stint and a class eatery in Pennsylvania.

Her return to the entertainment field packs the same wallop as on previous stanzas; her flamboyant manner and largesse are ever present and despite a somewhat thin room on night caught convinced throughout.

Material, for the most part, is a repeat of other performances but this time around she has enlarged a sequence from "South Pacific," doing a hefty segment from her Bloody Mary role and two of the durable tunes from this score.

Backing Miss Myrtil in fine style is Paul Notar and his group plus pianist Johnny Gallant who also split dansapation sets between shows.

Fernanda Montel is slated to follow Miss Myrtil. Newt.

Ben Soir, N.Y.

Betty Kean & Lew Parker, Karen Chandler, Three Flames, Burke McHugh; $5 minimum.

Top of the current bill is wife-husband comedy team of Betty Kean and Lew Parker. In support is singer Karen Chandler (in a return) with arranger husband Jack Pleis backing on piano. As for the audience at the Jan. 2 opener, it was saturated with pre friends of the performers, prompting a score of intros and a remark from Miss Chandler, "It's like playing my own liivng room."

Needless to say, the papa-mama jokes abound with Kean & Parker (she formerly of the Kean Sisters and he a vet from the vaud boards). It's not the kind of situation comedy that plays American living rooms via television, but it's mostly fine for this intime that generally manages to combine sophistication and sawdust in its shows.

Best of the team's skits is papa and mama on the town with mama lushing it up in a broadly farcical style. The bit, as do the others, comes across mainly through Miss Kean's zesty, manic actions and Parker's quipping dispair. It's raucous and blue but tres sportif for late crowds and especially for the friends of the talent. A husband-wife bedroom bit was too ripe and too square by any standard, however.

Miss Chandler is the sort of enthusiastic shouter the Bon Soir aud digs, and she's added a twist (the dance) to the act. Her best number, a real change of pace, is a special-material thing on group therapy that she projects with a fine comedy touch. Bill.

New Acts

PETER PIT
Comedy Magician
18 Mins.
Astor Hotel, N.Y.

A bright lad from Amsterdam, Netherlands, Peter Pit has the makings to go far in hotel rooms such as this one and in some nightclubs. He is the smartest talent on the new bill at the Hotel Astor, and was heavily mitted for his work. Pit tees off with a rather involved description of a mole and the hole the former dug. Only sad commentary is that half the audience at the Astor failed to appreciate this.

From this, the young man goes on to illustrate different types of holes, with vigorous patter to accompany same. Pit then segues into an explanation of how he formerly was an amateur magico, and how he would like to expose some tricks. His work with a giant playing card in making it change its spots from the three of spades to the eight of spades; then into the four of spades and then the seven is all the more baffling because done right close to the eyes of the auditors.

His routine with an imaginary deck of cards just misses because a bit too fanciful for a nightclub crowd. But the suddenly appearing walking sticks and his stunt of making one of these swing in mid-air is solid stuff that clicks mightily.

A personable youth with clear diction, he should become much better for American audiences as soon as he tightens his routines. As is, he will be welcome in most rooms. Wear.

SHEER & MENAHEM
Songs
30 Mins.
Colonial, Toronto

Accenting flamenco singing but doing solo stepouts and duet harmonizing in different languages, Anita Sheer and Jacques Menahem, teamed professionally, were previously singles in European and American cafes. Each works with Spanish guitar. On ability and appearance, couple are drawing strong weekends at 400-capacity dining and drinking stand.

Manhattan-born girl and French partner display main strength in the flamenco style but have a repertory of songs in Spanish, French, Greek, Italian, Hebrew, Russian and Rumanian. Using own arrangements, these are, alternately, fiery or tender in delivery. They are on four times nightly for 30-mins. stints, with 45-mins. breaks.

Miss Sheer, a pupil in Spain for two years of the flamenco-singing Carlos Montoya, has appeared on the BBC. Gary Moore and Jack Paar shows. Previously, she majored in fine arts at Oberlin College and is a qualified schoolteacher with a B.A. Menahem attended U. of Athens in Greece, later took post-graduate work in European literature at the Sorbonne, has appeared in Carnegie Hall. McStay.

NADINA
Dance
15 Mins.
Frolic, Revere, Mass.

Nadina is a Bostonian of Lebanese descent and has mastered the art of authentic Arabic terp. She's a looker, and slim with flashing dark eyes. She gives her twist and twine routines plenty of class. Nadina gets full audience concentration.

Out for only a short time, she's been working the better clubs in the east, and has been auditioned for a couple of Broadway shows. Looks a great bet for all visual situations and a natural for Oriental dancer roles. Guy.

ROSALIE DUBOIS
Songs
20 Mins.
Olympia, Paris

Rosalie Dubois resembles a hefty, healthy version of Edith Piaf. But her belting and plaints are well thought out. Miss Dubois stands firmly and just socks out her songs of love and desire.

Enunciation is good and her voice big. But there is a tendency to trill and roll the endings that only imitate Miss Piaf. But there is a fresh sincerity and drive in Miss Dubois which should have her an okay staple here. Mosk.

LOS CASTELLANOS
Dances
20 Mins.
Mayan Theatre, Los Angeles

Making their first public appearance as a unit in L.A.'s Mayan Theatre, one of the last outposts of vaudeville and entertainment hub (cinema alternating with three stageshows daily) for the city's large Mexican community, this Flamencan group of three dancers and a guitarist impresses with a brisk display of technical skill and flash in the classic idiom. Within the familiar, patented choreography of their art, they work with assurance and a devout appreciation for the pure and classic patterns of the form.

What's missing, for the most part, at this beginning juncture in their history as a team, and certainly a most vital requirement for commercial success if they are to aspire to the U.S. nitery big-time (their acknowledged goal) is a greater emphasis on spectacular, crowd-pleasing showmanship, on establishment of a unique, personal identity of style, and on dramatic storytelling within the framework of their specialized technical artistry.

From the rigid, academic standpoint of pure dance aficionados, such a de-emphasis of basic mechanical values may represent a compromise to business interests, but actually there need be no significant loss of art to tell a story, and to show off doing it. Art, oft-times, is only as effective as the audience that senses and appreciates it.

The small company performs four colorful numbers, including the traditional Zapateado (or heel dance), breaking for a costume change to enable guitarist Carlos Rubio to offer a solo of the inevitable "Malaguena," on which he displays some especially deft phrasing and a delicate touch, though slightly shy perfect fingering clarity. The dancers are Miguel Santos (the organizer), Carlos Montero and Margarita Reina. It is an act endowed with the relish and potential of youth. The two men are Spanish, and have compiled vast experience with various touring Flamencan concert companies, including Jose Greco's. The girl, a young and attractive local addition, foregoes the customary fire-eyed sorcery of the Flamencan senorita for a more jubilant, light and innocent style of expression. They work together with taste and precision.

The act is introduced as of Spanish origin, an asset for presentation, especially before Mexican audiences, to whom Spanish performers, somewhat ironically, represent a curious kind of aristocratic prestige. — VIP's from the home office, as it were. Tube.

PENNY PRYOR
Songs
20 Mins.
Eddys, Kansas City, Mo.

One of more comely gal singers to appear at Eddys' in recent months, Penny Pryor is making her initial stand in this area here. She shares the bill with comic Dick Lynn. Miss Pryor has an unusually good pop appeal and works it out on a wealth of songs and material. Her opener is "Let's Have Fun," and it's original. Pert, auburn-haired miss warbles a wide range of numbers from a Basin Street medley to "I'll Remember April."

As a change of pace, she takes a song from the Debbie Reynolds mold, and for contrast offers a laughable impression of Roberta Sherwood. Her finale is "You Need Hands" in which the house joins her for a rousing finish. Miss Pryor's singing looks to be a pleaser on any bill. After her own turn, she came back later to help in the informal twist session staged by Dick Lynn. Miss Pryor has been playing major spots in Vegas, Chi and other cities, but somehow has missed the VARIETY files till now. Quin.

THE NOTE-ABLES (4)
Songs, Comedy, Music
20 Mins.
Isy's, Vancouver, B.C.

The Note-Ables, four local lads, formerly were known as The Van Four. As such, they have never previously been New Acted. Professional experience has been garnered in the last two years. Change in name was necessitated when quartet went to Eastern Canada several months ago and ran into billing confusion with long-established Billy Van Four of Toronto. New tag came from manager Paul Simmons, who books the boys out of Toronto.

Name change aside, the four boys have returned as a polished harmony group, with good control and varied arrangements. Vocal-instrumental quartet is composed of leader Richard Barker, who plays alto sax; Keith Nowell, trombone; and Don Buchanan and Garth O'Bray, trumpets. Boys are all cleancut and neat in their appearance.

The Note-Ables have a strong opening with "Crazy Rhythm," and follow with special harmony arrangement of "Almost Like Being in Love." A spiritual medley includes "Down By Riverside," "Whole World in His Hands" and "Saints Go Marching In." Quartet has a comedy sequence with "Marie." Group encores with "I Love You So," with instrumental solos from all four which had club customers roaring.

Group's harmony is firstrate and instrumental work is well-timed, but comedy needs much strengthening. With just a bit more staging and showmanship, this quartet has the ability to click as singers alone and might best discard their gimmicks unless they can obtain material from a top writer. Shaw.

Ice Follies

"Shipstads and Johnson Ice Follies of 1962," produced by Eddie and Roy Shipstad & Oscar Johnson; choreography, Fran Claudet; direction, Stanley Kahn; costumes, Renie; musical director, George Hackett; music, Larry Morey; emcee, Paul Gannon. Features Ina Bauer, Janet Champion, Mr. Frick, Jill Shipstad, Barbara Myers, Carol Caverly, the Jacobys (2), Meldrum Twins (2), Lee Carroll, the Beattys (2), Kermond Bros. (2), Wall & Dova, The Scarecrows (3), Carroll & Clark, Dusseau & Doris. Opened Jan. 9, 1962, at Madison Square Garden, N.Y.; $5 top.

The 1962 edition of Shipstads and Johnson's "Ice Follies" is a sock outing from start to finish. With everything one could expect to find in an ice show and even a few surprises, this 26th stanza of the annual touring pageant is slick and skillful entertainment throughout.

A blend of colorful and imaginative creation and polished performances, both individual and ensemble, the show often challenges the old saw, "What can you do that's new in an ice show?" For one thing you can do The Twist on ice, and when it's done by young and attractive Jill Shipstad (producer's daughter), it even looks worthwhile.

Production numbers have new lighting and costume effects as illustrated by a jazz sequence in which the skaters appear to be performing in an old silent flicker. Things also move at such a crisp and entertaining pace that no one really cares if he's seen similar shows before because it all has a new, fresh and imaginative look about it.

This edition of the "Ice Follies" is well-designed physically by Dale Hennesy, and staged and choreographed with imagination and skill by Fran Claudet and Stanley Kahn. Also rating bows are Renie for colorful and creative costuming and Charles Skillings for effective lighting.

Performances are top-flight. Ina Bauer is a skillful, graceful and pretty skater who often dazzles in the "Winter Fable" seg of the program. Janet Champion is another dazzler with mucho dynamics in the "Rhythm of the City" number while Barbara Myers also shows skill with the blades. Although not given as much skating room as some performers, Carol Caverly impresses with her looks and skating grace as the shapely slugger in the ballgame sequence. Lee Carroll also turns in an attractive and polished performance.

In the comedy department, and there's plenty of that, the Kermond Bros. demonstrate acrobatic comic skills. Likewise, the expert stylings of Mr. Frick, the laugh-provoking spoofing of the Beattys and some good bits by Wall & Dova all score. Among the funniest of ice comedy groups to slide into view in a long time is The Scarecrows whose slick clowning is a constant treat.

A precision femme duo, the Meldrums, show some talented work as do a ballroom skating team, the Jacobys, whose grace and skill make it all look easy. Richard Dwyer, teaming with Miss Carroll, shows skill on another precision duo turn. And, of course, there's always that playful four-legged animal, this time a bull played by Doug Sears and Dick Cooper, for the audience's amusement.

Standout production numbers include "Inky's Magic Circus," a cleverly-designed affair in which skaters are costumed as giant teddy bears, clowns, etc. The audience participation bits throughout the show go over with their usual success. There are 16 numbers in all, several dazzlers from a production standpoint alone, not to mention the performances.

"Ice Follies" will be at the Garden through next Sunday (21). It then swings north and west on its way back to its Hollywood base. Withal, it's a smooth and polished event that's bright and exciting from start to finish. Kalk.

Music Hall, N. Y.

Russell Markert presentation of "Salut a la France" with Yves Tomas, Nicolyn Emanuel, Shirley Weaver, Kay Wilmette, Rockettes (choreographed by Markert), Corps de Ballet (Margaret Sande, director), Symphony Orch, (Raymond Paige, director); "A Majority of One" (WB) reviewed in VARIETY Nov. 16, '61.

---

Radio City Music Hall has cut down the stage proceedings for this event because of the abnormally long running time of "Majority of One." In fact, it's just about enough to keep the franchise. But what is done is tasteful and at times, swinging. The inspiration for the present show is the forthcoming maiden voyage of the S.S. France.

The big feature this trip is the product supervised by Russell Markert who has created a "Can Can" finale which is probably the one of the most colorful dances done by the Rockettes in some time. The costumes, plus, the choreography, have flash, style and vigor along with the feel of tradition. The movement is, of course, in the accepted groove. But the application is fresh and interesting. It gives the show a most powerful windup.

The opening is a tasteful bit of ballet against a Corot background. It's a delicately executed bit with Nicolyn Emanuel, Shirley Weaver and Kay Wilmette fronting this tutu trot.

Yves Tomas is the vocal soloist this session. A vigorous voiced import from France, he is a capable and personable singer. But in his short span on stage it would have been to his advantage to dwell on more familiar numbers to establish himself.

His vocal quality is good and asserts itself readily. A vocal group backgrounds him in a finale.

The symph, this session, does a French medley with a solo by Jean Jacques Perrey who plays an Ondioline, an organlike instrument, which makes a rather agreeable sound. Batoning is by Raymond Paige. Jose.

Olympia, Paris

Paris, Jan. 8.

Vince Taylor, Henri Tisot, Rosalie Dubois, Double Six (6), Hall, Norman & Ladd, Joy & Kay, Sylvie Vartan, Arthur Plasschaert Ballet (9), Jean Harold, Daniel Janin Orch (21), Jean-Marie Proslier; $2.75 top.

---

Vince Taylor is a Yank rock and roll singer practically unknown in the U. S. but with an okay name in Britain. Savvily built up here by Barclay Records, and recipient of solid publicity when a riot at a recent r'n'r concert never even let him get on, he is now heading a vaude show which should be in for good biz in its three weeks.

Taylor essays a leather shirt and trousers with gloves to match. He clutches a golden bicycle chain. With rings and chain necklaces, cowboy boots, long sideburns and long hair, he squirms, grinds, twists and blasts his way through his songalog of agonized pleadings and demands for love, freedom and power. In short, he shrewdly make up a composite figure of the by now conventional delinquent.

His inflections and voice fit into rock patterns and he writhes, falls on the floor, mishandles the mike and, generally, gives a clever if surface demonstration of rock excesses. He is drawing a fairly staid audience at this house who do not respond much to his gyrations.

Taylor is well backed by the Playboys (4), a zingy rhythm group, and looks in for a career here as long as the rock lasts. He wisely drags in The Twist too and gives a good rendition of it.

Henri Tisot has parlayed himself into a second slot spot and a big record seller by cannily imitating President de Gaulle. By changing his talks to innocuous studies of dancing or traffic he gets howls from the French. But the first bite and surprise are over and he looks to be waning.

Rosalie Dubois belts out songs of love and need in the Edith Piaf manner, but is far from the depth and talents of her model. However, she has a sincerity and drive that rate her a New Act cataloging. Double Six do jazz songs vocally which are somewhat too precious but benefit from a good musical sense.

Hall, Norman & Ladd do a deadpan music recital with fall-away clothes and breakaway instruments full of British phlegm and understatement. It's a hokey but pertinent house act that gets its usual vocks.

Joy & Kay has a little clown opening a box and unfolding a long, contorted figure which he bends into all sorts of forms and then stuffs back into the box. It turns out to be a lean, good looking miss. It is a fine filler.

Sylvie Vartan, an adolescent twist and rock singer with a breaking voice, is much too pallid in personality and projection to register in this sphere. She is more for boites than houses.

Jean Harold projects slides in which the heads of well known personalities are put on incongruous figures. A smart commentary and inventively composed shots make this a neat offbeat act.

Arthur Plasschaert Ballet does some electric bouncy dance interludes that gives the show a good production gloss, while Daniel Janin Orch does good backing medleys. Program is emceed by rotund Jean-Marie Proslier who adds some witty patter before each turn. It shapes a well mounted stanza. Mosk.

tume-makeup and hair tests for her role as Madame Lulu, the Great Indian Mystic, in "Jumbo," noting it is the first test she has made since 1936 when she tested at MGM for a picture with Billy Gray, though it was not filmed. She noted filmmaking has changed greatly since she was last before feature cameras. Major differences are in time, she said, calling it much like television because people work so much faster today. Other than unusually big pix, she said schedules are shorter and requirements are greater. For instance, she said she has 21 costume changes for the Lulu role, as well as specialty "Statue of Liberty" and "clown" sequences in the picture, and noted designer Morton Haack had to do the costumes in three weeks whereas they would have taken two or three times as much time in earlier days.

Comedienne has been on payroll for three weeks, working with vocal coach Bobby Tucker on songs "Why Can't I?," "Circus on Parade" and "Spangles; Sawdust and Dreams," which she does in the film. She has also been training for trapeze work and for stint she does as human cannonball (though she doesn't expect to be shot out of the cannon).

5 Flops on B'way Took 600G Loss

The casualty count on Broadway rocketed the last fortnight with the fast fold of five productions, representing a combined loss of around $600,000. The shows for which the number of performances ranged from seven to 24, were "Captains and the Kings," "The Egg," "First Love," "Giants, Sons of Giants" and "Something About a Soldier."

"Love" ran the longest of the four entries, closing last Saturday night (13) after three full weeks at the Morosco Theatre. The Roger L. Stevens-Frederick Brisson presentation of Samuel Taylor's play, based on Romain Gary's memoir, "Promise at Dawn," was capitalized at $187,500. The play, in which Lili Darvas succeeded Elizabeth Bergner as Hugh O'Brian's costar, is figured to have involved a total expenditure of about $200,000, including losses out-of-town and on Broadway.

However, the loss on "Love" was reduced to about $75,000 with the production's $126,000 share of income from the sale of the film rights to 20th-Fox for $350,000. The production's slice of the picture coin represents 40% less 10% commissions. Last Saturday night also marked the termination of "The Egg" after eight performances at the Cort Theatre. "Giants" after nine performances at the Alvin Theatre, and "Soldier" after 12 performances at the Ambassador Theatre.

The three shows are figured to have run through their entire investments. "The Egg," a translation by Robert Schlitt of Felicien Marceau's play, was produced by Zev Bufman, Alexander Ince and Pierre Cosette on a capitalization of $120,000. An attempt is being made by the producers to reopen the show off-Broadway.

"Giants," in which Nancy Kelly and Claude Dauphin costarred, was financed at $109,000, including 15% overcall. The Joseph Kramm play was co-produced by Charles A. Totero and William Cioffi. "Soldier," the Theatre Guild-Dore Schary presentation of Ernest Kinoy's adaptation of a novel by Mark Harris, was capitalized at $125,000, including 25% overcall. Sal Mineo, Kevin McCarthy and Ralph Meeker costarred in that production.

"Captains," the Paul Gregory production presented by Theatre Guild Productions and Joel Schenker, ended a seven-performance stand Jan. 6 at the Playhouse. Dana Andrews, Charlie Ruggles, Peter Graves, Conrad Nagel and Lee Grant costarred in the Leo Lieberman play, which is figured to represent a loss of around $175,000. Prior to opening in New York, the production played to generally poor business during a nine-week hinterland tour.

The list of Broadway shows was also reduced last Saturday night (13) by the departure of "Do Re Mi," which began a road tour last night (Tues.) at the O'Keefe Centre, Toronto. The David Merrick production, in which Phil Silvers stars, is figured to have a deficit at this time of about $170,000 on its $400,000 investment. The musical ran 50 weeks on Broadway.

SAYS OFF-B'WAY ISN'T WORTH EQUITY'S WORK

Off-Broadway is an administrative burden for Actors Equity. That's the opinion of Win Mayo, the union's new bonding secretary and representative. It's his tentative estimate that nearly half of the time and effort of Equity representatives has to be expended in processing and policing off-Broadway productions, in which less than 300 members work each week.

The off-Broadway employment tally represents about 11% of the total weekly employment of Equity members, which has been running around 2,700 recently.

STAFF FOR 'TAKE HER'

The staff for "Take Her, She's Mine," which opened on Broadway last week, includes Carl Fisher, general manager; Ruth Mitchell, production stage manager, and Paul Phillips, stage manager.

The three have long been associated with Harold S. Prince, producer of the comedy, and his late partner, Robert E. Griffith.

Dick Rector to Produce 'Between Lines' on B'way

Richard R. Rector, formerly in the network operations department of CBS and now vice-president of VHF Inc., a television packaging firm, intends becoming a Broadway producer next fall with "Between the Lines," a musical with book, lyrics and music by William Stuart Wheeling.

The show is to preem in April at the World's Fair in Seattle. VHF will have a financial interest in the musical.

To Build 2 New Houses For Chicago's Southside; Drury Lane Expanding

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Ground will be broken this spring for two new legit theatres on the far southside, both intended for stock presentations but suitable also for roadshows if the era of the decentralized theatre ever comes to pass. Each is expected to be completed by the spring of 1963, one at the southwest end of town and the other at the southeast.

The Drury Lane management revealed last week that it will construct a 1,500-seat auditorium adjoining its present house, to make possible the production of musicals. In its present 630-seat arena downstairs in the Martinique Theatre, it is necessarily restricted to simple productions of straight plays. The new house is expected to cost in excess of $1,000,000. It will have a "floating wall" to reduce seating capacity for straight plays requiring intimacy.

The other is to be a 1,000-seat house with a proscenium stage, located in South Chicago and drawing from the suburban communities thereabouts as well as from Gary, Hammond and Whiting, Ind. It's being built in conjunction with a new restaurant, Palos Supper Club, emulating the Drury Lane operation vis-a-vis the Martinique.

Although the project has not yet been announced, it's understood the theatre is to be leased to a legit operator. The group of investors is headed by Jerry Lenza, who once managed the restaurant, El Bianco.

The new construction, along with five out-of-the-Loop theatres that went up in the past year and one other currently being built in the Marina City project, constitutes the greatest boom in new legit real estate here in several decades. In round numbers, the eight new outlying houses will represent a total investment of close to $9,000,000.

The other new houses, already in operation, are the Arie Crown and the Little Theatre at McCormick Place, the Happy Medium, Playwrights at Second City and the Theatre of Western Springs.

Drury Lane, incidentally, will convert its present 630-seat theatre into banquet rooms when the new structure is completed.

Rename Bob Bishop Prez Of Musical Tent Group

Robert H. Bishop 3d, president of the Musicarnival, Cleveland, was reelected president of the Musical Arena Theatres Assn. at its recent annual meeting in New York. David Marshall Holtzmann, attorney and managing director of the Cape Cod Melody Tent, Hyannis, Mass., was re-elected vice-president of the association, whose membership comprises musical tent theatres throughout the U.S.

Elected as respective treasurer and secretary were Stephen Slane and Gurney Kranz. Slane is managing director of the North Shore Music Theatre, Beverly, Mass., and Kranz is manager of the Niagara Melody Fair, North Tonawanda, N.Y. Edward Lutz and Robert Carr whe head their own certified public accounting firm, were reappointed executive directors of the organization, for which Max Eisen is pressagent.

The board of directors includes Benjamin H. Segal, producer of the Oakdale Musical Theatre, Wallingford, Conn.; St. John Terrell, producer of the Music Circus, Lambertville, N.J.; Herb Rogers, producer of the Chicago Music Theatre, Highland Park, Ill., and the officers of the organization, Bishop, Holtzmann, Kranz and Slane.

South Africa's Lively Legit Year: An Exporter, Not Just Importer

By EVELYN LEVISON

Johannesburg, Jan. 16.

The year 1961 was an enriching one for theatre in South Africa. Visiting artists from different corners of the globe enlivened the scene. Audiences responded to the stimulus of new faces; home-lot players profited from the experience of acting with, or being directed by prominent show biz personages from abroad.

Dame Flora Robson and Canadian actor Robert Beatty embarked early 1961 on an extensive tour of the Republic (then still the Union of South Africa) in Leonard Schach's production of "The Aspern Papers" after being acclaimed for their performances at the Hofmeyr Theatre, Cape Town, and The Playhouse, Johannesburg.

Schach, who runs both houses, was responsible for some of the most outstanding theatrical fare staged here in 1961, including "The Caretaker," which totalled a run of 10 months (touring centres both large and small from the Cape to the borders of the Congo), "The Miracle Worker" and "The Tenth Man." His customary midyear trip to Europe in search of new plays led to the engagement of Netherlands actor Cruys Voorbergh, who arrived in September with his showpiece "Lady Barker's Last Appearance," a gimmick thriller in which the artist displayed considerable virtuosity by taking three different parts.

While in London, Schach bought the rights of the revue, "Beyond The Fringe," and staged the first presentation outside Britain at the Hofmeyr in October with four local actors, Siegfried Mynhardt, Leon Eagles, Nigel Hawthorne and David Beattie. Confounding all predictions that the show's satirical and highly topical material would prove too specialized for South African audiences, "Beyond The Fringe" was hailed by critics and public and is lined up for a six-month tour. Schach also contracted British comedienne Beryl Reid to head a specially devised Christmas show comprising items from her revue repertoire.

As an impressive start to the Hofmeyr's 1962 season, which opens in February, he has booked a return visit of Flora Robson who will take the part of Miss Moffat in a revival of Emlyn Williams' moving Welsh play "The Corn Is Green." In the role of Morgan Evans, which the author himself played in the original London production, we shall be seeing his son Brook Williams, deemed a clever piece of casting on the part of Schach.

Members of the French community throughout the Republic, and all lovers of the French language, welcomed a second visit from the Theatre D'Union Culturelle de Paris, which on this occasion varied its repertoire of classics with such modern offerings as the recent Parisian comedy hit "Patate." Jacques Eyser, of the Comedie Francaise, headed the cast.

Rosalind Fuller's one-woman recitals, first presented in Johnnesburg by the Kushlick-Gluckman management in 1960, were returned for National Theatre.

Leon Gluckman and Taubie Kushlick scored a hit when they presented Jerome Kilty and Cavada Humphrey in Kilty's adaption of the G. B. Shaw-Mrs. Pat Campbell letters, "Dear Liar."

Gluckman took time off to revamp the overseas version of "King Kong" and accompany it to London at the beginning of the year, and to return to Britain later to direct same show for television. Taubie Kushlick preceded "Dear Liar" with a highly successful hotted-up, bikini-slanted revival of "The Women;" and Gluckman followed it up with a not-so-successful production of "The Fantasticks." Despite a couple of enthusiastic notices, notably from the Sunday Times critic, this off-beat musical never quite caught on.

Partners offered at their intimate, 170-seater, two locally-written efforts. First, for a limited season, came "The Blood Knot" by Athol Fugard, a stark and savage portrait of two brothers, one near-white in appearance, the other unmistakably African, bound together by a bond far deeper and more fundamental than normal family ties. The second local offering—like "The Fantasticks", a musical with a difference — was "The Red Silk Umbrella," with book and lyrics by Johannesburg drama critic James Ambrose Brown, and music by Arthure Evans.

Repertory

Johannesburg Repertory Players, which undertakes to provide its membership with a minimum of seven shows a year (these are also open to the general public) at the 500-seater Alexander Theatre, tried out an experiment in 1961 with National Theatre Organization. Later presented three of the seven plays. One of these, "Time To Kill," a thriller written by radio man Monte Doyle, gave South Africa its second opportunity in a year ("King Kong" was the first) to export theatrical material instead of importing it. Retitled "Signpost To Murder," the play was bought by Emile Littler and opened a pre-West End tour at Oxford in November with Margaret Lockwood, Derek Farr and Ian Hunter in leading roles, and Hugh Goldie, who was responsible for the Johannesburg production, as director. Sets for the staging in Britain were designed by the Reps' production manager Roy Cooke at Emile Littler's request. Other Johannesburg Rep offerings included two recent West End successes, "The Amorous Prawn"—a boxoffice hit not only at the Alexander but also on tour, and "Billy Liar," both directed by Victor Melleney.

Of the National Theatre plays, one was of special note since it brought Margaret Webster from America (under subsidy of U.S. Cultural Exchange) to direct Eugene O'Neill's "A Touch Of The Poet," and South African actress Marde Vanne back from London to play the part of Nora Melody. The tour, which ended in November, was well received even in centres not normally enthusiastic about legit theatre. Interest throughout the country was considerably enhanced by Miss Webster's entertaining lectures and recitals on Shaw and Shakespeare, and her comments on theatre over the air.

For the sixth year in succession, an al fresco Shakespearean play was presented at Maynardville in the Cape by two enterprising Cape Town theatre personalities, Cecilia Sonnenberg and Rene Ahrenson. Five of the six plays have been directed by well-known British Shakespearean actor, Leslie French who again made his annual summer pilgrimage to South Africa to direct an imaginative production of "Twelfth Night" and to play Feste, the role in which he appeared at London's Old Vic with Sir John Gielgud as Malvolio and Sir Ralph Richardson as Sir Toby Belch. Maynardville, originally the grounds of a gracious old homestead in the wooded suburb of Wynberg, five miles from the centre of Cape Town, was purchased some years ago by the City Council and thrown open as a public park. Cecila Sonnenberg and Rene Ahrenson received civic blessing to present an annual Shakespearean production in this natural setting, where comfortable seating accommodations for more than 600 were arranged on a gentle slope towards a raised lawn stage, with excellent lighting and a first-class sound system. Maynardville is now recognized as a highlight of the Cape Summer season and great support is received from the schools, both white and colored pupils responding eagerly to the appeal of the outdoor productions.

Another Cape highlight is the annual summer presentation of "Son Et Lumiere" at the Castle of Good Hope, sponsored by the French Assn., for the Preservation of Historical Monuments with the assistance of the South African Broadcasting Corp. Bernard Bertrand, the clever young French creator of most of the famous Son Et Lumiere spectacles in Europe made trips to the Republic in 1959 and 1960 to direct all aspects of the production which, through the medium of sound and light, unfolds with tremendous drama and effect, the story of the ancient fortress from the time its foundation stone was laid in 1666.

At the Lyric, Durban's only permanent professional theatre, a varied programme of overseas successes is offered, ranging last year from the farce "Simple Spymen," which scored a notable hit at London's Whitehall Theatre, to "The Entertainer" by John Osborne.

Durban theatregoers were the first to view "The King Of The Dark Chamber," the play selected to mark the centenary of Rabindranath Tagore in Natal. This brought from America the Indian dancer Bhaskar, actress Surya Kumari, and director Krishna Shah. "Chamber" toured through the Cape and arrived in the Transvaal at the end of the year. The tour was under the aegis of Union Artists.

On the whole, locally-written musicals fared badly in Johannesburg in 1961. "The Platonic Nymph" at the Brooke Theatre came in for some pungent remarks from the critics and was withdrawn after three weeks. The same fate befell "The King Of Diamonds," a period piece woven round the life of South African millionaire Barney Barnato, and presented by National Theatre with backing from mining magnate Harry Oppenheimer. An all-African musical "Dingaka" disappointed its backers despite an excellent performance from Ken Gampu in the name role, outstanding sets, lively choreography.

Brooke Theatre, site of many a West End boxoffice hit since its opening seven years ago, failed to pick a real winner in 1961 but did

Connie Bennett Pans 'Toys' Tourer In Chi TV Spiel; It's Her Own Show

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Constance Bennett doesn't like "Toys in the Attic" and doesn't mind making it publicly known. She's here in the Lillian Hellman drama, but quits the cast next Saturday (20), when it exits the Blackstone Theatre to resume touring.

On Irv Kupcinet's "At Random" show on WBBM-TV last week, the star complained that "Toys" is a sick and heavy play and commented, "There is too much sickness and unhappiness in the world for anyone to want to see it." Her tv appearance was presumably anything but a boon to the Blackstone boxoffice.

Miss Bennett, explaining that comedy is her forte, called her dramatic role in the Lillian Hellman drama "an acting exercise" and indicated that the character of Albertine Prine, whom she portrays, leaves her cold and passes out of mind as soon as the curtain goes down. The character is a wealthy southern woman who has withdrawn from the daytime world and keeps a handsome Negro as her lover.

The actress asserted that the part was recommended to her by her manager, who felt she ought to change her image. "Wait till I get back to New York," she concluded, "I'll change his image."

Ann Shropshire will take over Miss Bennett's role for the Los Angeles engagement, opening next Tuesday (23). Scott McKay, who was to have vacated the "Toys" male lead for a guest stint at the Drury Lane Theatre here, has decided to remain with the tourer.

Houston Doing 'Majority'

Houston, Jan. 16.

"A Majority of One" will open at the Alley Theatre tomorrow night (Wed.) under the direction of Joyce Randall.

The cast of the Leonard Spigelgass comedy includes Virginia Payne, Russell Gold, Jeanette Clift, Chris Wiggins, Tom Toner, Bill Bridges, Maxine Elliott, Karen Friman, John Alexander, Paul Tremaine, Arlene Cohen, Sandra Yarber and Sue Carol Davis.

Shows Out of Town

No Strings

Detroit, Jan. 16.

Richard Rodgers (in association with Samuel Taylor) presentation of musical in two acts (14 numbers), with music and lyrics by Richard Rodgers, book by Samuel Taylor. Staged and choreographed by Joe Layton; settings and lighting, David Hays; costumes, Fred Voelpel and Donald Brooks; musical direction and dance arrangements, Peter Matz; orchestrations, Ralph Burns; associate choreographer, Buddy Schwab. Features Richard Kiley, Diahann Carroll, Noelle Adam, Bernice Massi, Don Chastain, Alvin Epstein, Mitchell Gregg, Polly Rowles. Opened Jan. 15, '62, at the Fisher Theatre, Detroit.

Instrumentalists on stage: Walter Wegner, flute; Aaron Sachs, clarinet; Ernest Mauro, oboe; James Sedler, trumpet; James Dahl, trombone; Ronnie Redford, drums; Walter Dane, bassoon.

Musical numbers: "The Sweetest Sounds," "How Sad," "Loads of Love," "The Man Who Has Everything," "Be My Host," "La La La," "You Don't Tell Me," "Love Makes the World Go," "Nobody Told Me," "Look No Further," "Eager Beaver," "No Strings," "Yankee Go Home."

Mediocre music, georgeous costumes, brilliant choreography, inept lighting, inconclusive experimentation and a trite, somber story characterize "No Strings," the Richard Rodgers-Samuel Taylor musical which is trying out at the Fisher Theatre.

Rodgers and Taylor do not educe the same magic as did Rodgers and Hart and Rodgers and Hammerstein, at least in this initial collaboration. It is possible, however, that the overall production values of "No Strings" may help it to a successful Broadway run and a tour, as well as providing pre-ground grist for a picture.

The Rodgers music in "No Strings" is simple in construction, relying mainly on only a few notes to carry the melody. With the exception of the French-type song, the 12 numbers are in the same genre, so that a medley of different sounds is lacking.

The lyrics are appropriate in the sense that they help advance the story, but in themselves they lack the sparkle and the wit that have characterized words by Hart and Hammerstein. On first hearing, the new Rodgers songs which seem to have the best chance of catching on are "The Sweetest Sounds," "Nobody Told Me," and, perhaps, the title tune, "No Strings."

The Taylor book, concerning a love affair between an American Negro and a white American author in present-day Paris, offers no surprises and little in the way of motivation, warmth, tenderness, humor, or interesting observations on the racial theme. On the other hand, Taylor exercises admirable restraint in dealing with the subject.

No mention is made of the difference in races by the principals or by their friends. The couple simply are in love and that is accepted naturally. The lovers part, with no strings attached, because the author must return to America to begin writing again and life would be "impossibly difficult" together, and because the model prefers a gay, but empty life in Paris, where her color apparently creates no problems.

Diahann Carroll is excellent as the model. It is her show all the way and she does a great deal for it. By coincidence, Miss Carroll starred in a recent movie "Paris Blues," whose plot reportedly is quite similar to that of "No Strings."

Miss Carroll is the only principal performer, with one exception, who emerges with more luster for the efforts put forth in this musical. Her voice, her convincing portrayal of a high fashion model, and her beauty come across the footlights in full measure.

The only other player who comes close to Miss Carroll's brilliance is Bernice Massi. As the zestful, zany daughter of an oil millionaire, she cavorts with talented abandon, forcing, by what seems to be planned determination, whatever gaity there is in the proceedings.

Costarred Richard Kiley portrays a Pulitzer Prize author who has ceased to write and who has become a hanger-on of the bored European gay life set. He is given little to do or say that has much significance.

Noelle Adam, attired in black tights, is the most beautiful photographer's assistant imaginable. She competently sings a so-so French song, "La La La," in her native tongue. Polly Rowles is fairly effective as Vogue's editor in Paris. However, her singing of the one number given her, "Love Makes the World Go," is poorly executed.

Don Chastain as a gigolo, Alvin Epstein as a Parisian photographer, and Mitchell Gregg as a rich-man-about Europe, do as well as anyone probably could with the material they are given.

In an effort to blend orchestra sounds with the other elements on stage so that an integral whole would result, the musicians have been moved out of the pit and placed on stage. However, the orchestra never is seen, being placed behind draperies at one. Individual musicians stroll onstage singly, in pairs and in groups from time to time, to accompany a singer, or to set the mood for a new scene. The effect is inconclusive.

While the music does flow more naturally from the stage than it would from the pit, the strolling musicians distract. The meaning of the solos played on flute, clarinet, oboe, etc., may be significant to the producers and the performers, but the meaning is not communicated to the audience. Incidentally, while it is said no pun was intended, there are no strings in the orchestra which is made up solely of the usual brasses, reeds and percussion instruments.

The unusual beauty of the female dancers, the stunning, sexy costumes and the imaginative choreography are major assets of this show. The chorines are the prettiest, the bustiest, the leggiest and the hippiest gathered together in one ensemble in a long time. Their costumes are skin-tight, beige gray and flesh-colored, one piece affairs which leave little to the imagination.

In a Riviera scene, wispy white bikini tops and bottoms are added to the flesh mesh for provocative effect. Miss Carroll's gowns are gorgeous and will receive appreciative comment from women viewers. The costumes are an outstanding contribution by Fred Voelpel and Donald Brooks.

The dance routines are taken out of the usual pattern by a free form type of terping which seems to arise from the direction the plot is taking at the moment. The dancers sometimes perform solo, or in pairs, much the same as the instrumentalists do.

While free in form, there is excellent precision in the ballet-like ensemble movements and in the unusual groupings of the dancers. Joe Layton's choreography is fresh and skillful, while his added responsibilities as director also have been handled well.

The settings and lighting by David Hays leave much to be desired. The sets presumably are designed to give the audience an inside, or backstage glimpse of the activities of European sophisticates. The scenery is sparse, consisting mainly of reversible panels, which are moved about and tilted by the performers, with bare scaffolding, simple platforms, inclined boards and a few drop lights.

The most colorful and painful of the props, however, are the many, large, multi-colored spotlights which are massed onstage and pointed at the audience. When these are turned on singly, or in banks, the light shines into the eyes of those sitting in the side aisles. Unless corrective action is taken, "No Strings," may set a record for the number of headaches and cases of eye strain it may cause.

While it might be expected, the lighting of the various colored spots is not used in such a way as to suggest mood, or the time of day. The lighting throughout is on the dim side, on stage, that is, and it sometimes is difficult to see what's going on.

"No Strings" is second-drawer Rodgers musically, and its book is uninspired. Its success would seem to rest on the talent of Miss Carroll and the sight-values which tired businessmen on expense accounts seem to appreciate.

This dynamic drama, with sustaining tensions, is expertly staged in its American premiere, with a skillful cast bringing out the theme of the misunderstanding of nations focused by the alleged attempted rape of an English girl by an Indian.

"A Passage to India" presents a merciless picture of two civilizations unable to understand each other. Though the E. M. Forster novel from which Santha Rama Rau has adapted the strongly moving play was written in 1913 and published in 1924, its theme is timeless. It grips the audience. Its problems of race and color have immediate impact, and could apply in any of the countries now undergoing turbulent change.

It's remarkably presented, using a raked stage and open sets to indicate the limitless size of India and suggesting the undercurrents of mysticism. There should be no difficulty in smoothing over the minor rough spots during its break-in here, for they are mostly matters of mechanics, strengthening and tightening.

The locale is the English colony of Chandrapore, India, where the English girl, nicely portrayed by Anne Meacham, shocks the stiff-necked community by mixing with the Indians and agreeing to picnic with a young Muslim doctor, brilliantly played by Zia Mohyaddin. The friendly Indian youth is arrested for attempted rape after she hysterically charges that he assaulted her. Prejudices of color engulf the town in the sweltering heat, culminating in a fascinating courtroom trial.

Gladys Cooper gives an admirable performance as a veteran resident who understands India and Eric Portman is excellent as an English veteran of the country who believes the youth is innocent.

Louis Edmonds does well as the magistrate and fiance of the young Englishwoman, James Coco does a sharply etched cameo as the defense counsel, David O'Brien is good as a lieutenant and prosecutor and there are good bits by Joan White, Maureen Hurley, Margaretta Warwick, Dorothy Blackburn as bigoted British women.

Donald McWhinnie's direction is subtly paced, and Rouben Ter-Arutunian's decor is impressive.

The Aspern Papers

New Haven, Jan. 16.

David Black (by arrangement with Peter Daubeny, Michael Redgrave Productions & P. E. S. Plays, Ltd.) presentation of drama in two acts (five scenes) by Michael Redgrave, from the story by Henry James. Staged by Margaret Webster; settings and lighting, Ben Edwards; costumes, Alvin Colt. Stars Maurice Evans, Wendy Hiller, Francoise Rosay; features Rosemary Murphy, Clifford David, Augusta Merighi. Opened Jan. 15, '61, at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven.

Assunta ..... Augusta Merighi
Mrs. Prest ..... Rosemary Murphy
"H.J." ..... Maurice Evans
Miss Tina ..... Wendy Hiller
Miss Bordereau ..... Francoise Rosay
Pasquale ..... Clifford David

The most optimistic thing about the American break-in of "The Aspern Papers" is fact that it builds to an absorbing finale. There is so much inertia in the preceding scenes, however, that the deadly pace of the first hour may be too great an obstacle to overcome. Actually, the play would probably be a stirring one-act opus, but it is stretched pretty thin for a full lengther.

Although the drama was a hit in London, indications are that this particular production will have rough going to match its original success. It may be one more instance of American indifferent audience reaction to the leisurely pace that seems to have more appeal on the London stage.

The theme concerns the attempt of a book publisher to unearth certain memorabilia concerning the spark that had ignited a young, little-known poet into producing literary gems. The publisher believes he has hit pay dirt through a contact with an elderly woman, reputedly the young poet's long-ago mistress and the inspiration of his sudden emergence into the realm of brilliant creation.

He locates the woman in Venice, living with a niece, and the script unfolds events that transpire when the publisher seeks to have the niece aid him in locating the documents.

Top cast are Maurice Evans as the publisher, Wendy Hiller as the niece, and Francoise Rosay as the quondam mistress. Ace honors go to Miss Hiller, whose characterization of the recluse niece who starts to bloom into real womanhood only to have the process nipped in the bud, is fine acting. Evans best performance comes in the plays later moments and Miss Rosay scores handily despite an accent that makes some of her lines difficult to follow.

The supporting trio of Rosemary Murphy as Evans' long-time friend, Augusta Merighi and Clifford David as servants, are well cast. Ben Edwards has created an appropriately musty setting of a run-down house in Venice. Alvin Colt's costumes contrast well in rags-riches stages.

Margaret Webster's staging battles script lethargy in the early scenes but comes to life strongly in later sequences.

RX Murder

San Francisco, Jan. 16.

Paul Gregory presentation of drama in three acts, by William Link and Richard Levinson. Staged by Myles Eason; scenery and lighting, James Trittipo; costumes, Don Loper. Stars Joseph Cotten, Thomas Mitchell, Agnes Moorehead, Patricia Medina. Opened Jan. 15, '62, at the Curran Theatre, San Francisco.

Flemming ..... Joseph Cotten
Columbo ..... Thomas Mitchell
Claire ..... Agnes Moorehead
Susan ..... Patricia Medina

Others: Lucille Fenton, Howard Wierum, Raleigh Davidson.

"Rx Murder" is a slick little hour tv "drama" transferred to the capacious stage, where it seems lost.

Instead of "whodunit" the object appears to be, "Will good cop catch killer?" But by the end of the second act it's evident the cop will, and the audience's chief third-act diversion is guessing the storyline's twists.

The story focuses on a psychiatrist, played by Joseph Cotten, who strangles his wife, acted by Agnes Moorehead, near the end of the first act with the help of his mistress-patient, portrayed by Patricia Medina. The culprit has planned what he conceives as a perfect murder and a perfect alibi, but reckons without the intuition and experience of the cop, played by Thomas Mitchell, who spends the last two acts playing cute tricks on the psychiatrist, and finally wangles confession.

Cotten is properly chilly as the murderer, playing plenty of attention to detail and giving the impression of Great arrogance. Unfortunately, this killer also has to love the mistress, and Cotten approaches this role with such hauteur that he leaves no room for passion.

Miss Medina handles the role as the reluctant accessory nicely, and Miss Moorehead, in a relatively brief appearance, does well as the bored, middleaged woman with sharp tongue and a jealous streak.

But Mitchell, as a sort of Kewpie-doll cop, walks off with most audience interest on the basis of his hesitant drollery.

Director Myles Eason contributes nice, if obvious touches, and Don Loper's costumes and James Trittipos's scenery and lighting are attractive and efficient.

The same cannot be said of the William Link-Richard Levinson script, which is slow getting started, loaded with banalities and, from a plot standpoint, overdependent on jangling phones and door buzzers, which seem to ring constantly throughout play.

The play, in its present form, seems thin for Broadway bet, but may have a better film chance.

Singers: Eddie Becker, Theodore Brandon, Jean Bruno, Lynne Charnay, Yettanda Enelow, Sam Greene, Linda Lavin, Gary Leatherman, Ripley Lewis, Alice Nunn, Kelli Scott, Maggie Task, Barbara Ann Walters.

Dancers: Tom Abbott, Robert Bishop, Charlene Carter, Jeremy Ives, Alton Ruff, Carolsue Shaer, Judi West.

Musical numbers: "Anything for You," "Beautiful," "My Son, the Lawyer," "Every Girl Wants to Get Married," "Right Girls," "Night Girls," "There's a Room in My House," "Kalua Bay," "Siegals Marching Song," "Nathan Marching Song," "Harmony," "Now Morris," "Milwaukee," "Manie," "Revenge," "Summer Is Over," "What I Say Goes," "I'm Worse Than Anybody."

Familiar in material but different in format, "A Family Affair" is a kosher version of "Father of the Bride." The story involves the cold war between the families of the bride and groom as the nuptial date nears. On the credit side, this familiar theme is developed by ingratiating performers, told in winning words and music, and manages to avoid the stereotyped blight that affects most tuners.

The production was rough at the Philadelphia break in, and in the second act virtually all of the ensembles failed to jell. The fact that the comedy is on the homey and satirical kick also makes it pleasant and intelligent, if not sock.

There is so much that is agreeable and novel in "A Family Affair," but it needs a rousing dance number or an electric song or skit to ignite the audience and give the performance momentum.

Shelley Berman seems headed for Broadway acceptance with his work in this one. The recording and nitery comedian handles the vocal and dance assignments with an easy style and a self-critical air that offsets shortcomings. Cast as a confirmed bachelor who has been both mother and father to an orphaned niece, he becomes intoxicated with the wedding arrange-

Asides and Ad Libs

Kenneth Wallace, theatre editor of the Bergen Record, Hackensack, N.J., is back on the job after major surgery . . . The first issue of Cultural News from Italy, a publicity pamphlet put out by the Elite Publishing Corp., New York, contains no mention of legit, opera or even music, although a subhead on the first page lists music among the subjects covered. However, Tourist News from Italy, published by the same New York outfit, lists many opera, concert and even legit events in its December issue.

The Bolshoi Ballet in Moscow will hereafter perform in the new Kremlin Palace, while the opera company remains in the 135-year old Bolshoi itself. Tnat will provide 6,000 seats per performance against the 2,200 available for the ballet at the opera house.

B'way Uneven; 'Romulus' $11,898 (5), 'Subways' $63,893, 'Gideon' $27,927, 'Succeed,' 'Man,' 'Milk,' 'Night' Sellout

Broadway was generally shaky the last two weeks. Receipts for week-before-last, which included New Year's Eve, were generally down from the hefty revenue the previous session. Grosses last week took another drop for some shows, but were up for others.

There were five openings during the last two weeks and four of those have folded, as reflected below. Hitting capacity takes last week were "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "Man for All Seasons," "Milk and Honey" and "Night of the Iguana." House records were scored the prior stanza by "Succeed" and "Seasons," with upped prices for New Year's Eve performances.

Grosses below have been reduced by commissions where theatre parties are mentioned.

Romulus

Roger L. Stevens (in association with Henry Guettel) presentation of comedy in two acts (four scenes), by Gore Vidal, adapted from the German language original by Friedrich Duerrenmatt. Staged by Joseph Anthony; scenery, Oliver Smith; costumes, Lucinda Ballard; lighting, Peggy Clark; associate producers, Lyn Austin, Victor Samrock. Stars Cyril Ritchard; features Cathleen Nesbitt, Howard Da Silva, Russell Collins, William Le Massena, George S. Irving, Ted van Griethuysen, Fred Stewart, James Olson, Earl Montgomery, Graham Jarvis, Francis Compton, Suzanne Osborne, Edwin Sherin, Dolph Sweet. Opened Jan. 10, '62, at the Music Box Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Considering the eminence of its authorship and presentation, "Romulus" is a disappointment. It's a questionable boxoffice bet, unlikely film material and dubious for stock or the amateur market.

The comedy is by Gore Vidal, author of the click "Visit to a Small Planet" and "The Best Man," and is based on a German language play by Swiss dramatist Friedrich Duerrenmatt, whose works have included the hit "The Visit" and the provocative "Fools Are Passing Through." The show has been staged by Joseph Anthony and the leads include Cyril Ritchard, Cathleen Nesbitt and Howard Da Silva.

"Romulus" is ostensibly a satirical translation of history, showing how the last of the Caesars deliberately brought about the fall of Rome as retribution for the moral decay of a once-great empire. But the play is evidently intended as a parable, a view of the past as a lesson for the present.

If that reaction is valid, and an audience is supposed to see "Romulus" as a comment on the contemporary world situation, or for that matter to apply it personally, the theme seems to be that slogans are empty and beliefs are meaningless (the title hero describes them as "nothing"). On that basis, the play is apparently saying, in a tone of flippant sophistication, "What difference does it make, what's the use, why bother, who cares?"

Taken simply as entertainment, however, without regard to mesage, the Vidal-Duerrenmatt work is unsatisfying. Its premise, of a worldly, philosophical monarch who manoeuvered for 20 years to effect the stagnation and collapse of Rome because he had privately condemned it on ethical grounds, seems contrived.

Moreover, the concluding scene, with its manipulated confrontation of the emperor and the conquering barbarian general, seems bogusly Shavian. The whole play is garrulous without a redeeming intellectual brilliance.

Ritchard, who has occasionally appeared to thrive on artificial comedy, is mired in this excessively mannered talkfest about a legendary monarch with a historical perspective that amounts to defeatism.

The normally expert Miss Nesbitt can do little with the small-dimension role of the prosaic-minded, complaining empress, and the usually forceful Da Silva is agreeably direct, but thwarted by the transparently concocted part of the victorious Gothic general who turns out to be a loquacious student of classic politics.

Several familiar character actors are present in supporting roles, and notable performances are given by Francis Compton and Russell Collins as ancient Roman equivalents of butlers, Dolph Sweet as a temperamental chef, Ted van Griethuysen as a bitter returned veteran, James Olson as an angry bearer of ill tidings, Fred Stewart as a business-as-usual tycoon, Suzanne Osborne as a traditional ingenue and William Le Massena, Graham Jarvis, George S. Irving and Earl Montgomery in bit parts.

Oliver Smith has designed an impossing setting of columns and background screen to represent a room in the royal villa at Tivoli. Lucinda Ballard has provided the costumes, in several instances purposely anachronistic, and Peggy Clark has devised the bright lighting. Anthony's staging seems to accentuate the transparency of a spurious play. Hobe.

The Captains and the Kings

Theatre Guild Productions & Joel Schenker presentation of Paul Gregory production of drama in three acts (four scenes) by Leo Lieberman; scenery, costumes and lighting, James Trittipo; associate producer, Elliot Martin; produced by arrangement with John Gerstad. Stars Dana Andrews, Charlie Ruggles, Peter Graves, Conrad Nagel, Lee Grant; features Joseph Sullivan, Gavin MacLeod, Joseph Campanella. Opened Jan. 2, '61, at the Playhouse, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Adm. Hyman G. Rickover, a sort of Capt. Dreyfus of modern U.S. naval history, is the slightly disguised hero of "The Captain and the Kings," which opened last week at the Playhouse. Despite its topically vital subject, however, the play is traditional in form and surfacey in conception.

The Theatre Guild & Joel Schenker presentation of Paul Gregory's production is an unlikely prospect for Broadway and questionable material for pictures, but should be a fair vehicle for stock and subject to limitation because of its preponderately male cast, also for the amateur market. The drama was originally tested by the Guild at Westport, Conn., during the summer of 1960, and played a pre-Broadway tryout on the Coast and eastward.

"The Captains and the Kings" presents Rickover's struggle with Navy brass over the development of the atomic submarine in terms of a good guys and bad guys melodrama. The hero is a paragon of vision, wisdom, devotion to duty and self-discipline, while the service-caste-conscious Admiral clique is petty-minded, spiteful and bigoted.

At least part of that picture is said to be factually correct, and there may also be some basis for the play's additional inclusion of a corrupt, unctiously demagogic Senator who tries to Red-smear the single-minded proponent of atomic underwater craft. On the stage, however, the story seems pat and shallow.

The negative impression is accentuated by what appears to be unimaginative and at times flabby direction, unsuitable casting and uneven performance. What might have been a gripping drama on a challenging subject thus becomes merely a moderately interesting show. If conditions in the Pentagon are as represented here, the inference is that American military and naval victories were not so much won by us as lost by our enemies.

Dana Andrews, seemingly hampered by laryngitis, underplays forcefully as the strong, laconic father of the atomic submarine, and effectively reads his single big speech. The arch villains are skillfully played by Charlie Ruggles as the plausible, rabble-rousing Senator and Conrad Nagel as a suavely arrogant Admiral.

Peter Graves, identified in the program as a leading man of television westerns, is personable as the loyal subordinate officer whose deliberate disobedience of orders jeopardizes but ultimately vindicates the experimental submersible project, and Lee Grant is expressive in the sole feminine role of the unresolved love interest who turns out to prefer a career to romance.

Joseph Campanella is so-so in the plot-purposes part of a devoted subordinate officer on the sub project, and Joseph Sullivan is passable as a civilian engineer associate. William Swetland, Stephen Chase, Alexander Clark and Wayne Wilson are acceptable as mean-minded Navy brass, Warren Wade flubs the notable bit role of a canny retired Admiral, and Gavin MacLeod is believably infuriating as the Senator's unscrupulous lawyer.

Joseph Anthony has staged the show, dividing his attention between this assignment and the direction of the incoming Broadway production, "Romulus." The settings of the atomic project office and a conference room in the Army-Navy Club in Washington are by James Trittipo, who also provided the unbecoming dresses for Miss Grant.

During the tryout tour, the anti-Semitic angle of the Rickover case was given added emphasis by the change of the hero's name from Conway to Kohner and by the insertion of several lines of dialog. That presumably sharpened the play's point about service snobbery in general and bigotry in particular, but it still leaves "The Captains and the Kings" as an important and timely version of history presented in terms of television drama. Hobe.

In Paris, where it was a great big hit, "The Egg" must have had a special quality and meaning. But as a Broadway production, which opened Jan. 8 at the Cort Theatre, its vital Frenchness is missing. What emerges is a sort of non-musical "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," minus the style and point. It's a dubious boxoffice prospect and offers little for pictures or even stock.

The Felicien Marceau comedy, translated by Robert Schlitt, is about a mousey but determined little guy who offers a dramatized lecture on how he beat "the system," or as he also expresses it, how he found a crack and got inside the egg representing an established place in life. Presumably it's diverting and even significant in France, or at least in Paris.

Somehow, the special flavor doesn't come off, and this edition of the piece is a clever but synthetic charade about a character who's moderately interesting but not important or emotionally compelling. At first the young hero can't even shed his virginity, but presently stumbles into a series of circumstances that involve a first sex experience with a middleaged woman, an unsatisfying affair with a matter-of-fact married woman, a comfortable minor job with the civil service and a solvent but hollow middleclass marriage. When his wife takes a lover, he robs and then blackmails the interloper, and finally murders her and pins the crime on the lover.

That's it, and the sardonic point seems to be not that there's a system in beating the system, but that the whole setup and presumably life itself, it merely is a series of unpredictable, uncontrollable predicaments. It thus amounts to a kind of impromptu, shrug-of-the-shoulders version of "How to Succeed" or "What Makes Sammy Run."

Under Lamont Johnson's busy direction, cabaret, television and tent musical comedian Dick Shawn makes a commendable attempt to play against type as the Mr. Nobody who makes it without rhyme or much reason. It's an infectious and authoritative performance, but doesn't remotely suggest a little man or even a Frenchman.

Of the supporting players, practically all of whom have featured billing (even those with indistinguishable parts) and who double and triple, Janet Ward is notable as a singleminded tart, Frederick Rolf is amusing as the wife's mannered lover, Michael Constantine is credibly casual as an obliging husband, Michael Vale is expressively pompous as an unseeing father-in-

Plays for Bleecker Street

(First Group)

Theodore Mann & Jose Quintero presentation of three one-act plays by Thornton Wilder, including "Infancy," "Childhood" and "Someone from Assisi." Staged by Jose Quintero; decor and lighting, Peter Harvey; lighting, Keith Cuerden. Opened Jan. 11, '62, at the Circle in the Square, N.Y.; $4 top Monday, Wednesday, Thursday nights, and $4.50 Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

Cast: Jack Dodson, Mary Doyle, MacIntyre Dixon, Charlotte Jones, Richard Libertini, Debbie Scott, Susan Towers, Philip Visco, Betty Miller, Dana Elcar, Sandra MacDonald, Dolores Dorn, Lee Richardson.

Although it's an event when an author of Thornton Wilder's reputation writes a series of plays for off-Broadway, the result in this instance is a letdown. The quality of the work is of off-Broadway standard, which is to say it would not do for Broadway.

In these one-acters, under the general heading of "Plays for Bleecker Street," the Pulitzer Prize dramatist and novelist is, he has explained, trying to sum up his philosophy of life. The projected series, on which Wilder has been working several years but has only partly completed, is to be in two groups, titled "The Seven Ages of Man" and "The Seven Deadly Sins."

The series opened last Thursday night (11) at the Circle in the Square, formerly the Amata Theatre and peviously the Bleecker Street Playhouse in Greenwich Village. The initial offering was a triple-bill of "Infancy," "Childhood" and "Someone from Assisi." The first two are the introductory pair from "Ages," and the finale is the fourth item, subtitled "Lust," from "Sins."

Evidently Wilder, whose major stage successes have been "Our Town," "The Skin of Our Teeth" and "The Matchmaker," has the compulsion common to humorous writers to create a sort of monument that will express a profound truth. It's apparently a natural urge, like the clown's longing to play Hamlet, or for that matter the straight actor's yen to do a musical, or the dancer's itch to go legit.

On the basis of the first three, "Plays for Bleecker Street" aren't likely to replace the previous, full-length works as representative Wilder, either as popular successes or artistic achievements. They not only lack the size and scope of his past hits, but seem thin, a bit stilted and markedly slow in the less exacting conditions of off-Broadway.

The first, "Infancy," involves a nursemaid and a mother and their respective charges in baby coaches in Central Park, with a Keystone Comedy-style cop. The elongated skit is essentially humorous, but the underlying theme seems to be that the difficulty of communication between the generations exists even in the first age of man.

"Childhood" is more sober in tone, with a fantasy scene of considerable poignancy. It involves three moppets who, to the incomprehension and dismay of their parents, play a let's pretend game of attending the latters' funeral. The mother and father appear in fictional guise in the fantasy episodes.

The concluding piece, "Someone from Assisi," is the most cryptic, involving an apparently tragic but vaguely defined former relationship between a crazed, shabby woman and a blind, tatterdemalion priest. The other characters are an adoring nun and a fierce peasant girl. The scene is Italy and the playlet seems to suggest more than it says, although the sin of the title appears to be past tense.

Jose Quintero's staging is somewhat deliberate, and the performance as a whole tends to be lingering and intense. The two babies in coaches in the opener, "Infancy," are played by adults, MacIntyre Dixon and Richard Libertini, who presumably get stiff joints from being cramped in such confining space. Mary Doyle caricatures the nurse, Charlotte Jones gives a hearty performance as the Jewish momma and Jack Dodson plays the cop broadly.

Susan Towers, Debbie Scott and Philip Visco avoid undue precociousness as the normally morbid urchins in the second item, "Childhood," with Betty Miller giving an affecting performance as the worried mother and Dana Elcar believable as the father. Miss Miller is also excellent in the difficult role of the demented woman in "Someone from Assisi." Lee Richardson isn't able to clarify the part of the penitent holy man, Dolores Dorn is decorative as the doting nun and Sandra MacDonald is vehement as the peasant girl.

Peter Harvey's decor for the three-quarter stage setup consists of several drapes at the theatre backwall, plus various arrangements of eight straightback chairs. Keith Cuerden has provided the modest costuming.

This first batch of "Plays for Bleecker Street" offers self-conscious drama for serious-minded legit addicts, and lacks the simple eloquence, warmth and beauty of Wilder's best work. Hobe.

Brecht on Brecht

Greater N.Y. Chapter of the American National Theatre & Academy and Cheryl Crawford presentation of a staged reading in two parts, arranged by George Tabori. Staged by Gene Frankel; designed by Wolfgang Roth. Stars Dane Clark, Anne Jackson, Lotte Lenya, Viveca Lindfors, George Voskovec, Michael Wager. Opened Jan. 3, '61, at the Theatre de Lys, N.Y.; $4.50 top weekdays, $4.95 weekends.

Experts from the writings and plays of Bertolt Brecht are lovingly performed by six fine actors in "Brecht on Brecht," the staged-reading which has begun a limited run at the Theatre de Lys.

Arranged by George Tabori, the program is divided into two parts. The first, "Life," consists of short pieces, many of them autobiographical, which follow Brecht from his birth in Germany to his exile in California during World War II. Although the mood is solemn and the readings almost religious in tone, the fragments form an intriguing picture of the great playwright.

Whenever the brief passages threaten to become tedious, Lotte Lenya takes the stage to perform songs written by Brecht to the music of Kurt Weil and Hanns Eisler. "Pirate Jenny" and "The Solomon Song" from "Threepenny Opera," and the tragic "Song of a German Mother" are superbly done by Miss Lenya, who projects all their bitterness and pathos. Another highlight of the first part is "The Ballad of Marie Farrar," in which Anne Jackson movingly recites the story of an unwed mother who commits infanticide.

Part two, "Theatre," is composed of scenes from several Brecht plays. Miss Jackson is fine in an excerpt from "The Good Woman of Setzuan," in which she portrays a pregnant woman who imagines with words and pantomime what life with a son will be like. Dane Clark is both humorous and touching in a monologue describing an actor who spends hours preparing to play a bit part.

Miss Lenya is highly effective in a scene from "St. Joan of the

Brecht on Brecht

Stockyards," but the segment from "Galileo," is disappointing. Clark, George Voskovec and Michael Wager fail to bring it to life.

The gem of the evening is "The Jewish Wife," a portion of "The Private Life of the Master Race." Viveca Lindfors portrays brilliantly the woman who must leave the husband she loves because her religion endangers him. Although she once or twice comes close to excessiveness, the performance is nevertheless mesmerizing. George Voskovec, in the smaller role of the husband, is also excellent.

Gene Frankel has directed the production nicely, avoiding a static quality. Wolfgang Roth's stage design is starkly effective: a large photograph of Brecht at stage right dominates the proceedings, and the actors are seated on high stools, which are rearranged throughout the performance. Tape recordings of Brecht's voice are interspersed.

A version of "Brecht on Brecht" was presented at two matinees last November. The current production is perhaps limited in popular appeal, but should be fascinating for Brecht fans. Kenn.

Madame Aphrodite

Howard Barker, Cynthia Baer & Robert Chambers presentation of musical comedy in two acts, with book by Tad Mosel, music and lyrics by Jerry Herman. Staged by Robert Turoff; settings, David Ballou; costumes, Patricia Zipprodt; lighting, Lee Watson; musical director, Peg Foster. Stars Nancy Andrews. Opened Dec. 29, '61, at the Orpheum Theatre, N.Y.; $4.50 top weekdays, $4.95 Fridays and Saturdays.

Cast: Jack Drummond, Stephen Elmore, Rod Colbin, Nancy Andrews, June Hyer, Joyce Hines, Mona Paulee, Alice Borsuk, Ray Tudor, Lou Cutell, Harry Stanton, Cherry Davis, Kenneth Lewis.

"Madame Aphrodite" was produced by Howard Barker and Cynthia Baer. The book was written by Tad Mosel and the music and lyrics are by Jerry Herman. All four have done better shows, and probably will again.

The leading character is a larcenous peddler of beauty creams who goes in for obvious malapropisms. She's nasty and vicious, and Nancy Andrews is unable to bring her to life.

As the naive young salesman of her beauty creams, Jack Drummond displays a good voice. He doesn't have much of a chance to show off anything else. The authors pretend that he believes in the beautifiers so strongly that his faith is contagious.

Some of the melodies are pretty enough, but the lyrics are inferior. The direction contributes to the general lethargy. The substantial-looking sets by David Ballou make excellent use of the small stage at the Orpheum. Ster.

The Dark Lady of the Sonnets

Phoenix Theatre presentation of one-act comedy by George Bernard Shaw. Staged by Tom Gruenwald; scenery and lighting, John Larkey. Features Frederic Warriner, Patricia Falkenhain, Tom Sawyer, Alison Howard. Opened Dec. 12, '61, at the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y.; $4.60 top.

Cast: Frederic Warriner, Tom Sawyer, Patricia Falkenhain, Alison Howard.

"The Dark Lady of the Sonnets" is George Bernard Shaw's affectionately humorous tribute to William Shakespeare. Though unevenly acted, it makes a nice curtain-raiser for the Phoenix Theatre's production of the same author's "Androcles and the Lion."

Patricia Falkenhain is superb as the first Queen Elizabeth. Her abrupt switches from anger to pleasure are excellent, with just the right amount of tongue-in-cheek. Frederick Warriner, though acceptable as Shakespeare, is not as effective. He seems unsure of his lines, and often overacts.

Tom Sawyer is good as a Beefeater, but Alison Howard, as the Dark Lady, misses much of the humor that is inherent in her part.

The direction, by Tom Greunwald, is uneven, and not particularly inventive. Kenn.

A Family Affair

ments and has a posse of redheaded playmates to assist him in these preparations.

His adversary is Eileen Heckart, doughty mother of the groom, an assertive and dominating type who is not the one to let a wedding in her family slip into the hands of another. The struggle for power between these two moves into a deliberate break. This impasse is solved only by the hiring of a ruthless wedding consultant, played with grim relish by Bibi Osterwald.

Two barber shop numbers seem anachronistic, but prove effecvtive: "Harmony," belted with genuine vigor by Miss Osterwald, and "Milwaukee," sung by Paula Trueman and a male quartet. The latter number seems like an afterthought and needs more sensible placement. Gagh.

44,407 Student Tickets For B'way and Off-B'way Issued During 1960-61

A total of 44,407 tickets to Broadway and off-Broadway productions were distributed to students at charges of 50c and $1 during the 1960-61 season. The breakdown on the distribution, as revealed at the recent annual meeting of the N.Y. Chapter of the American National Theatre & Academy, was 39,569 for 24 Broadway productions and 4,838 for 18 off-Broadway entries.

The distribution is handled by the Student Theatre Ticket Committee of the N.Y. Chapter of ANTA, in cooperation with the N.Y. City Board of Education. At the beginning of last season, students were charged 50c for the tickets supplied gratis by producers. The charge was subsequently upped to $1, of which the producer gets 70c. The balance is put into a special ANTA account to cover administrative expenses of the program.

Thus far this season, 9,937 tickets have been distributed to students. The ANTA committee is seeking a larger flow of tickets and has recommended that special matinees be given for students, probably with understudies performing. In addition to the distribution of tickets, the committee has also made the ANTA Theatre, N.Y., available on Thursday afternoons for a special course on the living theatre conducted by the Board of Educaton for public school teachers.

The course for the teachers consists of 15 weekly lectures, each by a different speaker. This course was conducted the last two years at the former downtown Phoenix Theatre. Blanche Yurka is co-ordinator of the lecture program, for which the committee has been procuring speakers.

'Aspern Papers' Staff

The staff for "The Aspern Papers," which began a pre-Broadway tryout tour Jan. 15 at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven, includes Richard Horner, general manager; Herb Cherin, company manager; Jose Vega, general stage manager, and Alan Foster, assistant stage manager.

The David Black production, co-starring Maurice Evans, Wendy Hiller and Francoise Rosay, opens Feb. 7 at the Playhouse, N.Y.

Something About a Soldier

Theatre Guild & Dore Schary (by arrangement with Herbert Brodkin) presentation of comedy-drama, three acts (13 scenes) by Ernest Kinoy, based on the novel by Mark Harris. Staged by Dore Schary; settings and costumes, William Pitkin; lighting, Klaus Holm; associate producer, Walter Reilly; production manager, Jean Barrere. Stars Sal Mineo, Kevin McCarthy, Ralph Meeker; features David Doyle, Robert Donley, Ken Kercheval, Sid Raymond, Gretchen Walther. Opened Jan. 4, '62, at the Ambassador Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

| Candy Butcher | Sid Raymond |
| Air Cadet | Anthony Roberts |
| Intelligence Officer | Alan Mixon |
| Ward Boy | John Crowther |
| Soldiers | Murray Levy, Jeb Schary, John Crowther, Carl Reindel, Anthony Roberts |

For two acts, "Something About a Soldier," which opened Jan. 4 at the Ambsasador Theatre, is a passive version of "No Time for Sergeants" with the draftee a high-I.Q. Jewish youth instead of a slap-happy hillbilly. In the third act, the play turns serious and modestly touching.

That's a long time for a Broadway show to come to the point, and this Ernest Kinoy dramatization of a novel by Mark Harris fails to create audience concern until too late. After setting up the basic situation of the intellectual, literal minded rookie who keeps his Army outfit off-balance by his innocent attempt to apply logic to military procedure, "Something About a Soldier" repeats variations of the joke in a succession of brief blackout scenes.

But playwright Kinoy and presumably novelist Harris are apparently interested less in the comedy situation than in the affecting relationship between the misfit G.I. and his sage, compassionate Captain. Recognizing that the lad is temperamentally unfit for combat and would probably die in battle, the officer frames him as a psycho case so he is sent home and may remain alive. The Captain, as he himself foresaw, is killed.

"Something About a Soldier" also suffers from misplaced emphasis. Although it is primarily the story of the callow, impractical trainee, opening and closing as a first-person narrative and using flashback scenes for the bulk of the action, it is the character of the Captain, who emerges as a man of rare mind and heart, who is the more interesting and appealing.

Under co-producer Dore Schary's sensitive, careful direction, Sal Mineo gives a well sustained, believable performance as the young draftee. In the better dimensioned, larger stature role of the Captain, Kevin McCarthy offers a skillfully conceived and subtly projected portrayal that also somehow suggests something of the background and offstage life of the character.

Ralph Meeker, third-starred, is excellent as the tough top sergeant with more perception and intuitive sense than appears on the surface. Gretchen Walther, a newcomer to Broadway, is pretty but doesn't make much of the shallow, contradictory part of a PX waitress who has a fling with the Captain but would have preferred the romantically obtuse rookie. There are credible featured bits by David Doyle as a harrassed Corporal, Ken Kerchaval as a dimwit trainee, and Carl Reindel, Sid Raymond, Anthony Roberts and Alan Mixon in incidental in other parts.

William Pitkin has designed suitably spare, atmospheric scenery. Some such setup would do for the inevitable stock and amateur productions, but "Something About a Soldier" is only so-so material for pictures. Hobe.

Giants, Sons of Giants

Charles A. Totero & William Cioffi presentation of drama in two acts, by Joseph Kramm. Staged by the author; settings, Peter Larkin; lighting, Tharon Musser; costumes, Edith Lutyens BelGeddes. Stars Nancy Kelly, Claude Daphin; features Klinger Laverty ..... Woodrow Parfrey, Lucy Harvey ..... Lori March, Gensup ..... Al Saxe, Mrs. Gensup ..... Bette Henritze, Burke Harrison ..... John Call, Maid ..... Renne Jarrett, Club Attendant ..... Glenn Walken, Paul McGrath, Tom Shirley, Franklin Cover, John Call, Lori March, Alfred Toigo, Woodrow Parfrey. Opened Jan. 6, '62, at the Alvin Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Although it may not prove to be the worst play of the season, "Giants, Sons of Giants," which opened Jan. 6 at the Alvin Theatre, can hardly miss being the most unpleasant. It offers nothing—for Broadway, films or even stock.

Joseph Kramm, who won the Pulitzer Prize for 1951-52 with "The Shrike" (also about a psycopathic hero), is the author of this fiasco and is also billed as director, having taken over the latter assignment when Jack Landau resigned during the tryout tour. Nancy Kelly and Claude Dauphin, otherwise reputable players, are costarred in the project and that fine actor, Paul McGrath, also gives it the old pro's try.

Admirable as the earnest efforts are, the result is a dreary bore; for "Giants, Sons of Giants" (the title is an Old Testament quotation, according to a line of dialog) is an appalling drama about an egomaniac, persecution-complexed doctor who aspires to have his own private clinic, a la the Mayo Brothers, and chickens out when the plan is about to be realized. At the end he flips his noggin and dies downstage center in his wife's arms as she murmurs, "Sleep, sleep, sleep."

Peter Larkin has designed a distinctive, skeletonized setting, Tharon Musser has devised ingenious lighting and Edith Lutyens BelGeddes has provided becoming costumes. But it seems pertinent to wonder how, after reading the script, any of the various contributors to the hopeless affair allowed themselves to become involved. As for the author, isn't there anyone he could or would trust read the script and tell him? Hobe.

Insulated Lederer

Honolulu author William J. Lederer told an interviewer he wasn't concerned in the least about Time Magazine's surprisingly-belated review of his "A Nation of Sheep." "At this moment I am writing several articles, a novel and a play and haven't the time to think about a book review— especially one printed nine months after the book was published," he asserted.

As for the review, which panned the bestseller as "a loosely written handful of horror stories," Lederer made this comment: "A writer writes what he feels inside of him. Sometimes it's well done and important; sometimes it is sloppy and of no consequence. Critics have the same privilege of writing what they feel like. I never quarrel with the critics. In fact, I seldom read them."

Cracks Coast Mag Field

Los Angeles Magazine, nee Prompter, has reached three-year goal in 18 months, according to Dave Brown, publisher. Circulation zoomed 100,000 during December and paid ad space has climbed to 30% of book.

Few west coast mags have made the grade. Outstanding exception is Sunset Magazine, owned by Lawrence Lane, and dubbed "the gold mine" by hucksters. January issue totaled 148 pages, with 60% ads, at a cost of more than $4,000 per page black and white.

Ketchum's Globetrot

"Dennis the Menace" is a million-dollar business "for sure," cartoonist Hank Ketchum told a Honolulu interviewer. Ketchum's making a world trip and planning a new book based on his "Dennis" character. He started his trip with a 21-week advance of strips, he said. Cartoonist said "Dennis" (who perennially is 4, going on 5) reflects the normality of all children, their energy and their motivations.

Ketchum's real life son, Dennis, who inspired the cartoon 11 years ago, is now 15.

'Cancer' Pinch Disallowed

Honolulu, Jan. 16.

Common nuisance charges against Charles H. Hobbis, distributor of Henry Miller's controversial "Tropic of Cancer," have been dismissed on grounds the State's "obscene publications" law is unconstitutional.

District Court magistrate ruled the arrest of Hobbis was illegal and also found there was "discriminatory prosecution."

Arrest, which drew widespread criticism of "police censors," presumably was a test case. Prosecution hasn't indicated if any appeal will be filed.

In re: Bijou Fernandez

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

The death of the actress, Bijou Fernandez, recently at the age of 84, is another of those subtractions show biz must find it increasingly difficult to bear.

Following in the footsteps of her mother, Mrs. E. L. Fernandez, one of the top talent agents of all time, Bijou not only directed an agency that affected literally hundreds of prominent players; but she also had real influence on films in her productive screen scouting. As a player, few lived into our era with so many golden memories.

As a child star, she was carried to the theatre through the snowdrifts of the Blizzard of '88. Her intimates on the boards were the immortals of more than 70 years. During two great wars, she was active with service organizations. She marched for Equity in 1919; and her devotion to the Actors Fund of America and to the Episcopal Actors Guild is a matter of record. Most of all, she retained the buoyancy of youth. To the end, it was difficult for younger friends to realize that Bijou was so much their senior.

She understood young people and their hopes. She could be one of them, sharing their dreams and setting a constant example of courage and good will. She did not talk about herself. Many pros knew her during the last 20 years without realizing her major contributions, nor hearing of her connections in the business. In a self-centered profession she was a shining contradiction of selflessness.

Catholic Univ. Players In 13th Season on Tour

Washington, Jan. 16.

A repertory of Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Richard III" is currently being presented by the Players in its 13th season as a touring operation. The group was founded in 1949 by Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke, O.P., head of the Speech and Drama Dept. of the Catholic Univ. in Washington.

Players, which tours 36 states annually from October through the end of April, also operates two summer theatres, Saint Michael's Playhouse, Winooski Park, Vt., and the Olney (Md.) Theatre. All members of the touring cast of 16 studied at the Catholic Univ. Drama Dept.

Since 1952, Players has also made nine May-June tours of Europe, Asia and Greenland. On its national tour, the company gives about six performances weekly. Of the two current repertory offerings, "Dream" was adapted and directed by William H. Graham, vice-president of Players and managing director of the Olney Theatre. "Richard" was staged by James D. Waring, a member of the faculty of the Catholic Univ. Speech & Drama Dept.

A Players' Plan to provide on-the-job training for student actors selected from about universities has been established by Catholic Univ. The students chosen will be under a two-year contract. During the first year, they'll receive $1,000 grants enabling them to pay their tuition for the academic year at Catholic Univ., as part-time graduate students. Upon satisfactory completion of the first year of study and work in university productions, the actors will become salaried members of the Players touring company, which pays $75 weekly to first-year members.

Standby Tooters Play National Anthem For Taste' at St. Paul Aud.

Audiences at "A Taste of Honey" at the Auditorium here last week had to stand while a pit orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner." The David Merrick production was playing a Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription engagement.

Although the Shelagh Delaney drama uses only taped incidental music during the performance, the local musicians union required the employment of 10 tooters at $10.50 per performance, plus a conductor at $21. The play has a cast of five.

"Taste" company manager A. Gino Giglio figured that since the unnecessary musicians would have to be paid $1,008 for the week of not working, he might as well put them to use, so he had them play the National Anthem before each performance. It took 70 seconds to play the hymn, after which they left. Their total work for the week came to 103 man-minutes, which Giglio figured as almost $10 per minute for each musician.

According to the company manager, union locals in other cities require the employment of standby musicians, but the 10 in St. Paul is the most he's run into with "Taste."

AMERICA'S 7TH CITY FACES LEGITLESSNESS

Baltimore, Jan. 16.

Hecht department store here has bought the 90-year-old Ford's Theatre, only legit house in Baltimore, plus six other parcels of downtown real estate for eventual use as site for a new parking garage. Question now is — will Baltimore find itself without a legit house?

Rumors that Morris Mechanic, owner of Ford's, has been long dickering with Hecht over sale of the property, could never until now be confirmed.

He did reveal some months ago that he was negotiating for the inclusion of a new and better theatre in the Charles Center, civic redevelopment project now underway. News of Ford's razing upset theatre-goers here, who are not happy over prospect of seeing a city this large (seventh in U.S.) with no legit stand. Leonard McLaughlin, manager of Ford's, calmed matters somewhat when he stated that this season will definitely go through as scheduled and that "there will definitely be a theatre season here next year too."

Hecht officials wouldn't say just when the chain store would take possession of the property but in all likelihood, it will do so before the start of the 1962 fall season.

Mechanic is currently looking over the Stanton Theatre, a film house he owns, for possible conversion to touring shows. Extensive remodeling would be necessary since Stanton was built as a vaude-film situation and present stage is inadequate. Ford's opened Oct. 2, 1871.

good business with "Roar Like a Dove," which had a lengthy and financially rewarding tour, and "The World Of Suzie Wong," recipient of much pre-publicity, due first to censor trouble, and then to a last-minute walk-out by some of the Chinese members of the cast. Plans to tour "Suzie" were cancelled when the management learnt that the Universal film might be released simultaneously in four big cities.

Brooke has bought the rights of the British musical "Oliver," and will stage it in the near future.

One of the most successful local shows of recent times has been Adam Leslie's intimate revue "Two's Company" . . . the "company" consisting of Leslie himself and Joan Blake. Witty, provocative, with numerous barbs directed against the government in particular, and various aspects of South African life in general, this irreverent entertainment toured the country for over two years, adding new material whenever local or world events offered scope.

Chicago's Loop Lacking in Glamor; Rush St. Is a Colorful Contrast

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Jan. 16.

Whatever charms—call it color or glamor—the Loop may once have had, before and during World War II, it has now mostly lost same and continues to lose. That perhaps partially answers the question dejectedly asked by the company manager of a touring show recently, viz., "We have three good shows in the Loop. What have they got on Rush St. that all the business is there?"

A factor that is generally overlooked in any assessment of the legit situation in the Windy City is that the Loop affords no inviting environment for theatre-going, the way Broadway does, for instance. Theatres are an anachronism in Chi's half-mile-square centre of town, and the boxoffice depends almost entirely on what's offered on the marquee. A blockbuster hit will, of course, sell out even if the theatre were on Skid Row, but anything less than that has to contend with the problem that there is no particular fun or excitement in spending an evening in the Loop. This obtains to out-of-town visitors as well as to residents of the city.

Notably Poor

Apart from a lack of atmosphere, what the Loop fails to afford are the package ingredients of an exceptional "evening out." There are only a few scattered restaurants left in the area that might be rated good, one hotel supper-club (the Palmer House) within its boundaries, and two or three tolerable places to go for drinks or coffee after the show. With practically no strollers on the streets at night, the Loop has lost all semblance of its old "toddlin' town" image.

The cabarets and boites, the interesting and oddball shops, the concentration of good eating places and fashionable saloons, and all things pertaining to the nocturnal sideshow have moved a couple of miles uptown since the war to Rush, a street of perpetual traffic jams because it's barely wide enough for a normal neighborhood automobile flow. But that's all part of the color. In recent years the sector has burgeoned to include a segment of North State St. parallel and all the intersecting streets from Division to Chicago Ave.

Rush Street's One Legiter

There is one legit house on Rush, a relatively new theatre-cabaret called Happy Medium, and there seems to be an obvious moral to its exceptional success story. To state it idiomatically, "Go where the bright lights are, and you got the game half beat." It is doubtful that the show there, a revue titled "Medium Rare," could have lasted four weeks in the Loop. The reviews were lukewarm or worse. But in its situation, right in the centre of the nightlife artery, it has chalked up 19 months so far, with no stars and never a losing week.

Back to the Loop, for contrast, the neon blacks out early. When the lights go off on the picture house marquees around 10 p.m., it might as well be four in the morning. State St. downtown equates now with any Main Street after dark, a cluster of commercial real estate with mostly a daytime function.

Politics Spoils Erlanger

It makes a dreary, if not depressing, setting for legit shows, and the situation promises to get worse before it improves. One of the last of the "live" streets in the Loop, Randolph between Clark and Dearborn, is ticketed for demolition in 1962 because the city wants to construct a complex of municipal buildings on that site. The block contains the Erlanger Theatre, an excellent house, and, around the corner, the long-traditional after theatre eatery, Henrici's.

The city's selection of that parcel of land seems in contradiction to its intentions to revitalize the Loop. Apparently it was picked because of its proximity to the present City Hall, to convenience moving. Whether or not that be the case, the city has asked the Dept. of City Planning to research the problem and to make proposals that would improve the wasteland condition of the Loop at night. Current thinking at the Department centers on a sort of small-scale Lincoln Center, a city-financed facility that would offer rent-free space to qualifying theatrical and dance groups. A spokesman said, "The city knows that professional resident production is missing, and it feels that something must be done about this."

If this should turn into an actual proposal, it would probably take some time to reach fruition. More immediately promising is the theatre construction, and restoration going on outside the Loop. The old Auditorium Theatre, on South Michigan Ave., is to be refurbished piecemeal, as funds are raised, and work is expected to begin soon on the orchestra level and stage. The Marina City project, against the Chicago River just north of the Loop, will contain a 1,500-seat theatre which David Merriek has optioned and which is expected to be completed 14 months after a deal with Merrick is finalized.

A proposed new office building, which is going to be built just east of the Prudential Bldg., will contain a theatre. And of course there are the already completed auditoria in McCormick Place, one too large for touring legit shows and the other too small, but both nevertheless in a more romantic setting than the houses in the Loop.

Opera Review

Simon Boccanegra

(Florence, Italy)

Florence, Jan. 4.

Florence's opera season has been inaugurated (as every single one in Italy from Milan to Palermo) with a Verdi opera. However "Simon Boccanegra" debut roused much interest because the house was more than half empty at the first performance and didn't fill up during the subsequent ones, the next productions, "Heure Espagnol" by Ravel and "Rossignol" by Stravinsky, bring even less popular for an Italian public.

"Boccanegra was conducted by Vittorio Gui, a musician who, in the 1930s, did much to raise the level of Florence' musical life until the Glyndebourne Festival drew him away. His return sounded promising but Gui lacks by now the elan, passion and sweep necessary to bring off a Verdi opera—especially one of the lesser works from his early period. The singers were not mature enough to cope musically and interpretatively with their roles. All were most promising and could develop into first class singers within a few years and much work—especially so the lead, Mario Zanasi. The Fiesco, Paolo Washington (not American born but his great-grandfather changed his name out of admiration for the first U.S. president) and Maria Parruto, the soprano.

Chorus was perhaps the best prepared and most satisfying. Least of all to be favorably mentioned was the visual side of the production.

Of the marine atmosphere in which this work lives and of which there is mention throughout there wasn't a hint in the sticky obscurity black velvet curtains on which a few over-economic cut-outs were pinned from act to act. This skeleton of Enzo Deho served to inhibit whatever ideas the stage director Aldo Mirabella Vassallo might have had. If in Italy with local casts and artists a Verdi opera can not get an exceptional performance there seems little use to have an opera season.

Europe Feels Travel Falloff

Oberammergau Passion Play, the Olympic Games in Rome and the World Eucharistic Congress in Munich, it was estimated that about 750,000 Americans made the trek to Europe that year. Hotels and restaurants and airlines had been prepared for even bigger business in 1961.

Sour grapes were being thrown in some quarters of Europe on Kennedy's emphasis on "Buy American." The German Lufthansa Airline pointed out that it had spent $236,000 in advertising in America. The German Tourist Assn. had upped its budget for advertising in the U.S. to about $250,000 during '61.

$194,000,000 From U.S.

In 1960, Germany took in about $505,000,000 from the international tourist trade, of which $194,000,000 came from America. Now the gripe is against the Americans staying at home. Last year, Germans were spending in other lands.

Another blow for the pub and club business in Germany, France and England was the midnight curfew slapped on the 500,000 U.S. servicemen stationed in Europe. The U.S. Army's commander in Europe, General Bruce Clarke, ordered his men to be back in barracks by midnight six nights a week, with stayup time one hour longer for Saturday nights.

That meant that plenty of the clipjoints, strip centers, beer taverns and variety shows in Germany, France and England suddenly lost some of the lucrative late-hour GI trade.

Paris Complains Over Spending

And from Paris came another complaint. The general director of the luxurious Meurice Hotel noted that the Americans who arrive in Paris are generally out to impress their relatives, friends and neighbors with what they've seen. Also that the new crop of travelers is rather stingy. The Yank who comes overseas now is liable to be shocked at the high tab of a luxury restaurant, he said, and may feel that he's been taken. He doesn't want it to happen again—so he'll skip the tips, and go to cheaper inns to order the lowest priced food. And maybe cut out the wine.

"Nine out of 10 Americans now have a fixed vacation budget," he said. "They figure out just how much they could spend and if they overspend one day, they skimp the next."

The Englishman is the one who no longer watches his money and is considered the traveler who knows how to live it up abroad now. Italy today is loaded with a new crop of millionaires who know how to throw their lire around. The worst of the tourists, the Frenchman admitted, are the French themselves, who keep an eye out for the cheapest accommodations and the most conservative vacations.

But West Germany, it's just been revealed, now has over 10,000 "millionaires"—residents whose worth exceeds $250,000. And these people, plus the Italians and the English and some of the newly-rich French, represent the current cream of the European tourist trade.

German cities which have missed the regular American business are now catering to the tastes of the German traveler. And it's been noted that while the cheaper rooms-without-water in private homes are going empty, or are being booked by a few economy-class Americans, the higher-priced reservations are being taken.

Complain Over 2 Sets of Prices

Americans abroad long griped that there were two sets of prices—one for the natives and a considerably higher set for the "rech" Americans. But now it seems that the once low-priced lands of Italy, Austria and Spain have decided that they'll have to nick the natives as well. Prices for food, rooms and entertainment went considerably up over last year's tariffs for the same set.

The Europeans are constantly so close to the Russian conflict over Berlin that they're probably considerably less scared than the U.S. folks about journeying to troubled areas. However, a German tourist association first reported that during the fighting in Bizerte, only one of the hundreds of tourists booked for vacations in that sunny land backed out—a middle-aged woman. And North Africa is still getting its share of the European business.

But for many a harried innkeeper, nightclub owner and restaurant operator, it seemed as if there was a crying need for making a bid for the francs, pounds, lire, pesos and marks because practically no one was around clinking silver dollars into the show biz cash registers overseas.

tion, he gets 1½% of the gross for the use of his trademarks, "Leonard Sillman's New Faces" and "New Faces." A minimum of 6% of the gross is to be split among the various authors, composers and lyricists connected with the venture.

Frank Productions, as compensation for "its advise and consultation on music and production of show," is to get a half of 1% of the gross until production costs are recovered and then 1% of the gross. The revue in which Harris Masterson is listed among the backers with a contribution of $65,375, is capitalized at $200,000 with provision for 10% overcall.

tonese and English) speaking town.

Take nightclubs to start with. They depend solely on imported talent but top Yank or Japanese acts seldom, if ever, come here. Inability of niteries to pay prices asked by artists is the chief reason. Niteries here must rank among the lowest priced in the world. They don't charge cover, for one thing, and operate strictly, with a few exceptions, on a minimum tea charge of 25c, the bulk of the clientele being Chinese.

Doing bonanza business, however, are Hollywood films which easily outclass other imports in boxoffice receipts and popularity with the viewing public. This year, three pictures, "The Guns of Navarone" (Columbia), "Ben-Hur" (Metro), and "Spartacus" (U), finished first, second and third, respectively, in the b.o. parade netting $185,535, $153,990 and $117,273. None of the other foreign imports come anywhere near these marks. One significant fact is that net receipts of anyone of these films easily beat 1959's No. 1 boxoffice attraction, "Solomon and Sheba" (UA), which had netted $82,000.

A semblance of competition is being provided by Italian and Japanese films, but they have only limited appeal and don't pose much of a threat to Hollywood product.

Concert artists playing here were pianist Rudolf Serkin, violinist Ruggiero Ricci and American harpist Mildred Dilling but concerts in Hong Kong has never really amounted to much. Colony has no permanent concert hall. The situation in 1962 will be changed with $4,000,000 City Hall having a concert hall with seats for 1,540. Opens in March. Five concerts, highlighted by a performance by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, will be presented during the first week.

cate the elder sister click. For fiscal '61 (ended last June 30), Playboy's newsstand profit was $1,058,279, up from previous year's $604,772. Subscription profit hit $259,818, up from $169,397. Monthly circulation is now 1,250,000 (it was less than 100,000 in its first months). Part of the fiscal '61 profits are admittedly resultant from upping single copy price from 50c to 60c. Advertising for the year netted $438,973 on a gross of $3,063,549.

A SHOW WITH TEN HAPPY ENDINGS

T (for tails and tortoises) was the subject of A TO ZOO, Granada TV's witty programme. TViewers learned that in the animal world, tails have evolved for more specific use than balancing or fly flicking. The dingo, for example, hoists his tail as a sign he is leader of the pack. (You hear that Frankie?) The gila monster, a kind of lizard, uses his tail as a larder in which he stores food. Sea horses, kangaroos, kinkajous and tortoises were also dealt with. A fascinating subject, all in all very much the audience's cup of T.

Television's $1,000,000 (When & If) Manshoot; Lotsa Prestige & Intrigue

By ART WOODSTONE

The television and radio networks are going to spend $1,000,000 or more to cover the orbital flight of Lt. Col. John H. Glenn Jr., but infinitely more important to the webs than this sizeable expenditure is what it will mean in terms of prestige. There are two obvious ways for broadcasting to gain prestige—one is with the public, the other is with Washington.

The timing of the first U.S. manned flight in the space around the earth seems to have had much to do with making Washington prestige even more important this time than the other kind. The Glenn shot was first planned for yesterday (Tues.), almost as a preliminary to the FCC hearings in Washington at which the three networks are the chief participants. Then the shot was shifted to today (Wed.), then delayed to tomorrow and then to Saturday (27), which may still not be final. Nat-

German Pastors Vs. Silly Season

Frankfurt, Jan. 23.

The tense situation in Berlin and the strictness of the West German church are expected to cut down on West Germany's silly season, the Fasching time, when the nightclub and pub owners generally expect their biggest business of the year.

Fasching, the pre-Lenten carnival season, is celebrated with street parades, costume balls, and jillions of parties, with just about every West German city having several weeks of non-stop entertainment at the top clubs, gambling casinos, restaurants and spas.

Actually, the Fasching gets started on the elevensies—eleventh month, eleventh day, eleventh hour. But last November, with spirits dampened by the split

Miami Beach, Jan. 23.

Like the "standing film set" called Las Vegas, a repeat once-over of the Miami Beach scene, after a lapse of six seasons, is also an eyeopener. Apart from the almost uniform French influence on the key hotels—Eden Roc, Fontainebleau, Deauville, Monte Carlo, Carillon, Beau Rivage—lush standards for plush vacationers continue unabated. In many respects, the best traditions of the Cote d'Azur tourist catering have been

Yank-Soviet Together on Feature Film About Clash of Scientists

What may turn out to be the first American-Russian film coproduction is now being mapped by indie producer Lester Cowan and author (and former atomic scientist) Mitchell Wilson. The pair reported in New York yesterday (Tues.) that they have already reached agreement in principle with the Soviets, with only the specifics still to be settled. With U.S. State Department approval, Cowan and Wilson leave for Moscow next week to make the final arrangements.

The property is to be a screen adaptation of Wilson's 1961 novel, "Meeting At A Far Meridian," the first novel by an American author to be published simultaneously in the U.S. and Russia. Associated in the venture, being worked out in accordance with the U.S.-Soviet Cultural Exchange Agreement,

'Mouse' Amused U.S., Not Blighty

"Mouse That Roared," British comedy turned out by the Carl Foreman London-based independent production unit, proved a smash success in the United States, with $2,000,000 in estimated rentals, but only modest in native England, where the gross was about $200,000. Film, done on an unelaborate scale, was strictly British in flavor—typical Blighty. The major boxoffice click had been looked for on home grounds but it turned out the other way around.

Persons connected with the Columbia release now offer a Monday-morning-quarterback explanation. Characters in the satire, they say, showed reluctance to join the army of their mythological country in time of need. This hardly can be construed as a comedy situation to Britons. On the other hand the Yanks just accepted the laughs and the pic became a U.S. winner.

Harold Robbins Rushing Another Novel; Levine Again Gets Pic Rights

Novelist Harold Robbins, who previously sold his "Carpetbaggers" to Embassy Pictures, has followed up by dealing the Joe Levine indie his next, "A Stranger in the House."

Robbins is now at work on the tome, holed up in Norwalk, Conn., and expects to have it completed by the end of April. Simon and Shuster will publish, probably in September of '63. It is stated that "Stranger" will get Robbins out of film industry though story con-

Capsule Pans 'Malicious' in London; They're Just Fair Comment in N.Y.

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Jan. 23.

A dispute between The Observer, a leading London Sunday sheet, and the Society of West End Theatre Managers, has been referred by the latter organization to the Press Council. The Council is an organization set up by Parliament following the Royal Commission on the Press some years back. It has authority to investigate complaints against the press by individuals or organizations.

Towards the end of last month, all members of the Society withdrew their classified ads from The Observer. According to the paper, the action was the result of objections by the West End Theatre Managers to an Observer feature called "Quick Theatre Guide," which had been published monthly under the pseudonym "Mr. Puff." The feature gave a roundup and capsule comment on the London shows.

According to an editorial comment in the paper, the Society had repeatedly made it clear to the Observer that the West End Managers did not like the feature. It had been argued that it was a "restraint of trade and malicious" for a drama critic, once he had expressed an unfavorable view of a

ART LINKLETTER SETS OHIO LEGIT DEBUT

Art Linkletter, radio-television personality, will make his legit debut this year as a summer theatre headliner. He's scheduled to appear next June in "Father of the Bride" at the Ohio chowcases operated by John Kenley in Warren and Columbus. Linkletter will play a week at each place, opening June 12 at the 2,600-seat Packard Music Hall in Warren and June 19 at the 4,000-seat Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Columbus.

Other personages being sought by Kenley for the Warren and Columbus spots next summer include Jane Powell, Van Johnson and Hugh Downs. Kenley has had Downs on his starring roster the last two seasons with the tv emcee-announcer playing to wow business, first in "Anniversary Waltz" and then in "Under the Yum-Yum Tree." The vehicle, for which he's wanted this year, is "Who Was That Lady I Saw You With?"

Kenley hopes to get Miss Powell for "Most Happy Fella" and Johnson for "Music Man," in which he's currently starring in London. Johnson, incidentally, is scheduled to costar in a projected Broadway production of Garson Kanin's "Come On Strong." Kenley operates his summer theatres on a low-admission price policy, the top at both spots last summer being $2.20.

'Judgment,' 'Hustler' U.S. Pix Named on List For Brit. Academy Awards

London, Jan. 23.

Two Hollywood films are on the short list of 11 titles from which the British Film Academy will pick the best film of the year and also the best British pic. Results of the voting will be made known at a Dorchester dinner on April 5.

The two Yank contenders are "Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA) and "The Hustler." Five British pix are short-listed as well as one apiece from Russia, France, Italy and India.

Among the six contestants for the best British screenplay are Carl Foreman ("Guns of Navarone") (Col) Ted Willis ("Flame in the Streets"), and Wolf Mankowitz and Val Guest ("Day the Earth Caught Fire.")

Piper Laurie, Sophia Loren and Jean Seberg are among the candidates for the best foreign actress; and Montgomery Clift, Paul Newman, Sidney Poitier and Maximilian Schell for the best foreign actor.

It's a straight fight between Dick Bogarde and Peter Finch for the male British actor accolade, and a three-way contest between Dora Bryan, Hayley Mills and Deborah Kerr for best British actress.

OLD VAUDE SHOWMEN CHUMS EYE YOUNGMAN

Comic Henny Youngman, who has severed with General Amusement Corp., was booked by Dick Heckenhamp into the Crescendo, Hollywood for two weeks opening Feb. 14. While on Coast he's to be screen-tested by Stanley Kramer for "Mad, Mad World."

Vaudevillian will also be scrutinized while west by two former theatre operators, Sol A. Schwartz of Columbia Pictures and Robert Weitman of Metro.

Meantime Youngman does the 10-performances-in-eight-days routine starting Jan. 26 at the Cavalcade, Miami Beach.

Playwright Bill Hoffman Passes; Colorful Figure Of Air Media & Bway

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Bill Hoffman, 44, who died suddenly Monday afternoon (22) in his Manhattan apartment at 309 East 17 Street was one of the most colorful figures at the Columbia Broadcasting System under the successive regimes of Douglas Coulter, Davidson Taylor and Hubbell Robinson when the CBS radio program department was rated the pace-setter of the industry. A gregarious personality with warm attachments and some violent antipathies, at CBS and elsewhere, he was known to a whole generation of N.Y. script writers and widely among the actors and directors of the town.

Hoffman always signed his work by his nickname Bill, though born Elwood C. in Detroit where his parents and a sister still reside. He sometimes denied, and sometimes boasted of having been an actor in his earlier years. His widow is the radio-tv and stage actress, Toni Darnay.

During World War II Hoffman was exempt from military service because of a back injury which later necessitated a fusion of vertebrae. After serving in Washington with the Office of War Information he joined CBS in New York in 1943. Later he became senior editor in the Division of Program Writing under its then-director, Robert J. Landry. Two of the other script editors on a writing staff of 15, at the time the largest in broadcasting, are also deceased, James Hart and Charles S. Monroe.

Two of Hoffman's plays are currently under option. They are "Helen of Troy", with an old Offenbach score, held by Walter Freed and "Forever Galatea", held by Jay Julian. Another play, "Two Queens of Love and Beauty" was tried out at Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa. last summer with Ann Harding (and Toni Darnay) in the cast.

It was in the fall of 1960 while working on the Offenbach libretto for a production at the Cambridge (Mass.) Festival that Hoffman suffered a fairly severe heart attack. He has since been under medical supervision. His wife sought emergency aid when noticing symptoms of a seizure but it arrived too tardily. Producer John Gerstad and lawyer John Wharton, warm personal friends, took charge following death. The body was removed to Campbell's on Madison and 82 Street. Funeral is tomorrow (Thursday) 2:30.

Falla's 'Atlantida' Set For Philharmonic Hall in Fall

Manuel de Falla's posthumous work, "Atlantida" which had its first concert presentation last fall in Barcelona, Spain, and will have its world premiere as a staged opera at La Scala at Milan, Italy, in June is to be heard in Manhattan next September at Philharmonic Hall.

Latter is believed to have outbid the American Opera Society.

Culture Exposure in U.S. Sticks

Culver Military Academy in Indiana which has $15,000 a year for fees to pay concert and other performing talent in its 1,550-seat Eppley Auditorium recently made a survey of the "culture" experiences of 800 students in county schools near the town of Culver and of 140 students in the local high school. These are the results:

Woman Authors, Produces, Directs Feature In Which Her Child Stars

Boston, Jan. 23.

Shooting on a feature film, "Tears Are For Tomorrow," by Carmen Productions, has begun at Castle Hill, Ipswich, Mass., and will also be filmed around Boston and Newport, R. I. Financial sources and distribution arrangements are unrevealed.

Jean Carmen Dillow, author, producer and director of the film, which she wrote for her son, "Buzzie" Dillow, who plays a nine-year old war orphan, chose the locations for their similiarity to Budapest.

The picture is scheduled for nine weeks shooting in this country and five weeks shooting in Switzerland, Austria and Italy.

The demolished West End of Boston, which was torn down to make way for modern apartment projects, is serving as the bombed area backgrounds of Budapest during the Hungarian revolution.

Miss Dillow has an unknown cast of actors for the leading roles and is herself playing an American news correspondent. Lisa Jonson, Roger Landry, and Lou Steele, New York actors, have arrived here.

"Consulting producer" is Ben Berk; Frank Lybarger is director of photography.

TAX BLOW TO TALENT

New Wording Limits To 50% Of Entertainment

Washington, Jan. 23.

House Ways & Means Committee has adopted new language under which only 50% of night club and theatre entertainment would be deductible. Luncheon-dinner tabs still safe.

This looms as disastrous to talent spots.

Geo. C. Scott-Ted Mann Now Planning Film, TV, Plus Legit in Detroit

Detroit, Jan. 23.

Film-legit actor George C. Scott and New York producer Theodore Mann are expanding their Theatre-of-Michigan Corp. from legit into tv and film productions. They have a three-year contract with ZIV, United Artists' tv producing company, calling for Scott to star in a series about an international newspaperman.

This is in addition to the previously arranged deal for ZIV to invest receipt of $75,000 in Theatre-of-Michigan for its first legit production, "General Seeger." The Ira Levin play, to star William Bendix is scheduled to open Feb. 12 at the Shubert Theatre here.

SUNDAY FILMS AS CONCERT ASSASSIN

Toronto, Jan. 23.

Due to withdrawal of broadcasting sponsor, plus new-to-Ontario Sunday film competition, pop concerts of the Toronto Symphony have been discontinued after 15 years.

Disastrous decline of attendance and resultant b.o. revenue in turn influenced Simpson-Sears Ltd., and Canada Packers Ltd. not to re-sign.

MUSIC HALL, N.Y., SETS 1ST GUEST DIRECTOR

Radio City Music Hall, N.Y., is employing guest directors for its stage shows for the first time. The theatre is augmenting its regular production staff, headed by Leon Leonidoff and Russell Markert, with the engagement of Coast choreographer Marc Platt as guest producer for its next show. The production will accompany the new pic, "Lover Come Back," slated to open next month.

Platt's temporary stint marks a new policy similar to that already instituted for choral groups and with guest performers. Originally a dancer, he performed with the Ballet Russe. He also danced the "Curly" role in "Oklahoma," and did the choreography for the ballet "Ghost Town" for which Richard Rodgers wrote the music.

FRONT-MONEY-&-'OVERCALL'

Income Tax Seers: B.O. To Be Okay

Washington, Jan. 23.

The outlook for a continuing upbeat in film box office has been underscored again with the submission of President Kennedy's budget to Congress.

Internal Revenue Service crystal ballers count on a healthy three million dollar increase in the yield from Uncle Sam's admissions levy, bulk of which comes from picture houses.

Admissions tax projections contained in the budget were as follows: for fiscal 1961, $37,000,000; fiscal 1962, $40,000,000; and fiscal 1963 (beginning next July 1, $43,000,000).

Lull Until March 15 at 20th Lot

1963 Schedule Then Gets Going — Levathes Currently on Overseas Check

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Camera action on the 20th-Fox lot will take a three to four after Jerry Wald's "Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation" winds in a day or so. No cameras will grind at 20th-Fox until March 15, at least, when it's hoped that producer Henry T. Weinstein can get started on "Something's Got to Give" with Marilyn Monroe.

On Feb. 14, Irwin Allen will begin a week's work on "Five Weeks in a Balloon" and then take the unit to Hawaii for about a week, returning to finish up at the Westwood lot.

Nothing is definitely set to go outside of these two pix on the local lot.

Wald's other pic "Adventures of a Young Man" is winding in Italy. It started here Sept. 25.

Four other 20th pix being made abroad are approaching windups of essential filming. "Cleopatra" is now slated to end camera work in Italy and Egypt in March. "The Longest Day" is rushing to end principal lensing the end of next month. "The Lion" and "Nine Days to Rama" are skedded to end European activity by spring.

From all appearances, concentration of 20th's 1963 production will begin in mid-February and end in December. The company's 1962 releases will be canned by mid-February. These will not embrace "Cleo," set for November, and "Longest Day," both specials, the former on roadshow basis with like possibility for the latter.

Production head Peter G. Levathes who went to England for a visit after a looksee on the "Cleo" campus in Rome, has just made another stopover in Gotham before returning to the studio Jan. 15.

Prior to planing to Rome, Levathes left with exec committee in New York list of 30 properties he'd like to draw for 1963 studio state. He hopes to come back with

PAR ROLLS 9, EARLY 1962

But As To Jerry Lewis, The Word Is Unsure

Paramount is beginning the new year with a schedule of nine features going before the cameras in 1962's first four months. Excluded from the schedule for the present, at least, is anything with Jerry Lewis, who's engaged in a contractual row with the company.

First starter in January is Jack Rose's production of "Who's Got the Action," starring Dean Martin, Lana Turner and Eddie Albert.

Columbia O'Seas Runs 15% Ahead Thanks To 'Guns'

Columbia business overseas for the first 33 weeks of the current fiscal year is running 15% ahead of last year, Mo Rothman, exec v.p. of Col International, reported in New York this week, following a two-month trip around the world. This is all the more impressive, he said, in view of currency devaluations in such countries as Brazil, Venezuela, the Philippines and total loss of Cuba.

Largely responsible for the upbeat is Carl Foreman's production of "Guns of Navarone" which will equal and perhaps exceed Col's previous record holder, "Bridge on the River Kwai," Rothman reported. "Navarone," he said, has topped the best of Col's everything in Great Britain with rentals of $2,000,000. Another record is in Japan, with $1,500,000. He cited numerous other areas where the billings have been in orbit.

Another angle behind the overseas success story lies in the marketing of relatively inexpensive but exploitable pictures such as "Homicidal" and "Scream of Fear." These were given the same kind of promotional push as in the States with the result that the grosses

Loew's Theatres' Net Up to 528G In Qtr.

Loew's Theatres pocketed a net of $528,400, equal to 20c per share of common stock, in the first quarter of fiscal year ended last Nov. 30.

Laurence Tisch, board chairman, said that gross revenues for the period reached $10,305,000, compared to $9,890,000 for the like period a year ago, when the company's net amounted to $403,800 or 15c. a share.

Sid Deneau Exits Par

Sidney G. Deneau is exiting this week as v.p. and assistant general manager of Paramount Film Distributing after an eight and a half year association with the company. He had been specializing in circuit sales.

Deneau's future in negotiation. Ditto his successor.

Before joining Par Deneau was v.p.-general sales manager of the Selznick Releasing Organization and g.s.m of the Schine Theatre Circuit.

Wheelwright Shuttling L.A.-N.Y.-Madrid For Bronston Productions

Ralph Wheelwright, longtime publicity exec at Metro and author of several screenplays, has joined Samuel Bronston Productions as ad-pub v.p. He'll maintain offices in Los Angeles, New York and Madrid. His recent assignments have included coordination, for Metro, of the campaign for Bronston's 'King of Kings,' and Bronston's rep in the promotion of "El Cid," via Allied Artists, in key American cities.

Heretofore Bronston's major domo in the ad-pub field was Robert S. Taplinger, who heads his

BILL SCHNEIDER TO SERVE BRONSTON IN N.Y.

Bill Schneider, well known in film circles as a member of the Donahue & Coe agency, has resigned to join Samuel Bronston Productions on a fulltime basis in Manhattan.

He did the art work for the "El Cid" campaign, which was received favorably by producer Bronston.

RITTER SYNDICATE IN MAIDEN TRY

By GENE ARNEEL

Theatrical Interests Plan, active in various phases of legit production, is entering the motion picture field and will engage in same along the fiscal lines which obtain in legit. Ted Ritter, head man of TIP, disclosed that the film rights to "Shame of Our Wounds," a novel by Arthur Roth, have been acquired, Frank Gilroy has signed to do the script and Daniel Petrie is set to direct. Both Gilroy and Petrie have had substantial credits in past.

While this is an initial film venture for TIP, the move could have more than ephemeral meaning, for this outfit is well established. Active in both producing and financing Broadway plays, the stockholder roster numbers 840. A click picture certainly will mean follow-ups.

The feature film endeavor is to be set up on a limited partnership basis at a front-money budget of $200,000 with an overcall provision of 20%. Plan is to start the camera work in New York next summer.

Ritter disclosed TIP has no immediate distribution plans, instead prefers to complete production, have "people" see the finished product and then consider a release agency. The angle here is the obvious one; a post-production deal can be negotiated lots more favorably if the given production has merit.

TIP two years ago produced the national company of "Look Homeward Angel," will co-produce with Louis Allen "Devil's Palm," which starts rehearsals in London in March. Other legit productions on the agenda are "Dance to the Piper" by Agnes DeMille and "Angel, Angel Down We Go" by Robert Thom.

Knightly Combo Looks Good B.O.

Reports vary as to the success so far of Metro's program of placing an extensive list of oldies into reissue via states rights distributors. But this much seems for sure: the packaging of "Ivanhoe" and "Knights of the Round Table" as a dual bill is going over strong.

There already have been a couple of instances where the double feature has been held over—Indianapolis and Toledo. This is unusual for re-releases. And there's been a moveover for a second week in Hartford.

Both pictures did well for MGM at the beginning. A bolstering factor for this second time around, according to some insiders, is that Elizabeth Taylor has the femme lead in the two productions. And the recent publicity anent Miss Taylor, mainly concerning "Cleopatra" and 20th-Fox, has been extraordinary.

JOHNSON TO U.S. FOR LEGIT, FILM CONFABS

London, Jan. 23.

Nunally Johnson planed out for the U. S. with a stopover in N. Y. before heading for Hollywood. In Manhattan, he will gander the Broadway presentation of "Take Her, She's Mine," which 20th-Fox has bought. He then proceeds to Hollywood to discuss with 20th the setting up of his latest script, "Stranger in Golah."

Also on his agenda during his coast stay will be confabs with Peter Levathes on the scripting and production of his daughter Nora's novel about adolescents, "World of Henry Orient," for which he hopes to have Hayley Mills as star.

20th-Fox Shares Climb Though Wall St. In Slump Last Week; Action Stirs Trade Speculation

By VINCENT CANBY

Has 20th-Fox really turned the corner towards fiscal recovery?

The question obviously is being asked in the vicinity of Wall Street where last week, in the face of a bearish market, 20th shares continued to climb, closing Friday (19) at 38⅝, a new high for the new year. Why the sudden strength in the shares which last year went rocketing up to 55¼, only to fall even more rapidly to a 1961 low of 29⅝?

Barring some unknown, behind-the-scenes manipulations, there appear to be several conventionally appropriate reasons for the upbeat trading, despite the fact that 1961 will probably go down as one of the darkest in 20th's fiscal history. For one thing, the company's $11,544,007 loss for the third 1961 quarter ended Sept. 30 (including "special write-offs of $9,200,000), apparently has helped clear the decks for a "better" fourth quarter and then a dramatic upswing, perhaps even into the black, for the first 1962 quarter.

Most obviously, of course, 20th has some money-making pictures in release at the moment, in contrast to the situation a year ago when the company went from the November, 1960 release of "North to Alaska" to the April, 1961 release of "Return to Peyton Place" with nary a money-maker in between those two.

Right now, the company has at least four sizably profitable pix going—"The Comancheros," "The Hustler," "Second Time Around" and "The Innocents." There are even indications that the comparatively modest comedy, "Bachelor Flat," will go into the black, which would have been big news last year. Still an uncertain quantity, since it's just now playing its first dates, is "Tender Is The Night." Pic is doing nicely in New York, despite mixed reviews, but has a

KEEP SETTLEMENT SECRET

Cy Howard Sued Lewis & Par Re 'CinderFella'

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

An out-of-court settlement has been reached in producer-writer Cy Howard's $250,000 suit against Jerry Lewis, Jerry Lewis Productions, Paramount Pictures and Frank Tashlin over a Howard screenplay allegedly the basis for the Lewis starrer "CinderFella."

Howard sued in Superior Court last June 21 for $200,000 plus $50,000 exemplary damages, contending that a screenplay he wrote for producer Hal Wallis as a Martin-Lewis vehicle when M&L were under contract to Wallis, was the basis for the "CinderFella" film. He claimed Lewis had learned of the screenplay while under contract to Wallis.

Amount of the settlement was not disclosed.

'We're Sorry' Too Often Reiterated By Film Trade

Eric A. Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, alternately rapped and praised the film industry in a talk in Hartford, Conn., Monday (22). The words of affection for the business he fronts for came as no surprise, of course. In sharp contrast were his words of condemnation.

Johnston, addressing the Men's Club of Temple Beth Israel, accused the picture trade of perhaps being an "industry of apologists," asking for a pardon from charges levelled against it instead of letting "a little more courage to break out once in while."

He suggested that public confidence is lacking and this is perhaps due to the industry's own apologies anent the making of mature picture. And yet it was a "must" that the Production Code be amended in order to reflect contemporary society.

He said, too, the "we're sorry" attitude has been expressed in the face of allegations about runaway production and yet the opening of the world market for Yank pictures, through ingenuity and persever-

Metro's Titanus Rights Sans Certain Markets

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Metro has set three European co-production deals, two with Titanus Films of Italy and one with Jacques Bars Cipra Co. of France, under which it will receive worldwide distribution rights with exception of a few Continental countries. Exceptions on the two Italian films are France, Italy and Spain; for French film, France, Belgium, Luxembourg, West Germany, Austria and Holland.

Titanus duo include "The Golden Arrow," starring Tab Hunter, currently shooting, and "Arturo's Island," both produced by Geoffredo Lombardo. Cipra production is "Monkey in Winter," to star Jean Gabin and Jean Paul Belmondo.

R. H. O'Brien O'Seas

Robert H. O'Brien, recently elevated to exec v.p. at Metro, off over the past weekend for London and a few spots on the Continent, to look in on both production and distribution activities.

The calendar apparently is crowded, for he'll be gone only just about one week.

Leo J. Horster Winds U.S. Trip With Batch Of B Pix for Germany

Leo J. Horster, producers' rep in Germany for a number of American, British and French interests, winds up a two-week stay in New York Friday (26) with more than 50 American features in hand for his German distrib clients.

Principal object of his current visit, Horster reported at his suite at the Warwick Thursday (18), has been the acquisition of B pix, in the action-exploitation genre. With the decline in B-pix production in the States, finding such product is no longer easy, he said. However, there remains a lucrative, if limited, market for this material in Germany.

Horster said that the kind of German audience which patronizes this fare is comparatively faithful in that it is not the type that has tv sets at home or is spending its leisure time indulging in any of the newly available entertainment activities. Of Germany's approximately 6,000 theatres, about 750 specialize in action-exploitation stuff. Horster's distrib clients pay between $3,500 and $5,000 flat for a five-year release deal for Germany-Austria. Costs of dubbing, making accessories, prints, etc., usually bring the prerelease investment in such a pic to as high as $25,000, he says.

Horster, who lived in New York for 10 years between 1925 and 1934, worked for both the old First National Co. and Paramount. For many years he was also the German rep for Samuel Goldwyn and Walt Disney. Presently, he also is exclusive agent in Germany for product of Britain's Independent Television Corp.

'Not Running Away, But Bringing U.S. Something': Bronston Credo

Samuel Bronston this past week contributed a new twist in thinking about so-called runaway production. The American producer has been functioning in Spain, and will continue to do so, and thus it was a natural that the question of runaway should come up within the course of a press conference.

Filmmaker put it this way: "We're not running away; we're bringing in something."

His point is that he engages in international bartering deals of the type which came into vogue shortly after World War II. These yield to him a flock of Spanish pesatas. He uses the latter currency to make globally-flavored pictures in and around Madrid. These in turn are converted into American dollars for the Yankee market. "King of Kings" and "El Cid" are examples. They are contributing to the economy of the United States industry via distribution (Metro and Allied Artists) and exhibition.

His next two, "55 Days at Peking" and "Fall of Rome," also are to be made in Spain. Beyond these is "The French Revolution." Bronston said he favors Spain because of its "relaxed atmosphere" and because it's a point from which "creative activity is accessible."

Bronston also elaborated on his preference of territorial distributors around the world rather than a production-distribution partnership with an American major company. The international "collective" (as it was headlined in VARIETY last week), plus specifically-drawn schedules, provide him with an immediate crack at the various markets once a picture is completed. There are no delays and, consequently, no protracted interest charges on production borrowings.

He noted that "Kings" was ready in April but did not get a U. S. opening until October. This was last year. In contrast, the "Cid" print was ready just two days in advance of its opening. Ralph Wheelwright, new ad-pub v.p. for Bronston Productions, offered a startling commentary on how openings can sometimes be put off. He noted that Samuel Goldwyn's "Porgy and Bess" is four years old but has yet to play London because of the local booking setup. This Columbia release must await the windup of "South Pacific" at the Empire Theatre and this run is just going on and on.

Bronston now off to the Paris opening of "Kings" and the Tel Aviv bow of "Cid."

Spain More Like Rome?

Film delegation out of Rome called upon Samuel Bronston asking that his future production of "Fall of Rome" be lensed in the Eternal City. He said no, it will be produced in Spain.

Bronston reasoned that the Rome of today is not at all like it was at the time of the fall.

Cuevas To Agata; Dibildos' O'Seas Rep, Zuleta

Madrid, Jan. 23.

Antonio Cuevas, former sub-director of Suevia Films—Cesareo Gonzalez Productions, was named director last week of Agata Films by Jose Luis Dibildos. Agata Films was founded by Dibildos who turned it into one of the few successful banners on the local scene when he introduced a new vogue on Spanish screens with a frivously gay but harmless type of modern comedy.

Another Dibildos appointment was his assignment of ex-San Sebastian Film Festival director Antonio Zuleta as head of Agata's foreign department. With this appointment, Agata switched from national product to ambitious co-productions—the most important of which partnered Dibildos with Carlos Ponti and Alliance Films of France in the Sophia Loren-starrer, "Mme. Sans Gene."

Antonio Cuevas was for years a prominent figure in the entertainment sindicato before joining Cesareo Gonzalez in a top executive post. He also represents Uniespana on the board of directors of the San Sebastian Film Festival.

By naming Cuevas to the director's desk, Dibildos will now be free of administrative entanglements and have a free hand to roam the Continental coproduction circuit for stepped-up copartnering.

Ask $125,500,000 For USIA Beef-Up

Washington, Jan. 23.

U.S. Information Agency is asking Congress for a bulging $125,500,000 budget to help spread the good word about Uncle Sam around the world next year.

President Kennedy's spending plans for the upcoming fiscal year (beginning July 1) calls for a giant increase from $111,487,000 actually allowed USIA by Congress last year.

Of the hike, about $2,100,000 will go for stepping up USIA's motion picture, television and publications operations overseas, while $2,800,000 is earmarked for acquiring facilities for Voice of America.

USIA's Motion Picture Service is down for a $1,167,000 hike for a total of $7,163,000 to spend next fiscal year.

While Director Edward R. Murrow seeks to expand USIA's official propaganda channels, the budget confirms the previously reported policy of downplaying agency support of commercial film distribution via the Informational Media Guaranty Program.

The President asked for an increase from $1,500,000 to $4,300,000 in actual appropriations to help take care of the fund's sizable impairment. The message said this would allow an increase of $2,300,000 in the total amount of contracts issued under the program. IMG gives publishers, film distributors etc. a dollar return on

MILLIE PERKINS INTO 'DULCINEA' AT MADRID

Madrid, Jan. 23.

Millie Perkins went before cameras last week in Spanish-Italian-German coproduction "Dulcinea" under the direction of Spain's Vicente Escriva with a cast that includes Cameron Mitchell, Folco Lulli (in the role of Sancho Panza), Argentine actor Andres Mejuto and locals Jose Rubio and Ana Maria Noe.

Vicente Escriva's adaptation of the French play written by Gaston Baty was initially planned as a Spanish coproduction with Yank Vinod Pathak, but the latter's recent financial demise on the unfinished Diana Dors-starrer "Majorca Encounter," veered Escriva's Aspa Productions toward a continental tie-up with Italy and Germany.

In the Cervantes classic, Dulcinea is a non-existent idealization of romantic womanhood created in Don Quixote's imagination. The Escriva-Gaston Baty version brings her to life and omits Quixote entirely except by indirect reference. Filming is now in progress at CEA Studios.

Par Tint TV Sets Via Tokyo's Sony

Sony Corp., Tokyo outfit which has gained global prominence in the electronics field, has entered a deal with Paramount to work jointly in the manufacture and marketing of the Par-owned Chronatron color television tube and associated apparatus. The Chronatron was invented by Dr. Ernest O. Lawrence.

Par president Barney Balaban, v.p. Paul Raibourn and other officials feel the tieup is a major step toward the global marketing of an improved full color tv set at prices lower than the present market level. The manufacture and sale of Chronatrons agreement is in the form of a technical assistance contract which Sony has with Par.

Columbia Idling Pro Tem But 'Playboy' Readying; Sol A. Schwartz's Credo

By WILLIAM ORNSTEIN

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Columbia studio head, Sol A. Schwartz is in a play-for-it-by-ear mood, believed reinforced by strictures from the Manhattan homeoffice. Per Schwartz himself, the intention is to keep production plans fluid, i.e., contingent on properties as they come along.

Production at the Gower St. lot is idling (albeit two pix, "Lawrence of Arabia" and "War Lover," are shooting abroad). There's a backlog of projects awaiting the go-ahead for lensing here, but no indications on starts—and some outsider surmising has it that some of the projects won't.

Schwartz and Columbia rate as marketable the just-completed deal for "Playboy," the young le sexy hot publisher Hugh Hefner saga which Tony Curtis will do for the studio under his Curtleigh banner. There's been no revealed budget, but it's believed the cost will be about $2,000,000 with Col assertedly sole bankroller.

This is the project first "announced" for Universal where Curtis maintains an office and has a five-picture player pact), but apparently he got an improved deal to produce "Playboy" on the Columbia lot.

Shooting is due to start and wind this year, but so far "Playboy" appears to be the only project with a production greenlight. Others are being prepped by Sam Katzman, Philip Barry Jr., and Jerry Bresler (via a third "Gidget" outing), and at least two other producers are waiting on script approval. Also, Freddie Brisson has the screen adaptation of "Yum Yum Tree" in preparation. But withal, no hard production dates on any of these activities.

New York Sound Track

Cornel Wilde, carving a new career as producer, acquired Universal's rights in "Ataturk," story of the founder of presentday Turkey. It will probably be a coproduction with the same Yugoslav partners of his "Lancelot and Guinevere," latter being prepped in Britain and which U will also release . . . U's Phil Gerard was in Boston yesterday (Tues.) showing New England exhibs "The Outsider," yarn of Pima Indian war hero Ira Hayes with Tony Curtis starred . . . Even if she doesn't cop a thesping prize this year, Doris Day rates as the screen's top fashionplate. She's on the Fashion Foundation of America's best-dressed list, which measures 'em from various fields on the ability to wear apparel.

Huge turnout for the first annual IFIDA dinner-dance at the Astor last Tuesday (16) night was evidence of the new esteem with which importing and indie-distributing are now held by the industry at large. Among the non-IFIDA people on hand: Manny Silverstone, 20th International veep; Cy Malumed of Columbia; Herb Golden, Bosley Crowther (on the dais), Harold and Lillian Rand, Myrna Loy, Rita Gam, and others . . . Also spotted: Bill Reich, former AIP exec, who now heads his own Major Film Distributors . . . One newsman, who had also dined in the Astor ballroom earlier in the day at the Variety Club luncheon, suggested, in a burst of inspired altruism, that "this food should be exported to all the other film-producing nations of the world." He asked: "Do you realize that Astor Hotel chicken is practically unknown outside New York?"

"Bang bang, you're dead!" has now been replaced by San Francisco kiddies with atom age "Ssst ssst, you're sterile!," reports CBC interviewer Gil Christie from the coast.

Child star Hayley Mills, after gandering her poppa, John Mills, in "Ross" on Broadway, a U. S.-to-Europe item, enrolling in a private Swiss school. She's set for her third Disney stint, "Mother Carries Chickens," to film this summer, but apparently won't do Ross Hunter's "Chalk Garden" . . . The Barbara Ellen Livingston-Paul Shobet (non-pro) nuptials were Sunday (21) in the Bronx. She's the daughter of Milt Livingston, Universal tradepress-mag contact, and Beatrice Livingston, Variety Club Tent 35 secretary.

It's a busy week for the UA people who meet planes: Billy Wilder and I.A.L. Diamond passed through town over the weekend en route from Hollywood to Paris to scout "Irma La Douce" locations. William Wyler arrived Monday (22) to promote his "Children's Hour." Producers Stuart Millar and Lawrence Turman also passed through Monday en route to London to make production arrangements on the upcoming Judy Garland starrer, "A Lonely Stage."

Universal's remake of its "Phantom of the Opera" (this edition by Hammer Films) will have yet British thesp Ian Wilson (426 screen appearances to date) as the eponymous phantom. Lon Chaney, the elder, did the original—and silent—1924 version, which U reissued with sound five years later. A 1943 reincarnation starred Claude Rains as the distorted little man.

"Real Love Affairs," 25c monthly magazine published by Planned Periodicals in Manhattan, carries in its March issue a piece by Lawrence J. Quirk entitled: "Hollywood's Brat-Pack," and asking the question, "Are They Making Juvenile Delinquents out of our kids." The Bratpack is identified as including Natalie Wood, Warren Beatty, Sean Flynn, Creryl Crane, Eddie Robinson Jr., Troy Donahue, Lili Kardell, John Barrymore Jr., Tony Perkins, Tuesday Weld "and on and off the Crosby Boys." Article implies coltishness, lack of discipline, but is broadly generalized. Companion magazine of same house, Hollywood Tattler, also with a piece about Troy Donahue, has a picce entitled, "Do Foreign Sex Films Menace Our Youth's Morals?" with synopses and stills from Italian and French releases.

"The portrayal of the Jewish human being in films" was the topic of a recent lecture by Max Lippmann, director of the German Institute for Film Research (Wiesbaden) at the Jewish community centre in W-Berlin. Lippmann, a Jewish victim of the Nazi regime, said that before 1933 nobody really cared for a special typification of the Jew on the screen. Lippmann revealed that Goebbels still in 1945 planned another such big-scale anti-Semitic film, "The Merchant of Venice," derived from Shakespeare. Veit Harlan was to direct this one, too, with Werner Kraus as Shylock, plus Ferdinand Marian and Harlan's actress-wife, Kristina Soederbaum. Lecturer combined his lecture with excerpts from the German "Jew Suss" (1940), the Italian documentary, "October 16, 1943" (1960) and the Italian-French feature, "Kapo" (1960). The latter two films were to show how foreign filmmakers treated the fate of the Jews on the screen.

Reader Ronald Weinfeld of Far Rockaway writes: "A year ago this week, the RKO local circuit house had "North to Alaska" and "Goddess of Love." Ernie Kovacs, in "Alaska," was killed in an auto accident last week. Johnny Horton, a warbler, met death the same way in November, 1960. He sang the title song in the pic. Belinda Lee, of "Goddess" also met death in an auto accident last summer."

Maximillian Schell in town to receive his New York Critics' prize for "Judgment at Nuremberg" at Sardi's Saturday (20) evening . . . Metro's "Sweet Bird of Youth" gets an A-III (morally unobjectionable for adults) rating from the Legion of Decency, with this observation: "This picture is being advertised as adult entertainment."

20th-Fox's chief counsel, Otto Koegel, has been awarded the Citation of Merit of the American Scenic and Historic Society for his work in preserving national landmarks. Koegel was particularly active in preservation of Bedford House, home of John Jay in Westchester County . . . Bon Ami Film Distributing Corp. has joined IFIDA with Jackson Dube repping the firm on the IFIDA board of directors . . . Jennifer Jones, Jason Robards Jr., Joan Fontaine and Lauren Bacall, heading the star list at Thursday (18) night's preem of "Tender Is The Night" at the Paramount.

Add two more names to the already crowded marquee list for Darryl F. Zanuck's "The Longest Day": John Wayne and Richard Beymer. Wayne will play Lt. Col. Benjamin Vandervoot and Beymer Pvt. Arthur "Dutch" Schultz . . . Director J. Lee Thompson ("Guns of Navarone," "Taras Bulba") gets a sharp change of pace in his next production: 20th-Fox's macabre morality drama, "The Visit," starring Ingrid Bergman and Anthony Quinn. It's due to start in September.

First New York theatre date for the House UnAmerican Activities pic, "Operation Abolition," will be at the New Yorker Jan. 29. On the same bill will be another version of the pic (same picture print but with a soundtrack prepared by the American Civil Liberties Union). Also on the program will be a 28-minute short, "Wasn't That A Time," made by Michael and Philip Burton, about the subsequent experiences of three people after they'd been investigated by the House committee.

Arthur ("Young Doctors") Hailey of Toronto has won Doubleday's $10,000 prize for his novel "In High Places."

Film, stage and television performer Andy Griffith, a native of Mount Airy, will visit Charlotte in April for a citation for making North Carolina well known. It's stunt of Charlotte Sales and Marketing Executives Inc.

Ed Kingsley is planning to bring British author Kingsley Amis over for the opening of the Peter Sellers starrer, "Only Two Can Play," based on Amis' novel, "That Uncertain Feeling." Pic is due to open at the Fine Arts following "One, Two, Three," with no date yet in sight . . . Publicist-writer Al Sherman is working on a history of the art house in the U. S. and is interested in acquiring some early programs,

ROME AFIRE WITH FILM DEALS

Kearns the Censorship-Lover

Washington, Jan. 23.

Strictly oddball but worth watching nonetheless is a bill authored by Rep. Carroll Kearns (R-Pa.) which would impose a censorship-classification scheme for motion pictures, legit productions and broadcasting in the nation's capital.

The District being under the federal aegis, the bill would lend the dignity of Uncle Sam's imprimatur to censorship throughout the states.

Kearns' measure is the first to be dropped in the Congressional hopper in recent years which proposes a direct scheme of film or legit censorship.

(There have been censorship bills for broadcasting, however, one introduced by Kearns last year).

Unless the climate of opinion takes a drastic turn for the worse, Kearns would have to unscrew the dome of the Capitol to get his bill out.

Swaffer Was Good, and He Knew It; Profile of an Unabashed Egotist

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Jan. 23.

Death at 82 last Tuesday (16) of Hannen Swaffer, journalist, dramatic critic, egotist, confidant of ministers, friend of show business and ardent spiritualist, drew obituary notices in the press, on tv and radio beyond those usually accorded leading statesmen. Typically, however, he wrote his own obit for the Daily Herald, the sheet with which he had been associated for many years up to the time of his death. That was published last Thursday.

For more than 30 years Swaffer was a neighbor of VARIETY. His apartment on the fourth floor of a building overlooking Trafalgar Square—his vantage point, as he said, to report the revolution — was above this paper's former London bureau. He was a regular contributor to VARIETY between the wars, but in the postwar period confined himself to writing specials.

One of those specials was his obit of George Bernard Shaw, with whom Swaff had a close personal frendship. His obituary, acclaimed at the time as one of the best and most intimate accounts of the great playwright, was written without reference to notes of any kind. There was no question of Swaff having to go down to a newspaper morgue to check his facts. His memory was prodigious, and his VARIETY story accurately recorded dates of outstanding events in the life of G.B.S. and conversations between them. He also continued to write for VARIETY'S anniversary numbers, though had not done so for several years. He regarded that chore as an effective way of letting his legion of friends in the United States know that he was still living.

Blew Up Storms

Swaff's first close association with the world of show business came in the late 1920's when he became drama critic of the Daily and Sunday Express. With characteristic immodesty, he described himself as the greatest of all critics.

He Who Gets Slapped

Hannen Swaffer is one of a number of critics who have, in the course of time, been publicly slapped by an actress. In Swaffer's case it was an American, Lillian Foster. Nobody seems to remember why, but she was real vexed at time.

Vienna was edified about two years ago when an actress there slapped a local reviewer. It is believed there are a number of other instances of the kind.

Arthur Watkins On Film Business And Festivals

By DICK RICHARDS

London, Jan. 23.

Anyone who still fails to accept that the film world is now a completely international industry is refusing to be realistic. That is the opinion of Arthur Watkins, president of the British Film Producers Assn. One of the points on which both he and the members of his association feel keenly is that of Film Festivals.

"Certainly we in the BFPA believe in their value, though that does not necessarily imply that we are fully satisfied with the way they are run," Watkins told this reporter. "Equally, the International Federation of Film Producers' Associations is constantly reviewing the handling of Festivals and seeking ways of improving them."

Watkins believes that there are too many Festivals but sees no practical way of rationing them. To say, imperiously, to any country: "There are too many Festivals—you must not run one—would be impossibly arbitrary. The fact is that there are not really enough good films to go round, so that the quality of the Festivals is bound to vary. In the end it is probable that some Festivals may fail through lack of support and that an even level of the world-wide Festivals may then be found."

Prexy Watkins continued on the lines of the need for the encouragement of Film Festivals to develop their own characteristic flavor. "Some have always shown themselves more interested in the artistic side of films whereas

300 Toast Bill German

Film company officials, theatremen and other tradesters—300 in all—attended the annual Federation of Jewish Philanthropies luncheon at New York's Hotel Astor last Thursday (18) honoring William J. German, head of W. J. German Inc. This distributor of Eastman Kodak professional film was cited for his leadership in charitable endeavors.

Total of $250,000 was raised for the Federation, according to Leo Jaffe, film industry division chairman.

SAN JUAN BOSCO TO WINNERS COME JAN. 31

Madrid, Jan. 16.

Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo will hand out over a million pesetas (around $20,000) this month at the annual San Juan Bosco Awards, Spain's equivalent of the Academy Oscars.

There will be two major awards of 250,000 pesetas. First will go to the motion picture that best exalts this country's moral, spiritual, political or sindicalist precepts, while the second will be prized for artistic superiority. Three pix in the artistic category will receive runners-up prizes of 150,000, 125,000 and 100,000 pesetas. Other cash benefits will be bestowed for performance, screenplay, direction, photography, art direction and right down the line to include the best film unit, best cast, crew, lab personnel and contingent of extras.

Spanish Oscars will be presented at the annual Sindicato dinner on Jan. 31—anniversary of the film industry's patron saint, San Juan Bosco.

NEGULESCO'S ZEST FOR 'BEING FREE'

It may be rather difficult to get director Jean Negulesco to go back to a major company-studio setup after he's tasted the freedom of being an indie. Negulesco, now prepping the U. S. release (via United Artists) of "Jessica," an Italo-French coproduction (for Dear Films of Rome and Arianne Films of Paris), has breathed the fresh air of autonomy and likes it fine, even the technical and fiscal details which used to be handled by the Big Brother who runs every major studio.

In New York this week, Negulesco reported that by acting as his own boss in preparing the production, he had readied the "Jessica" package for all of $50,000—that included his scouting of Sicilian locations, transAtlantic travel, putting the script in shape, etc. If he had been working under a studio setup, he estimates the preproduction work would have come to over $250,000. Pic, budgeted at $1,000,000, was shot principally on Sicilian locations (near Taormina), with about one-third of the work being done in studios in Rome.

Negulesco seems particularly proud of "Jessica" because it has been "his" production all the way. He recalled that before production he had submitted a copy of the script to the Production Code Administration and had been told that it was quite unsuitable. After some soul-searching, and conferences with his colleagues, he had decided to go ahead and shoot anyway. He did, and has now got PCA approval. Under other circumstances, the picture probably would have been abandoned, he said, or it would have been so rewritten as to lose the quality with which he finally emerged. And, he emphasizes, the finished "Jessica" is substantially the same script he first gave to the PCA.

Legion Angle

He also is confident of getting an approved rating from the Roman Catholic Legion of Decency, he says, noting that Monsignor Little, of the Legion, had made certain small suggestions, which he had accepted. "Jessica" is a sort of modern "Lysistrata," set in a small Sicilian town whose ladies go on strike to make sure that a pretty American midwife, of whom they are all jealous, will have no future reason for hanging around town. Film stars Angie Dickinson, Maurice Chevalier, Noel-Noel, Agnes Morehead and a number of other top Italo and French actors.

It may also be unique in that it marks Negulesco's debut as a dubbing actor—the director wound up by dubbing the English voice for Noel-Noel, under the somewhat caustic direction of Miss Morehead and Mrs. Negulesco (Dusty Anderson). ("Watch out," said Miss Morehead at one point, "You're beginning to sound like Gregory Ratoff." Miss Anderson thought he had "too much tenor" in his voice.)

Happy Excitement

Negulesco, whose home is in Hollywood, also liked the excitement and enthusiasm he found in working in Italy. The director, who started something of a trend with his extensive use of the Roman locale for 20th-Fox's "Three Coins in The Fountain," describes Rome today as the center of the film-making world. Hollywood, he says, played a great part in the development of motion pictures, but the excitement has now vanished and can now only be experienced in Rome. "Everybody's making pictures. Everybody's making deals."

Some of that activity is mighty loose and casual, he says, with many of the pictures, as well as the deals, being made long before there are any scripts. He reported the happiness of one actress, shortly after she had completed a film, when she received the script of the picture just shot and found it closely resembled the material they had photographed. Alain Delon, he says, was quite unsettled when he was dickering with Negulesco re "Jessica" and found the

Staid Ads, In Longhair Tradition, Other Gimmicks Boom 'Rosenkavalier'

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Jan. 23.

A novel publicity campaign and a highly unusual presentation has created a success in West Germany for the J. Arthur Rank film "Der Rosenkavalier" has brought people into the cinema who are not usual film-goers.

Theory in Europe is generally that, just as it's thought that U.S. musicals often don't click here, so it is equally impossible to present a straight filmization of an opera. But the click of "Rosenkavalier" proved all the predictions wrong.

Paul Czinner shot "Der Rosenkavalier" at the Salzburg Festival during the summer season of 1960, actually filming it for only five nights after the regular opera performances had ended. He has used similar techniques for shooting the Russian Bolshoi Ballet and the London Royal Ballet, but this was the first time that the actual performance of a full-length opera has been shot as a film.

Pic was given its start in West Germany on a test basis with a glamor opening in Bonn on Oct. 17, and has done business that has exceeded even the most optimistic hopes of its producers and distributor.

Gimmick is that the entire film has been handled, in its publicity and advertising and in the showing, like a genuine opera.

Under the publicity and ad campaign master-minded by Rank's German publicity chief Tommy Tominski, the ads, instead of the usual sereen copy, were put on the newspaper pages reserved for concert and stage performances. And the ads were discretely worded, with styling similar to the German opera inserts, announcing "the original Salzburg festival offering with Elisabeth Schwarzhopf, Sonia Jurinac, etc., and Herbert von Karajan directing the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra."

The theatres (first-run houses, also unusual for such a film) were booked on a split basis, so that for a two week run, the house placed the film for three days, then offered it a month or so later for another two- or three-day showing.

WB-Eddie Fisher Apart

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

The announcement not long ago was given wide press coverage. Warners had entered a deal with Eddie Fisher who would produce four features. Two of them would star his wife, Elizabeth Taylor. WB would finance and distribute.

Now the deal is called off. Explanation is that WB didn't see fit to go along with story properties projected by Fisher. New Frontier Productions is the unit set up by Fisher.

Rome's Updated Technique for '61' Musicalized Epic

Rome, Jan. 23.

This season's most ambitious musical is "Enrico 61" the story of a Roman hatter, Enrico Venutti, who was born in the year Italy became a nation, and who is therefore as the play closes 100 years old. The musical unfolds as a cavalcade of comedy and pathos in which Renato Rascel, actor-song writer ("Arrivederci Roma") is starred. He impersonates the hero's father at the beginning in 1870 when he took part in the storming of the gate of Porta Pia in Rome and ends as a centenarian alone on stage in a wheelchair talking to the family cat on his lap. There are lots of digs at politics, laughs and pretty musical turns in between.

The theatre is provided, not with revolving stages but with three mechanical strips which allow entire new scenes to slide in and out, one behind the other, thus obtaining "dissolving" effects such as the movie screen generally provides. The authors have stated that they "are out to merge the old-type musical with the legitimate play." They are the Gilbert and Sullivan of Italy's mid-20th Century. Every sketch and dance number is as an essential part of the story.

The lead is played by a newcomer Ombretta di Carlo but many well known faces of the musical and legit stage pepper a cast of forty who manage to get into and out of over 600 different costumes in the course of the three-hour spectacle which still manages not to seem overlong.

ALLEN KLEIN'S DISTRIB ADJUNCT ORGANIZING

III Task Pictures, indie production company headed by Allen Klein, plans the formation of its own distribution arm following the completion of "Wounds of Hunger," currently shooting in Mexico.

Purpose of the distrib company, says Klein, is to serve indie producers, both here and abroad, who have been unable to get major company affiliation and have thus been stymied in finding a release for their pix. Saul Swimmer, Tony Anthony and Brud Talbot are associated in the venture, which expects to set up representation in Hollywood, Mexico City, Rome and Berlin, with New York as h.q.

Quine-Brisson To Produce 'Yum Yum' For Columbia

Richard Quine Productions and Frederick Brisson have formed a new combo with one project in immediate mind, this being a filmization of the legiter, "Under the Yum Yum Tree," for Columbia release. Quine will direct and Brisson will produce the comedy.

Lawrence Roman has been signed to do the script from his original Broadway play.

MORT NATHANSON EXITS UA FOR JOE LEVINE

Mort Nathanson, just resigned from United Artists as national publicity director, takes over the ditto assignment for Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures. This is the job vacated recently by Ed Feldman, who ankled for veepcy stripes at Seven Arts.

Nathanson, who starts with Embassy Feb. 5, has pubrel credits with Samuel Goldwyn, Liberty Films and Paramount, and also worked as a theatrical pressagent.

Burt Solomon, also ex-UA, continues in the No. 2 publicity slot for Embassy.

Chicago Rally Hears Of UA's 'West Side' Ballyhoo

Chicago, Jan. 23.

United Artists execs were hosts here today (Tues.) to 50 exhibs from around the country and a score of company sales reps from the U. S. and Canada at a special seminar on the sales and promotion of "West Side Story." Seminar was actually launched with a screening of the pic last night (Mon.) at the Mike Todd Theatre.

Presiding at today's allday session was Milton E. Cohen, UA's national director of roadshows, with other speakers including Leon Roth, Mirisch Co. veep; Fred Goldberg, UA's exec director of ad-pub and exploitation; Al Fisher, exploitation manager; Herb Pickman, Marshall Migatz and Sy Freedman, of UA's roadshow department; David E. Weshner, Mirisch sales rep; and Guy Biondi, Mirisch's eastern publicity director.

"Sergeants 3" is warmed-over "Gunga Din," a westernized version of that screen epic, with American-style Indians and Vegas-style soldiers of fortune. The essential difference between the two pictures, other than the obvious one of setting, is that the emphasis in "Gunga" was serious, with tongue-in-cheek overtones, whereas the emphasis in "Sergeants" is tongue-in-cheek, with serious overtones. The revised concept, though it naturally dilutes the story, is fundamentally sound from a box-office standpoint, since adventure-happy moppet customers will take it seriously anyway, while most adult audiences will take one look at the cast and come prepared for the humorous approach.

Moreover, this being the first summit meeting on the screen since the board of directors convened for "Ocean's 11," the Frank Sinatra production is covered with ample "Group" insurance against the unlikelihood of any boxoffice accident. The United Artists release is, to use the appropriate vernacular, no gasser, but seems to have plenty of commercial horsepower.

Although, unaccountably, no mention is made of the obvious source in the screen credits, W. R. Burnett's screenplay not only owes its existence to that story, but adheres to it faithfully, with one noteworthy exception — "Gunga" does not die for his heroism. It's peaches and cream all the way.

The "Big Three" of Sinatra, Dean Martin and Peter Lawford reenact the parts played in the original by Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks Jr. Of the three, Martin seems by far the most animated and comfortable. Sinatra and Lawford coming off a trifle too businesslike for the irreverent, look-ma-we're-cavalrymen approach.

Sammy Davis Jr. gives a likable, enthusiastic performance as a jazz-came-up-the-river variation of the rootin', tootin' hornblower. Joey Bishop deadpans his way through his role, and has one good drunk scene. Henry Silva plays forcibly and believably as the baddest Injun on the premises, and Ruta Lee is attractive in the only important distaff role. It seems as if half the performing denizens of Vegas went along for the ride, among them Buddy Lester, Hank Henry and three of the Crosboys —Phillip, Dennis and LIndsay. Henry has a good card-playing bit. Balance of support is competent.

John Sturges' direction is brisk and humorously alert. The boisterous, slapstick brawls and battles of the first half of the picture contain some pretty amusing fistic choreography, explosive strategy and daring stunt maneuvers.

Winton Hoch's expansive, color-sensitive photography is invigorating. Great panoramic views of the Kanab and Bryce Canyon regions of Utah have a breathtaking picture-postcard flavor. Ferrie Webster's editing is neat and quick, the latter attribute a sizeable assist to the humor. Frank Hotaling's art direction imparts authenticity, as does Vic Gangelin's carefully detailed set decoration. Other valuable ingredients are Billy May's inventive score and Harold Lewis' keenly balanced sound. Second unit director Al Wyatt and lensman Carl Guthrie merit praise. Exec producer was Howard W. Koch. Tube.

The Valiant
(BRITISH)

Somewhat protracted war-time suspense yarn based on real life incident. Sound performances by John Mills, Robert Shaw, Liam Redmond even if film lags.

London, Jan. 16.

United Artists release of a Jon Penington production. Stars John Mills. Features Ettore Manni, Robert Shaw, Roberto Rissi, Liam Redmond. Directed by Roy Baker. Screenplay by Willis Hall, Keith Waterhouse, based on Robert Mallet's play, "L'Equipage Au Complet"; camera, Wilkie Cooper; editor, John Pomeroy; music, Christopher Whelen. At Odeon, Leicester Square, London. Running time, 100 MINS.

Once again John Mills gets into naval uniform, wears his widely-known stiff upper lip and copes with a problem based on a real life wartime incident. It would be foolhardy to suggest that the formula is wearing dangerously thin, but the suspicion is sound. The fact is that "The Valiant," despite its acceptable and suspenseful core of an idea, does not rise to more than a routine drama in which patience is strained with many missed opportunities. The problem is over protracted but an all-male cast serves producer and director soundly.

The scene is Alexandria in 1941, and the battleship, The Valiant, is about to put to sea. Italian frogmen set out to mine the ship and two of them are captured. Item one. Did the Italians succeed in their mission? Item two. If so, where is the bomb based? Item three. How much time has the ship before it is blown up? Skipper Morgan (Mills) faces these problems with puckered brow and set chin. The two Italians should obviously be treated as prisoners of war. One of them is wounded and should have medical attention.

But, obstinately, Mills determines to break them and get the necessary information. He decides that they will sweat it out with the British crew. The Italians refuse to crack and Mills becomes more worried as he realizes that several of his officers find his methods unjustifiable.

This clash and mental struggle between two enemies who respect each other and also the inner struggles of all the men concerned should have built up an atmosphere of sweaty tension. But it doesn't. The brief tension fades ploddingly almost to anti-climax, which is the fault largely of the scripters, Keith Waterhouse and Willis Hall. Roy Baker has directed in fairly straightforward way but has, in doing so, dodged most of the moral issues.

Mills gives his usual confident performance in a role in which he could have had little heart. Liam Redmond makes a dour ship's medical officer and Robert Shaw has one of the more interesting roles, which is scarcely developed, of an officer with twin loyalties, since he is married to an Italian girl. Ettore Manni and Roberto Rossi are the two Italian frogmen, presented as pleasant, intelligent and sympathetic characters. In fact, they are indicative of the normal run of British war films. That war must be presented without hate. A very worthy theory but not necessarily conducive to the sock, stark type of film that makes top boxoffice.

Capable lensing by Wilkie Cooper, coupled with Egi Woxholt's underwater photography. Christopher Whelen's score and Wally Weevers' special effects are plus marks in a film which is worthy but, it is to be feared, will be strictly unmemorable. Rich.

The Three Stooges Meet Hercules

Typical Stooges slapstick. For the moppets.

Hollywood, Jan 11.

Columbia Pictures release of Norman Maurer production. Stars The Three Stooges (Moe Howard, Larry Fine, Joe De Rita). Directed by Edward Bernds. Screenplay, Elwood Ullman, from story by Maurer; camera, Charles W. Welborn; editor, Edwin Bryant; music, Paul Dunlap; assistant director, Herb Wallerstein. Reviewed at the studio, Jan. 11, '62. Running time, 89 MINS.

There always seems to be a niche in the moppet market for the Three Stooges, just about the last surviving practitioners of the clonk-on-the-noggin, custard-pie-in-the-kisser school of screen comedy. Aimed specifically at this audience, the Norman Maurer production and Columbia release should get by at the ticket windows.

The comic style of the Three Stooges bears a striking resemblance to the technique of the animated cartoon. Violence is heaped upon violence, yet not an ounce of blood is shed, nary a feature truly disfigured, with immediate recovery a foregone conclusion even in the face of apparent disaster. The natural audience, then, is precisely the one for whom the traditional cartoon short is designed—a group thoroughly dominated by children, but containing scattered easygoing adults. The nature of such comedy, however, makes it ideal for the brisk pace of a short subject. The sustained force of the slapstick is bound to be diffused over the feature length course, and this inevitably puts a strain on comic invention and limits appeal and response.

This one incorporates elements of "The Time Machine" and "Ben-Hur" as it turns the heroes loose in Ithaca, Greece, circa 961 B.C., where they engage the strong man and various other superhuman monsters in an effort to shape history in the accepted image. Elwood Ullman's screenplay, from a story by producer Maurer, provides ample excuse for the patented messy pratfalls of the starring trio.

In addition to the Stooges, others of central importance are Vicki Trickett, Quinn Redecker, George N. Neise and Samson Burke, latter as a slow-witted version of the muscleman of the title. The McKeever Twins, Mike and Marlin, of football fame, are "seen" as a Siamese twin cyclops.

Saintly Sinners

Amiable, lower-berth item. Spiked with sentiment, making it especially suitable as support for family style attractions.

Hollywood, Jan. 18.

United Artists release of Robert E. Kent production. Stars Don Beddoe, Ellen Corby, Stanley Clements, Paul Bryar. Directed by Jean Yarbrough. Screenplay, Kevin Barry; camera, Gilbert Warrenton; editor, Robert Carlisle; music, Richard LaSalle; assistant director, Frank Mayer. Reviewed at Goldwyn Studios, Jan. 18, '62. Running time, 78 MINS.

A pleasant departure from the customary crime melodrama and sagebrush formulas generally, "Saintly Sinners" will make an apt companion feature on twin bills directed at family audiences. Though liberally sprinkled with saccharine and given to caricature and coincidence, the Robert E. Kent production is a gentle, whimsical, good-natured little picture.

Actually, the film is a kind of minor league cross between a warmhearted, "Hoodlum Priest" and a small town, poor man's version of "Guys and Dolls." Parishful of Miracles is the general idea of Kevin Barry's quasi-Runyonesque screenplay, which describes how a kindly old priest, through a mixture of sweet naivete and uncompromising faith, generates reform among the lovably larcenous faction that flocks to his humble parish. For a picture constructed on such a modest expenditure, there is actually some pretty witty dialog in Barry's work, making up, in some part, for the scenario's contentment with two-dimensional stereotype and occasional disregard of normal behavior patterns.

Don Beddie strikes the right note of innocent sweetness as the compassionate cleric. Ellen Corby is convincing as his skeptical housekeeper. Stanley Clements and Paul Bryar contribute fun as a pair of hapless crooks. In the chief romantic roles, Ron Hagerthy is sympathetic as a clean-cut ex-con and pretty Erin O'Donnell spirited as his spunky young wife. On the ball in top support are Addison Richards, Clancy Cooper and William Fawcett.

Jean Yarbrough's direction is not as taut and histrionically demanding as it might be, but, under the stringent circumstances, he has done a very satisfactory overall job. Production aid from cameraman Gil Warrenton, editor Robert Carlisle and composer Richard LaSalle is on a uniformly efficient level of skill. Tube.

Siege of Syracuse
(ITALIAN—DYALISCOPE—COLOR)

Overstuffed costume epic from Italy, this time centering on the exploits of Archimedes. An ornate hunk of pseudo-history hampered by clumsy editing and dubbing. Passable as a filler item for the least selective filmgoer.

Hollywood, Jan. 17.

Paramount release of Enzo Merolle production. No character names given. Stars Rossano Brazzi, Tina Louise with Enrico Maria Salerno, Gino Cervi, Alberto Farnese, Luciano Marin, Alfredo Varelli, Sylvia Koscina. Directed by Pietro Francisci. Screenplay, Francisci, Giorgio Graziosi, Ennio de Concini; camera (Eastman), Carlo Carlini; music, Francesco Lavagnino. Reviewed at the studio, Jan. 17, '62. Running time, 97 MINS.

The Italian cinema counterpart of the American hoss opera is the toga opera. In the past few years, the U.S. domestic marketplace has been crowded with such. "Siege of Syracuse" is the latest such arrival.

Haphazardly trimmed and edited and erratically post-dubbed, with the result that performances emerge ludicrous and story senseless, the Enzo Merolle production has merit only as a means for emotional escape on the part of customers who seek nothing beyond that in their screen pursuits. The Paramount release, in its present scissored state, is serviceable as a supporting attraction and occasional filler in only the least sophisticated situations.

The screenplay welds two basic dramatic elements: the geographical vulnerability of neutral Syracuse, Sicily, wedged between the warring Roman (cowboys) and Carthaginian (Indians) legions, and the romantic travails of scientist Archimedes (Rossano Brazzi), the Greek mathematician here interpreted as a nobleman of Sicily and key political figure of the period. As an example of the esteem with which this film regards the experimental techniqques of Archimedes' science, his discovery of the utilization of solar energy is depicted as an accident in which he sets fire to Tina Louise's B.C. bikini during an experiment in heat reflection via mirrors. Fortunately, Miss Louise is not in her bikini at the time. She is swimming nearby, in the nude. Needless to say, Archimedes, renowned for his appreciation of figures and proportions, is delighted by his discovery.

Brazzi, an accomplished actor, does his career no service with this portrayal. The voice heard is not his; his lines are dubbed. Miss Louise plays mechanically, but her running parts are in good order. Physically, the production is fairly impressive, but Pietro Francisci's direction is stiff, disjointed and shallow. Tube.

Throne of Blood

Hollywood, Jan. 13.

Brandon Films release of Toho production. Directed by Akira Kurosawa. Screenplay, Hideo Oguni, Shinobu Hashimoto, Ryuzo Kikushima, Akira Kurosawa; camera, Asaichi Nakai. Reviewed at Toho La Brea Theatre, Jan. 13, '62. Running time, 105 MINS.

From a purely cinematic standpoint, this Japanese adaptation of Shakespeare's "Macbeth" into the historical fabric of their own culture is noteworthy for the remarkable manner in which it explores and extends the possibilities of the medium as an instrument for exciting the nerves, the senses and the emotions of an audience. It is all motion picture, an achievement of mood and photographic invention that deserves to be seen for academic purposes alone by every student of the cinema, novice through professional. Yet, admiration for the Toho production-Brandon Films release must be tempered by recognition of the enormous loss of lyric poetry suffered in translation from one culture to the other. For little but the embellished plot skeleton of Shakespeare's masterpiece survives.

In effect, what has transpired is a deemphasis of poetic language values in favor of an assault of pure sight and sound. The imagery of words is replaced by the all-seeing eye of an artistic camera. But no camera can match the suggestive beauty of language. The experience is akin to hearing a performance of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony accompanied by the lyrics of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Shakespearean buffs may be interested, but not necessarily pleased. Something significant is lost, for example, when Macbeth's opening remark, "So foul and fair a day I have not seen," becomes, according to the sub-titles, "What weather. I've never seen anything like it."

Nevertheless, there is no overlooking the masterful direction of Akira Kurosawa, nor the agile, energetic and explosive camera-work of Asaichi Nakai. It is a film of shattering silences and overpowering bursts of action, of moments when the attention is stimulated only by the sinister rustle of silk and others when the screen reverberates with uninhibited sound and fury. Incidentally, those who deplore violence had better come prepared. Nothing is spared for the climax, in which "Macbeth" is felled by dozens of arrows, one smack through the jugular.

Leading Japanese actor Toshiro Mifune gives a ranting, raving, rooting, tooting performance in the central role. Isuzu Yamada is calm, cool, collected and appropriately despicable as Lady M. The picture has been filmed in black-and-white. At first this seems odd, considering the Japanese reputation for color reproduction and the pageantry inherent in this play. But the element of surprise vanishes when one beholds what has been accomplished by these artisans in the two basic shades. Tube.

A TAG FOR MEXICO: LAG

[Ponce Probes Film Faults]

By EMIL ZUBRYN

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

Manuel Barbachano Ponce, one of Mexico's inner circle of dedicated producers, a restless personality always seeking new techniques of expression, outspoken in his scoring of Mexican film industry "problems," places all blame squarely at the doors of the industry's own policies and practices.

"Mexico's producers are to blame," Ponce explained, "because they have pursued an ostrich-like attitude in recent years, do not pay heed to the fact that the entire world motion picture industry is in a state of evolution. The unions are also a major negative factor for they have consistently shut their doors to new, youthful elements with talent and ideas."

Milder in his criticism of the government, which here has a major stake in the film industry, Ponce did say that sales and promotional efforts, especially in development of new foreign markets, have been less than effective to date. This is not so much the fault of federal officials, as of producers, who have not shown smartness in aggressively pushing their product.

Bickering Aplenty

Instead of coordination of effort, there's dissension and personal bickering. This is reflected in indifferent success of Mexican product in foreign markets. Producers, and not federal officials, should take charge, for it is they who are fully oriented in the motion picture world.

"Another thing, and it pains me to say this," Ponce continued, "our films, in the main, with the usual exceptions which fully reveal the undeniable gifts of producers, directors, talent and technicians, have quality standards so low that it seems that they have been made for and by illiterates.

"The tragedy of this backwardness is that illiteracy is being conquered throughout the world. And moronic type pictures just can't get exhibition dates in today's competitive market."

Ponce believes that what the Mexican industry urgently needs is a total renovation of its antiquated old order. Producers and union leaders have been blind to the fact that constant change and adaptation is a law of life. And that's why, now, the government is stepping more and more into the picture. Whether this is good or bad is a point Ponce preferred to sidestep. But he stressed that, as individuals, or with the enforced intervention of the government, Mexico's film movie makers must yield to the inevitable that new values must be injected into the local industry.

Young Promise

This tentatively has begun, with youngsters such as Alex Phillips Jr. as cameraman and Servando Gonzalez, director of experimentally made "Yanco." But even here unions only gave in grudgingly to commercial exhibition of a picture that was made without benefit of union elements.

Ignacio Lopez Tarso is most outstanding of the "new" in acting talent, with Pina Pellicer and Ana Luisa Peluffo (not exactly a new wave b t an oldtimer who had to get a start by disrobing before the camera) representing the female contingent.

Police heavily scored the "closed door" policy to good native talents, with this possibly leading to an exodus of elements wooed by American, Venezuelan, French, Brazilian and other foreign film industries.

"A closed door policy also leads to the frustration of youth, a killing of ambition," Ponce added. "Youth should be welcomed with open arms and not 'drowned' by ridiculous and arbitrary rulings invoked only to defend the mediocrity of a few (or many) whose only merits are that they are the so-called old timers."

The old order has shown that it is aligned against "freedom" of work, association and new ideas, Ponce charged. He pointed up fact that new unions of young bloods, which attempt to come into being to give youth a chance, are inevitably beaten down.

And so the same vicious circle goes on: the turning out of the same films that have saturated Mexico's traditional markets in Latin America and Spain. Now the national industry must face up to, and cope, with a growing competition in its own back yard as Cuba, Puerto Rico, Venezuela, Brazil, even Colombia (and other Latin nations) initiate their own small industries. Their product may not be much better than Mexican pictures, but it does displace latter in these matters. Ponce said that his observations, based on personal visits to Latin American production centers, show a new and youthful vitality, and a sincere effort to produce pictures better than those churned out in Mexico.

"All is not lost, however," Ponce said, "if our movie makers will only get over their blindness, open doors to youthful initiative. But if they continue to dally, it may be too late when they finally wake up.

"All the countries of the world are giving opportunities to the so-called 'new wave.' Everywhere, except in Mexico, that is," Ponce stated. "And we, as a young nation, have the duty of giving even greater opportunities to our youth."

"In a nut shell, the problem of the Mexican picture industry," Ponce summarized, "is that the essential problem is not so much of prices or markets. It is of new, vigorous ideas and quality. And the old guard, again with the customary exceptions, has shown that it is not capable of making the transition as required by advancing times."

Although Ponce's words are the severest criticism of the industry, echoed and re-echoed by a hard core of sober-minded producers and directors who fear the industry will go bankrupt if it does not take a long hard look of reappraisal soon, he admitted that he still is an "optimist."

"It is a mania of mine, I guess," he said. "But I think that sooner or later, and I fervently hope the former, the actual situation existing within our industry will take a sharp turn for the better. Here and there are slight indications of a break with outmoded tradition. If this can avalanche into an awareness of new ideas and lending an ear to new talents whose hands have been bruised by fruitless knocking on massive doors for many years, then Mexico will again surge to the fore as a major and serious center of film activity."

Fox-Denver Readies New Cinerama House

Albuquerque, Jan. 23.

One-million-dollar 850-seat Cinerama theatre is planned in Albuquerque, with construction to start in about six months, it was announced last week by Fox Intermountain Theatres Inc. of Denver.

House, expected to be completed by 4th of July, is planned at new $10 million shopping center in Albuquerque's growing northeast heights area. It'll be located at Winrock Center, owned in part by Winthrop Rockefeller.

The 15,000 square foot house, planned on a 2.5 acre plot, will utilize cinerama, cinemiracle and other 70 mm productions, according to Melvin Glatz, director of real estate development for Fox Intermountain.

Plans call for the house to premiere with the cinerama work, "Winning of the West."

Construction and equipment is expected to cost about $1 million.

Fox Intermountain also owns cinerama houses in Salt Lake City and Topeka.

Montgomery Pards With Cagney on 2

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

James Cagney and Robert Montgomery are working on two properties now owned by a major studio which they expect to acquire for indie production under their Cagney-Montgomery. Productions banner. Filming would begin late this year. Both are dramas.

Aside from pix for his own company, Cagney said all films he makes will be for a straight salary and asserted he "does not believe in percentages because that gets into another man's business." He was on salary for "One, Two, Three" and will also be on salary for "The Last Westerner," his next film. Latter is for Steve Blauner and Don Siegel, with Siegel directing and Bobby Darin costarring.

Since release of "One, Two, Three," Cagney has had numerous offers, among them two Broadway musicals. One would be "Mr. President," new Irving Berlin musical with book by Lindsay and Crowse. Leland Hayward is producing, with Josh Logan directing. He has also been approached for a musical version of "Front Page," which Richard Gamin is writing.

Actor, who said he watches television about two nights a week, called this medium a good training ground for young performers. He likened it to repertory theatre because they do a different show every week. He pointed to James Garner and Steve McQueen as fine new talents who are developing from this field and to Jack Lemmon as a top new film personality. He says television has developed well, noting the "Dick Powell Show" is a good example of "a fine show, well thought out and treated with care."

Cagney thinks actors should not limit themselves to any one style of material, particularly advises to develop comedy and drama because they both go hand in hand. If he is nominated for an "Oscar," he will be the first actor to have been nominated in all areas, comedy, drama and music.

Reissues Click Though Japan Requires Each To Have New Quota Status

Tokyo, Jan. 23.

Recent trend here which looms as success is showing of revivals, despite same requirement of import licenses as for new films.

Trend is sparked by shortage of good product and high cost of same to indie importers, compounded by additional 40 import licenses granted for current fiscal year.

"Waterloo Bridge," one of the all-time popular pictures here, is a hit again, roadshowing at Scala-za. A dubbed version of "Strangers on a Train" is making rounds after downtown screenings. Upcoming lineup of revivals includes "My Darling Clementine," "Stagecoach," "Shane," "Pepe le Moko," "Sands of Iwo Jima" and "Terminal Station."

Smash success of re-release of "Gone With Wind" (Metro) last summer is added factor of influence. Films appear to be chosen on strength of topline directors' names, such as John Ford, Alfred Hitchcock and George Stevens, previous strong entries in this market, and durability of star names. Westerns get nod also in some cases because of popular theme song and generally because they don't show age as do modern stories.

DRIVE-INS MEET FEB. 7

Boston, Jan. 23.

Margaret G. Tywnan, director of community relations for Motion Picture Assn. of America, will be a speaker at the eighth annual all-day and luncheon meeting of the Drive-In Theatres Assn. of New England on Feb. 6, at 1200 Beacon Street Hotel, Brookline.

Eddie Lyder, president of the association, will chair the sessions. Carl Goldman, executive secretary, will coordinate the meeting.

A special discussion will involve concession problems, with topics on how to operate concessions; business builders, and maintenance problems.

HANDLING EDUCATIONALS

Holt, Rinehart and Metro Cooperate In Japan

Holt, Rinehart and Winston and Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer have aligned to put out a program of motion pictures designed for educational presentation in schools.

First six films are now in preparation in Japan, with future series to be shot in other parts of the world, touching on culture, industry, farming, etc.

'Adults Only' Limit In Chicago For France's 'Liaisons Dangereuses'

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Chicago police motion picture censorship unit have issued what is believed to be the first "adults only" tag for a picture since the age category section was stricken from the city's censorship laws by the U.S. Court of Appeals in 1959. The picture to receive the restricted permit is Astor Films' "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," which is being distributed in the Chi area by Kermit Russell.

What's unusual about the age-limit permit is that although it was issued on the basis of the new Chi censorship ordinance passed three weeks ago, the machinery for the newly-formed Motion Picture Appeal Board has not been set up and probably will not be for several months. A spokesman for the mayor's office said that the candidates are being selected for the Board, but that the selection would not be complete and approved until the City Council meets again in April.

An attorney from the office of the Corporation Counsel (the city's legal advisor) said that pictures would be issued or denied permits on the basis of the new (and tougher) ordinance despite the fact that distributors will not have the right of appeal granted by the new law until April. The new ordinance lowers the "adults only" ticket level to 17 years of age. It was 21 under the old law. The permit for "Dangereuses," although age-restricted, was issued without any cuts in the picture.

BERGER'S EMOTIONAL ABOUT UNITED ARTISTS

Minneapolis, Jan. 23.

Circuit owner Bennie Berger now is turning his guns on United Artists, putting part of the blame on it for the poor boxoffice showing of its "Pocketful of Miracles" at his local loop firstrun Gopher theatre.

At first, Berger only fired away at a newspaper critic — without mentioning him by name — who had panned the picture which the theatreowner, who staked his own judgment, says he considers one of the finest he ever has seen in all his long career as an exhibitor. After a miserable $2,500 opening Gopher week gross, Berger himself took large newspaper space for his own personal letter to the public lauding "Pocketful."

Trade circles' reports are that Berger, bidding competitively to land "Pocketful," won it with a $26,000 guarantee, a 60% split for it and a minimum of 10 weeks playing time. Despite its unsatisfactory grosses it has remained at the Gopher, being now in its fifth week.

As to United Artists' allegedly "falling down on its job," Berger flailed away thusly to a local trade paper: "It ('Pocketful') is a terrific picture, but it's dying. It's a perfect example of what happens when the distributor doesn't back up a picture with an advertising and exploitation campaign. We even couldn't get a press book on this one. We ourselves did what we could, even giving out apples to the downtown holiday crowds for it."

Trans-Lux 5% Stock Divvy

Directors of the Trans-Lux Corp. have declared a 5% stock dividend.

It's payable April 2 to stock of record March 9.

From the point of view of the U. S. major distribs, the most significant development in the Mexican market in the last year has been the long-sought breakthrough in the admission price structure south-of-the-border, according to Robert J. Corkery, Motion Picture Export Assn. veep and director of the Latin American division.

In New York last week, shortly before returning to his Mexico City h.q. (by way of Puerto Rico, Venezuela and Ecuador), Corkery noted that although the costs of operating in Mexico had risen sharply since 1945 (wages to branch workers, for example, have increased by approximately 300%), U. S. distribs (as well as Mexican, of course) had been held to the 4-peso (32c) admission price ceiling all the while. Until 1955, the steadily rising cost of operations had been offset by the steadily expanding market, but since 1955, U. S. gross billings in Mexico have been holding even. (According to a survey of the Latin American market published in VARIETY Nov. 8, annual U. S. gross billings in Mexico have been running at about $8,000,000.)

The admission price breakthrough has been on three fronts so far: (1) an increase from three to four pesos on reissues, (2) an increase from four to five pesos on Metro's "Ben-Hur" (shown in Mexico in the 35m version), and the upcoming allowance to Universal to charge eight pesos for the release of the 70m version of "Spartacus," expected to open in Mexico City about the first of March.

Important Change

Questioned on the importance of the increase in the seat price charged for reissues, Corkery suggested that in Mexico, reissues have been and are playing a more important role in the exhibition picture than in the States. Also, he noted, the increase had come along early enough to benefit the tremendously successful reissue of Metro's "Gone With the Wind" last year. "Don't underestimate the meaning of that increase," the MPEA veep said. "GWTW" thus wound up with 25% more pesos than it would have earned otherwise.

While the other increases in seat prices had been allowed only to two specific films, "Ben-Hurr" and "Spartacus," Corkery believes that the precedent has now been set and the Mex government will have to grant comparable benefits to other films of "extraordinary" nature. Heretofore. U. S. distribs have had to "sacrifice" top films at bargain rates in Mexico, or keep their top pix out of the market entirely. Columbia, for example, has not yet given Mex release to

NOVELIST PRIMES 1890S FILM FOR ALBUQUERQUE

Albuquerque, Jan. 23.

"Staghorn" (formerly tagged "Saddle Tramp"), reputedly budgeted at $1,000,000, will be shot in Albuquerque this spring, per Wilfred McCormick, its writer who also owns a third of the production company.

McCormick, who has written a number of juvenile novels and scripted several tv shows, has completed the shooting script for the work. "Staghorn," his first adult novel, will be published by an unspecified company at the same time as the picture is released, he said.

Arthur Lubin is set to direct and David Garber will produce. Both men are partners with McCormick in the new venture.

Exteriors will be shot in and around Albuquerque, with many of them done in Albuquerque's Old Town, a romantic tourist attraction still fairly much intact as is was in the 1890's.

Plot of "Staghorn" concerns the failure of a smalltown bank that folded during the 1890's. The banker has disappeared and his lawyer-son is beaten up by enraged townspeople and thrown out of town. McCormick said the story mainly concerns the wanderings of the banker's son and his attempt to clear his father's name.

McCormick lives here.

'2d Time' Potent 7G in Slow Balto

Baltimore, Jan. 23.

"Second Time Around," on opener at the New, is the best news of week. Elsewhere, holdovers dominate and best of these are "King of Kings," nice in fifth week at the Town. "George Raft Story," fair in second week at the Hippodrome and "Flower Drum Song," warm in fifth week at the Stanton.

"Pocketful of Miracles" is still good in fifth at the Mayfair. "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" is down to fair total in fourth week at the Charles and "Purple Noon" is okay in fifth at the Cinema. "Double Bunk" is oke in first at the Playhouse as is "Cold Wind in August" in fifth at the Five West.

Estimates for This Week

Charles (Fruchtman) (500; 90-$1.80)—"Roman Spring" (WB) (4th wk). Down to fair $3,000. Last week, $4,000.

'Twist' Strong $12,000, L'ville; 'Mask' Sturdy 7G, 'Babes' Hep $6,000

Louisville, Jan. 23.

Conglomerate of novelties, h.o.'s and reissues, combined with weather of every type, luring customers to the downtown theatre area. During the sub-zero period of about two days, with light snow, this city just about closes shop. Leader this week is United Artists with "Twist Around Clock." "The Mask" at Mary Anderson also looks sturdy. "South Seas Adventure," new Cinerama entry at the Rialto, opened to strong biz. "Flower Drum Song" still is perky in 4th at the Kentucky.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,100; 75-$1)—"King and I" (reissue) (2d wk). Nice, $4,000 after last week's $4,500.

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (4th wk). Good $3,500 after third week's $3,800.

Mary Anderson (People's) (900; 90-$1.25)—"The Mask" (WB) and "Curse of Frankenstein" (WB) (reissue). Large $7,000. Last week, "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk), $4,500.

Ohio (Settos) (900; $1.25)—"Babes in Toyland" (BV) (5th wk). Lively $6,000 after fourth week's $5,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (1,100; $1.25-$1.50)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama). Had big preem with invited press, and heading for fine $10,000 or close. Last week, "Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (13th wk).

United Artists (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Twist Around Clock" (Col) and "Everything's Ducky" (Col). Weekend helped by dancers from local studio demonstrating "The Twist" in lobby. Strong $12,000 or near. Last week, "Second Time Around" (20th) (3d wk), $8,000.

Thieves' Modest $8,000, D.C.; 'Raft' Fair 11½G; 'Song' Lofty 11G, 5th

Washington, Jan. 23.

The holiday bloom is off the mainstem but some of the hotsy year-end entries are still packing enough steam to keep trade from lapsing into a genuine downbeat. Of the newcomers, "Happy Thieves" at the Keith's looks modest while "George Raft Story" initiating in two locations shapes fairish.

"Flower Drum Song" still is fancy in fifth week. "Liaisons" at the Playhouse remains torrid in fourth lap. "Innocents" at Trans-Lux stays hep, also in fourth. "West Side Story" heads for a big 10th session at Uptown.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador-Metropolitan (SW) (1,480; 1,000; $1-$1.49)—"George Raft Story" (AA). Fairish $11,500 or near. Last week, "Babes in Toyland" (BV) (4th wk), $7,500.

Uptown (SW) (1,300; $1.49-$2)—"West Side Story" (UA) (10th wk). Big $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

Warner (SW) (1,440; $1.80-$2.75)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (12th wk). Mild $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Snow Sloughs K.C. Albeit 'Flat' OK $9,000; 'Ship' Fair 7½G; 'Kings' 7G

Kansas City, Jan. 23.

The weather is by all odds the biggest factor in biz currently, as the city is blanketed by nearly two feet of snow from several storms. Severe weather has occurred with amazing regularity around the past four weekends, latest dumping being 14 inches of snow Thursday-Friday. Under such difficult conditions it's surprising that even reasonably good film business is being done, but the edge is off all around.

"Bachelor Flat" in the Uptown and Granada is fairly good, and may stay. Paramount's "Sail a Crooked Ship" also is holding its own against snow and cold. Holdovers of "Second Time Around" at Plaza, "Flower Drum Song" at Brookside and "King of Kings" at Capri are satisfactory.

Estimates for This Week

Brookside (Fox Midwest-Nat. Theatres) (800; $1-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Nice $3,500 or over. Last week, $3,700, slimmed by storm.

Capri (Durwood) (1,260; 90c-$2.50)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (11th wk). Good $7,000. Last week, same, under expectations at $6,800.

Empire (Durwood) (1,200; 90-$2)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (reissue). Battling snow and cold for okay $9,000; holds. Last week, "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (reissue) (9th wk), $5,000.

Fairway (FMW-NT) (700; $1)—"Watch Your Stern" (Magna) (3d wk). Oke $1,100. Last week, $1,500.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 90-$1.25)—"Truth" (Indie) (5th wk). Nifty $1,500; holds. Last week, $1,600.

Paramount (Blank-Up) (1,900; $1-$1.25)—"Sail a Crooked Ship" (Col). Fair $7,500 or near; may hold. Last week, "Hey, Let's Twist" (Par) and "Too Late Blues" (Par), $5,500.

Plaza (FMW-NT) (1,630; $1.25)—"Second Time Around" (20th) (4th wk-5 days). Happy $5,000. Last week, including Granada on 5 days, $9,000.

Roxy (Durwood) (850; $1-$1.50)—"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (5th wk). Fair $4,000. Last week, $4,500.

Rockhill (Little Art Theatres) (750; $1-$1.25)—"Devil's Eye" (Indie) (4th wk). Oke $1,000. Last week, $1,500.

Uptown, Granada (FMW-NT) (2,043; 1,217; $1-$1.25)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th). Fairly good $9,000. May stay on. Last week, Uptown only, "Babes in Toyland" (BV) (4th wk), $4,000.

'Story' Stout 16G, Philly; 'Song' 15G

Philadelphia, Jan. 23.

Exhibitors here currently are looking only for real biz over the weekend, which fortunately this round was good. Holdovers continue firm. Actually gross receipts are running slightly higher than the same period a year ago. There's not a single newcomer this session.

"West Side Story" is showing the most strength of longruns with a socko take in 11th week at the Midtown. "One, Two, Three" looms fine in fifth at Randolph while "El Cid" is rated trim in fifth at Goldman. "Flower Drum Song" continues amazingly solid in fifth stanza at Stanley. "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" is only so-so in fourth at the Viking.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (623; 95-$1.80)—"Summer and Smoke" (Par) (4th wk). Nice $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,536; $2-$2.75)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (13th wk). Pushing to good $8,500 on closing notices. Last week, $7,200.

Fox (Milgram) (2,400; 95-$1.80)—"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (5th wk). Big $11,000. Last week, $12,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75)—"El Cid" (AA) (5th wk). Trim $15,000. Last week, $14,500.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,200; $2-$2.75)—"West Side Story" (UA) (11th wk). Socko $16,000 or near. Last week, $16,500.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,200; 95-$1.80)—"One, Two, Three" (UA) (5th wk). Fine $10,000. Last week, $11,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,500; 85-$1.80)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Solid $15,000. Last week, $16,000.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 95-$1.80)—"Babes in Toyland" (BV) (5th wk). Fat $8,500. Last week, $10,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 95-$1.80)—"Innocents" (20th) (3d wk). Oke $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 95-$1.80)—"Roman Spring" (WB) (4th wk). So-so $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

World (R&B-Pathe) (483; 95-$1.80)—"Five-Day Lover" (Indie) (3d wk). Nice $2,900. Last week, $2,800.

'Late Blues' NSG 8G, Buff; 'Song' Lusty 7G

Buffalo, Jan. 23.

Some new entrants here for a change but few of them are getting far in current round. "Innocents" is tops in this category with a nice take at Century. "Singer Not the Song" is soft at the Center while "Happy Thieves" is unhappy in first at the Buffalo. "Flower Drum Song" is rated strong in fourth at Lafayette, an unusually long run at this house.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 75-$1)—"Happy Thieves" (UA). Tepid $6,000. Last week, "Ivanhoe" (M-G) and "Knights Round Table" (M-G) (reissues), $9,000 in 8 days.

Center (AB-PT) (2,500; 70-$1)—"Singer Not the Song" (WB). Soft $6,000 or less. Last week, "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk-5 days), $6,000.

Century (UATC) (2,700; 70-$1.25)—"Innocents" (20th). Nice $12,000 or over. Last week, "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col), $9,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (4th wk). Strong $7,000. Last week, $7,500.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Too Late Blues" (Par) and "Siege of Syracuse" (Indie). Routine $8,000 or less.

Teck (Loew) (1,200; $1.25-$2.75)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (5th wk). Okay $7,000. Last week, $7,500.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 70-$1.25)—"Carry On Constable" (Gov) (5th wk). Fine $2,500. Last week, $2,000.

'Flat' Lively $10,000 In Pitt; 'Roman' Good 11G; 'Song' Wow 10½G, 5th

Pittsburgh, Jan. 23.

"Bachelor Flat" at Fulton, "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" at Stanley and "Innocents" at the Penn are new entries on downtown scene currently.

"Flower Drum Song" at the Gateway remains wow in fifth round. Art houses continue boff with "Purple Noon" in fourth at Shadyside and "Mark" in second at Squirrel Hill. "King of Kings" is still firm in 13th at Warner on hardticket.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Associated) (1,635; $1-$1.50)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th). Exciting $10,000. Last week, "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col), $8,500.

Gateway (Associated) (1,900; $1-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Wow $10,000. Last week, $12,500.

Penn (UATC) (3,300; $1-$1.50)—"Innocents" (20th). Sad $8,000. Last week, "Happy Thieves" (UA) (6 days), $6,500.

Shadyside (MOTC) (750; $1.25)—"Purple Noon" (Times) (4th wk). Brilliant $3,000. Last week, $3,200.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (834; $1.25)—"Mark" (Cont) (2d wk). Hefty $3,600. Last week, $4,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,700; $1-$1.50)—"Roman Spring" (WB). Good $11,000 or close. Last week, "Babes in Toyland" (BV) (4th wk-4 days), $5,500.

Warner SW) (1,516; $1.50-$2.75)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (13th wk). Hardy $7,500. Last week, $6,000.

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Uneven; 'Song' No. 1 for 3d Week in Row, 'Story' Again 2d, 'Cid' 3d, 'One, Two' 4th

Severe cold weather and heavy snowfall continues to plague first-run film biz in the middle-west, with unusually cold weather hurting some southern key cities and the Coast. The fact that many houses still have the same fare launched for the year-end holidays also is slowing up the b.o. pace. Also, some of the newcomers are not measuring up to hopes.

For the third week in a row, "Flower Drum Song" (U) is finishing in No. 1 spot. And again it is running nearly $100,000 ahead of its nearest competitor. This musical, playing in some 19 key cities covered by VARIETY is astounding exhibitors by holding up so well even in fourth and fifth sessions.

"West Side Story" (UA), which was second a week ago, again is winding in that position. "El Cid" (AA) is finishing third again, same as last round.

"One, Two, Three," another from United Artists, is capturing fourth spot, the place it held a week ago. "King of Kings" (M-G) is staying in fifth position.

"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA), still a bit spotty, continues in sixth place, same as last stanza. "Innocents" (20th), just getting started last session, is copping seventh spot.

"Roman Spring" (WB) is slipping to eighth position, being a bit uneven. "Bachelor Flat" (20th), which this week is not measuring up to its promise of last stanza, is managing to finish ninth.

"Sail a Crooked Ship" (Col), just getting around to any extent, is landing in 10th place.

"Second Time Around" (20th) is finishing 11th. It was in ninth spot last week. "Babes in Toyland" (BV), not having the benefit of much juvenile patronage, is dipping to 12th place. "La Dolce Vita" (Astor), "George Raft Story" (AA), "Summer and Smoke" (Par) and "Purple Noon" (Times) are the runner-up pictures.

"Tender Is Night" (20th) shapes nice on its initial playdates at N.Y. Paramount and arty Plaza there. "Too Late Blues" (Par), also new, is rated mild in Buffalo. "Lover Come Back" (U), due next at N.Y. Music Hall, still is hot in L.A.

"Singer, Not the Song" (20th), another newcomer, shows promise with a good showing in Cincy and trim taking in Providence. "Madison Avenue" (20th) looms fine in Boston. "Colossus of Rhodes" (M-G), also new, is big in Detroit.

Snow, Cold Clip Chi Biz; '2d Time' Nice $21,500, 'Song' Big 25½G, 5th, 'One, Two' $13,400, 'Summer' 7G, 4th

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Despite a batch of fresh newcomers and several potentially potent holdovers, Chi firstruns continue to reel from the snow and bitter cold which has paralyzed biz for the fourth consecutive weekend. "Second Time Around" is opening to a smart $21,500 at the Roosevelt. Other preemers include "From a Roman Balcony," which looks okay at Carnegie, and the Monroe pair of "Wild Harvest" and "Fear No More," which shapes okay.

"The Innocents" is rated tidy in second Woods lap. Fourth round of "One, Two, Three" looks trim at United Artists. Same session of "Summer and Smoke" is nice at Esquire. "The Mark" looks bright in fourth at the Surf. "Call Me Genius" shapes smooth in Cinema fourth.

"Flower Drum Song" continues bright in fifth Chicago stanza. "Pocketful of Miracles" rates neat in Oriental fifth, but "Babes in Toyland" is only fair in fifth at State-Lake.

"El Cid," on hardticket, is tapering in its Cinestage 5th session while 14th week of "King of Kings" is rated slow at the Todd.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (495; $1.25-$1.80)—"From Roman Balcony" (Cont). Okay $3,500 or close. Last week "Joker" (Lope), $4,200.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Good $25,500 with two sneak previews. Last week, $25,000.

Cinestage (Todd) (1,038; $1.75-$3.50)—"El Cid" (AA) (5th wk). Modest $13,000. Last week, $14,600.

Cinema (Stern) (500; $1.50)—"Call Me Genius" (Cont) (4th wk). Smooth $3,100. Last week, $4,300.

Esquire (H&E Balaban (1,350; $1.25-$1.80)—"Summer and Smoke" (Par) (4th wk). Nice $7,000. Last week, $8,500.

Loop (Telem't) (606; $1.25-$1.80)—"Question 7" (Indie) (5th wk). Firm $10,200. Last week, $10,000.

Monroe (Jovan) (1,000; 65-90)—"Wild Harvest" (Indie) and "Fear No More" (Indie). So-so $4,200.

'Kings' Great $18,000, St. L.; '2d Time' 9G, 4th

St. Louis, Jan. 23.

Best showing at firstruns here this stanza is being made by the extended-run pix. Only new entrants are a pair of reissues at State and an oldie combo at the St. Louis. "King of Kings" looks big in fifth round at Esquire. "Pocketful of Miracles" looks trim in fourth at Loew's Mid-City. "Flower Drum Song" still is sturdy in fifth at Ambassador.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Arthur) (2,970; 90-$1.25)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Sturdy $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25)—"League of Gentlemen" (Indie) (3d wk). Oke $1,300. Last week, $1,500.

Esquire (Schuchart-Levin) (1,800; $1.25-$2.75) — "King of Kings" (M-G) (5th wk). Big $18,000. Last week, $20,000.

Fox (Arthur) (5,000; 90-$1.25)—"Second Time Around" (20th) (4th wk). Mild $9,000. Last week, $11,000.

Loew's Mid-City (Loew) (1,160; 60-90) — "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (4th wk). Trim $7,000. Last week, $7,200.

State (Loew) (3,600; 60-90)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) and "Knights of Round Table" (M-G) (reissues). Nice $15,000. Last week, "Babes in Toyland" (BV) (4th wk), $10,000.

Pageant (Arthur) (1,000; 90-$1.25)—"Innocents" (20th) (2d wk). Fair $4,000. Last week, $5,000.

St. Louis (Arthur) (3,800; 75-90)—"King and I" (20th) and "Carousel" (20th) (reissues). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Mysterious Island" (Col) and "Two Little Bears" (20th) (2d wk), $6,000.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (760; 90-$1.25)—"Call Me Genius" (Cont) (2d wk). Fine $2,500. Last week, $3,500.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

'Story' Smash 18G, Frisco; 'Song' 15G

'Flat' Fair $6,500 In Port.; 'Song' 6G, 5th

Portland, Ore., Jan. 23.

Sudden below-freezing weather and transient shows will cut deeply into firstruns this stanza. Long-playing holdovers continue to fare best. "Flower Drum Song" is rated best bet although in fifth round at Broadway. "Bachelor Flat" looms as standout newcomer with a fairish take at the Fox, but "Happy Thieves," also new, is very sad at Paramount. "George Raft Story" is rated mild at Orpheum. "King of Kings" is steady in fifth round at Music Box.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-

B'way Marking Time; 'Night Bright' $58,000, 'One, Two' Hot 39G, 'Story' Wham 46G, 'Majority'-Stage 145G

Broadway firstrun business is lagging in the current session as many theatres await the arrival of new product early next month. With numerous spots still playing the films they launched for the year-end holiday, it is only natural that some are feeling the strain of the extended runs. The weather, for the most part, has been favorable for this time of year.

Lone newcomer, "Tender Is Night," looks to land fancy $58,000, daydating at the Paramount and the Plaza. "View From Bridge" opened Monday (22) at the arty Sutton.

Champ moneygetter is "Majority of One" with stageshow which looks to hold with a big $145,000 in second session at the Music Hall. Pic is staying a third week. "Judgment at Nuremberg," playing on hardticket, still is capacity at $37,000 in fifth week at the Palace.

"One, Two, Three" looks to hold with big $39,000 in fifth stanza, daydating the Astor and Fine Arts. Film continues, naturally, "Bachelor Flat" is heading for a good $9,300 in current (2d) week at the Forum.

"Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" looks like mild $19,500 in fourth session daydating the Capitol and arty Trans-Lux 85th St. "Pocketful of Miracles" was down to fair $17,200 for fifth stanza, daydating the Victoria and arty Trans-Lux 52d St.

"West Side Story" is continuing near-capacity $46,000 in 14th round at the Rivoli on hardticket. "El Cid" was robust $36,000 in fifth week at the Warner. "King of Kings" is heading for a sturdy $29,000 in 15th session at the State.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses" is down to okay $16,900 for fifth week at the Henry Miller, and comes out soon. It's due to open on moveover in about three weeks. "La Belle Americaine" held with big $12,500 in fifth round at the Paris, where it now is in sixth week.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)—"One, Two, Three" (UA) (5th wk). This round ending today (Wed.) looks like big $24,000 after $24,500 for fourth. Stays.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Roman Spring" (WB) (4th wk). This session winding today (Wed.) looks like mild $19,500 after $21,000 for third week. Stays, with "Sergeants Three" (UA) due in Feb. 3.

Criterion (Moss) (1,520; $1.25-$2.50) — "Innocents" (20th) (5th wk). Fourth week ended Sunday (21) was fair $13,000 after $20,000 in third. Stays until "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col) opens Feb. 2, daydating with 72d St. Playhouse.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; 90-$2.75)—"Summer and Smoke" (Par) (10th wk). This round ending today (Wed.) is heading for fair $12,000 after $13,500 for ninth week.

Embassy (Guild Enterprises) (500; $1.50-$2.50)—"La Dolce Vita" (Astor) (7th wk). Sixth stanza finished yesterday (Tues.) was great $17,000 after $20,000 for fifth week. Daydating with Beekman.

Henry Miller (Gilbert Miller) (800; $1.50-$3)—"Les Liaisons Dangerous" (Astor) (6th wk). Fifth round finished Sunday (21) was okay $16,900 after $20,200 for fourth, playing on hardticket, three-a-day. Pic is now scheduled to close here in a few weeks, with a moveover run scheduled to get underway in about three weeks.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1.50-$3.50)—"Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA) (6th wk). Fifth session ended last night (Tues.) was capacity $37,000 after same in fourth week. Stays indef., with tickets now printed until July.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th) (2d wk). This week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit good $9,300 after $17,000 for opener. Will stay, with "The Victim" (Indie) due Feb. 5.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Tender Is Night" (20th). Initial session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for nice $41,000. Stays. Opened with special preem performance the night of Jan. 18.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75)—"Majority of One" (WB) with stageshow (2d wk). This week ending today (Wed.) looks like big $145,000 or near after $151,000 for opening stanza. Holds a third week, with "Lover Come Back" (U) due next, but not likely until Feb. 8.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.50-$3.50)—"West Side Story" (UA) (14th wk). This round winding today (Wed.) looks to hit near-capacity $46,000, same as in 13th wk. Continues, natch!

State (Loew) (1,900; $1.50-$3.50)—"Kings of Kings" (M-G) (15th wk). This frame ending today (Wed.) is heading for solid $29,000

Johnston Gives Cannes, Venice Fest Chiefs New U.S. Ideas on Festivals

Paris, Jan. 23.

Motion Picture Producers Assn. prexy Eric Johnston met here this week with Robert Favre Le Bret, head of the Cannes Film Fest, and Domenico Meccoli, director of the Venice Film Fest. They heard new Yank attitudes and suggestions about future U.S. film biz participation in the major festivals. Johnston met with the fest prexies along with Fred Gronich, Motion Picture Export Assn., Continental rep and Leo Hochstetter, repping the MPEA Mediterranean region.

Le Bret was told that a special American committee, set up to deal with film fests, has propounded certain suggestions which it hopes the festivals can meet. It is apparent that Yank companies have recognized the prestige of some fests but want to protect themselves even though going all the way in appearing at them.

Main problem that the Americans would like resolved is the fest ruling which eliminates all films that have been shown outside the country of origin. Johnston pointed out that high cost pix could not be held up for fests and that the U.S. was making fewer films which made rapid distribution even more vital.

Le Bret retorted that the fest had previously waived prior British openings of U.S. pix because of the same language setup, and could even give special dispensations to wanted films. However, he felt that if the film had obtained too wide distribution, it would not arouse the desired interest at fests.

Cite Growth of Big Scale Pix

MPEA also pointed up the growing big-scale spectacle pix, as becoming one of the more important Yank staples. Festivals were asked if they could not do away with the present prize setups of choosing the best pix and instead initiate prizes by film categories. Since these pix were geared for the world, and special, it was felt they were not of the type to be lumped with other films for prizes.

It was also felt that these type pix would be submitted more often and in competition if the fests would go along on these suggestions. Spec pix usually have been shown out of competition at Cannes and Venice and some have gotten good publicity values from this kind of showing, like "Ben-Hur" (M-G), "Around World in 80 Days" (UA) and "Exodus" (UA).

But now these films would be in the running if some modus vivendi with the fests could be arrived at. Le Bret promised to discuss these suggestions with the fest committee.

It seems likely that a possible new prize category could be added for specialized films but the present system of "bests" would be kept up. Special dispensations to films already shown abroad might also be forwarded.

The renewed Yank interest in fests as a positive factor instead of a necessary evil was noted by Le Bret. But Yanks have been more and more cooperative with fests in the last few years as foreign income has grown somewhat and the important aspects of fest prizes and public relations have become clearer.

This has to be ironed out, but the U.S. also has to try to pick its best not its biggest films, pointed out Le Bret.

Yuraku-za House Ace Tokyo Roadshow Spot

Tokyo, Jan. 16.

The Yuraku-za Theatre topped the seven Toho foreign film roadshow houses in this city at the wickets for 1961 by registering some $4,142,000 in revenue from 6,572,000 admissions during the year. These Toho theatres include most of this city's choice showcases for foreign fare.

The lineup at the Yuraku-za in 1961 was "Spartacus" (U), "Porgy and Bess" (Daiei), "Les Liaisons Dangereuses" (French), "Un Deux, Trois, Quatre" (French), "Gums of Navarone" (Col) and the domestic blockbuster, "Sayka" (Life of Buddha). In order of earnings, the other Toho roadshow houses tabulated in the following order for 1961: Hibiya, Scala-za, Theatee Tokyo, Imperial (Cinerama), New Toho and Marunouchi Toho.

'Bread' Sans Dialog

Berlin, Jan. 16.

Heinrich Boell, 44 years old and postwar Germany's most successful writer (his books have been translated into 18 languages) has gone into the German film business. Boell's book, "The Bread of Former Years," is currently being filmed in West Berlin.

It looms as an unusual production. "Bread" is being shot without dialog. Director Herbert Vesely and Boell have agreed that the author will write all dialog after the shooting has been completed. Boell has been given the privilege of giving the final okay on the film. Vesely, an avantgardist short film producer, is directing the film his first directorial assignment of a feature pic.

Cast of "Bread" is composed of relatively unknown players. There are only five principal players, Christian Doermer, Vera Tschechowa, Karen Blanguernon, Eike Siegel and Gerry Bretscher.

BRITISH TV CO. INTO BOWLING ALLEY BIZ

London, Jan. 23.

Associated TeleVision, through its subsidiary Ambassador Bowling Ltd., has launched its first tenpin bowling centre in Ipswich, Suffolk. Apart from its Muzak operation, this is ATV's first major diversification into non-showbiz fields. The Ipswich bowl is part of a $2,800,000 scheme to launch 10 centres in various cities.

Currently, two further alleys—one at Stevenage and another at Portsmouth — are under construction and should be operational by the fall. On the same style as the Ipswich centre, they will be 24-lane constructions with every facility.

According to Bill Michael, general manager of Ambassador Bowling, ATV will have 10 centres in action by the end of 1963 and if reaction to bowling measures up to expectations, the company expects to double that total in the future.

Hammer Films Spending $4,200,000 on 6 Films

London, Jan. 23.

Hammer Films, the British production outfit helmed by James Carreras, is to spend $4,200,000 this year on a program of six pictures, all of which will be in the gimmick category. Carreras claims that "This is the day of the colossal spectacle and the gimmick picture, and straight routine productions no longer attract audiences.

"Spectacles," he added, "are beyond the resources of Hammer, but gimmick pictures and action stories are very much our cup of tea."

The new program will tee off in May with J. B. Priestley's "The Old Dark House," to be made in association with William Castle, from a scrpit by Ray Russel, who did the "Psycho" screenplay. Later in the same month, filming will start on "Maniac," from an original story and screenplay by Jimmy Sangster, to be followed by "One More River" and "Quatermass and the Pit."

OSAKA FESTIVAL ACTS

Tokyo, Jan. 16.

Artists from six countries will participate in 1962 edition of the Osaka International Festival, slated from April 12 to May 5, with the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orch under baton of Eugen Jochum in the curtain raiser.

Other foreign artists presented will be the Comedie Francaise, the Virtuosi di Roma, a German opera ensemble headed by Christel Goltz, Spanish harpist Nicanor Zabaleta and French cellist Andre Navarra.

In addition, two Japanese symphony orchs, a Noh drama troupe and some Japanese opera singers will appear. An innovation in the upcoming fest will be an evening of orchestra music devoted entirely to works of contemporary Japanese composers.

'Grass' Gets Novelty Press Preem in Paris

Paris, Jan. 23.

A new wrinkle in pic film preems for Paris was instituted here via the five showings during one day, Tues. (16), of Elia Kazan's "Splendor in Grass" (WB) at the arty firstrun Le Publicis. Pic will not open till next April. Crix were guests but the public paid.

Director Elia Kazan was in to meet the press after the film's preem. Publicis programmer Sammy Siritzky felt this would give the film a good talking base with the public and press before its actual opening. Siritzky has made the Publicis a paying Champs-Elysees firstrun house for foreign and local offbeat pix.

ACCT Sets Drive To Halt British Entry Into ECM

London, Jan. 23.

A major union offensive against Britain's entry into the European Common Market is to be launched by the Assn. of Cinematograph, Television and Allied Technicians at its annual conference in March.

The general council of the union has tabled an emergency motion which declares that application of the Treaty of Rome to the British film and tv industry could "only mean the eventual destruction of any truly national culture in films and television, and economic disaster for the workers in those industries."

The ACTT annual conference will be asked to express its vehement opposition to joining the ECM, and to urge the general council to campaign against it with "all vigor."

The general council's decision to take emergency action followed discussion on a report by general secretary George H. Elvin on the recent international union conference in Brussels.

On that occasion, the participating unions from all parts of Europe recommended the setting up of an international consultative committee, and a meeting is being arranged during the Cannes Film Festival in May. Elvin was named provisional secretary of that committee.

1st British Pact With Minimums for Scripters

London, Jan. 16.

The first-ever pact setting out minimum terms for scriptwriters was signed here last week by the two British producer organizations and the Television and Screen Writers Guild. The only pact previously negotiated by the two sides applied solely to screen credits.

Although maintaining the traditional custom that writing fees be settled by individual negotiation, the agreement lays down the minimum scales to be paid for treatments, draft and final screenplays for first and second feature pix. There are separate rates for full and associate members of the Guild.

For a first feature treatment, the minimum is $420 for a full member and $210 for an associate; for the draft screenplay, $3,780 (full), $1,890 (associate); and for the final screenplay, $1,400 (full), $700 (associate). Second feature minima are: treatment, $210 (full), $140 (associate); draft, $700 full, $490 (associate); final, $350 (full), $140 (associate).

Moliere Toujours

Paris, Jan. 23.

This doesn't happen in theatres very often. For a special performance of "L'Avare" by Moliere, honoring the 340th anniversary of his birth, the entire Comedie Francaise company gathered on stage for some speech-making.

At the end of which the audience voluntarily and in its entirety rose to its feet to applaud the company.

London

Maurice Cowan has acquired screen rights to an American novel, "Whisper Town," and will film it for his Chiltern Productions. Jeffrey Dell assigned to write the screenplay . . . Tv and radio personality Peter Haig has set up his own production outfit, and has picked "The Boys" as his first project. It will be made for Gala Film Distribs . . . Annie Israel, who believes herself Britain's oldest film extra, celebrated her 84th birthday last week by putting in a full day at Bray Studios on "The Phantom of the Opera" . . . The Bray lot, by the way, is going dark for a few weeks so that builders can repair damage caused by fire last year and also extend the existing accommodation.

Paris

Author Jean Giono has gotten back film rights to one of his books from Caravelle Productions which company never got around to producing. Giono had to pay a small sum for it for he had pledged the book. Now he intends producing it himself with Mexican director Luis Bunuel. Giono will script with Bunuel. Book is "Le Hussard Sur Le Toit" (The Soldier on the Roof), about a cholera epidemic in France in Napoleonic times. It rolls in Southern France late this year . . . Jean Rimoldi is trying to have a new Fernandel pic change its moniker for he feels it is damaging to his private life and reputation. Pic is titled "Cet Imbecile De Rimoldi" . . . West German director Wolfgang Becker starting a U. S.-French-German coproduction in St. Moritz with Lex Barker and Juliette Meyniel. It is a thriller called "La Mort D'Un Play-Boy" (Death of a Playboy) . . . Reports here have it that Russo pic star ("The Cranes Are Flying") Tatiana Samoilova has been put in a Russo sanatorium with a severe nervous breakdown . . . Maurice Chevalier dedicated a plaque put up to the late great Mistinguett on the site of her Paris home.

Last Cannes Fest winning pic "Viridiana" of Louis Bunuel has won the best pic award in Belgium for '61 and may finally get a showing in France. It seems the Spanish obstructions to showing it there may be overcome . . . The Nouevelle Critique Prize, given by young film critics, went to "Lola" of Jacques Demy as the top French film of '61 and to Joseph Losey's "The Criminal," a British pic, as the best foreign pic given in France in '61 . . . Marcel Pagliero has replaced Gabriel Ferzetti in the French pic shooting in Cambodia, "Your Shadow Is Mine" after Ferzetti and director Andre Michel could not get along on the interpretation of his role in the pic . . . Jean-Luc Godard's new pic "Vivre Sa Vie" (Live Her Life), starring his wife Anna Karina, will improvise around the tale of a little salesgirl who goes from flirtations to prostitution . . . Sidney Lumet in to confab with French producer Paul Graetz on a film he will direct for him in France later this year. Pic is "Epitaph for An Enemy" which takes place during the D Day Landings. Pic will be made in French and English like the Graetz-Lumet "View from the Bridge." Rene Havard and Roger Hirson are scripting the French and Anglo versions respectively . . . Hollywood Oscar entries from France are the Venice Fest prizewinner of Alain Resnais, "Last Year in Marienbad," a full length documentary on a New Guinea expedition, "Sky and Mud," and a short "The Little Spoon" . . . Critic award, Prix Louis Delluc, went to Francois Reichenbach for his documentary feature "A Heart as Big as That," about a young African boxer's life in Paris . . . Prince Napoleon Murat bowing out of film producing to concentrate on manufacturing video sets. His Nouvelles Editions Des Films will be taken over by director Louis Malle's brother, Jean-Francois, but Murat will keep his interest in the company but have no say. Thus French filmmaking loses its only producer of royal blood. Murat produced the hit Malle pic "The Lovers" . . . Danny Kaye's "On the Double" (Par) did fine firstrun biz.

Mexico City

Mexican industry again very optimistic about Hollywood influx, with officials and unions expecting shooting of 10 to 12 American pictures south of the border . . . Initial Hollywood production activity includes Phoenix Productions "The Time Trap," and "The Secret Garden" also is rolling. Jose Luis Bueno's coproduction with Hollywood, "Wounds of Hunger" is announced for end of January and Jose Luis Celis expects to shoot "Train to Tulancingo" in February, with this one starring Jeff Hunter . . . Juan Bandera Molino, forced to admit that Peliculas Mexicanas, official distributorship set up for handling Mexican product exclusively in Spanish language areas, was agent for United Artists in Venezuela and other undisclosed South American areas (and possibly also acting for other European film firms), lashed out at reporters who had dug up information. In his opinion film trade and general press reporters should not stick their noses in what he termed "the internal affairs of the distributorship." (News is not news, unless he hands it out.) Bandera said there will be no dropping of what is a "lucrative" business which may well get distributorship out of financial straits it has been in during past year. Mexico's industry is getting exploitation-minded and apart from setting up a series of "Mexican Film Weeks" in more than 20 States of the republic, idea is to be followed through in Ceneral and South America, with strong actor contingents accompanying Mexican pix . . . Mexican producers and officials finally hep to fact that Latin American audiences dote on personal appearances and if they find visiting stars, starlets "simpatico," then pix they appear in show a sudden upward boost at boxoffice. Highly touted and ambitious program of independent exhibitors, envisaging production of 30 films in 14 months, apparently running into difficulties, with Juan F. Lance, head of the Assn. of Independent Exhibitors now stating that only three pix will definitely go before cameras. Seems that around half of the 800 members of Association reneging in ponying up regular monthly quotas to build up a $1,600,000 production budget reserve . . . No firm word yet on Mexican-Hollywood coproduction of "The Miracle of Guadalupe," with Jose Luis Celis claiming he will advance Mexican capital for film. However, differences of opinion with his American associates have to be straightened out even though word is Spencer Tracy is being sought for this one . . . Oscar J. Brooks and William Karoll have agreed to do "Two Friends," German-Mexican coproduction to be shot here . . . Curious feud of Jose Quiroga, who operates the Playa Hornos Theatre in Acapulco, with the National Theatre Operating Co., is reacting to exhibitor's favor. "South Pacific" is going into its second year at house, and Quiroga now has added "Can-Can," with both films playing daily, with first showing at 6 and late show at 10:30. Exhibitor claims he is grossing $3,200 daily for two pix at the $1.60 boxoffice top permitted him here. Quiroga also mounts concerts, special stage shows from time to time.

Berlin

In 1961, the German film reached its absolute low, both financially and artistically speaking. This unholy fact has inspired a series of German film publicists to come along with books on the what's-wrong-with-the-German-film question. Critic Walther Schmieding, in his book "Kunst oder Kasse" (Art or Cash), published by Ruetten and Loening Verlag (Hamburg), puts the blame on many if not everyone: The producers and distributors (their bad taste), the official and semi-official boards (for having misused their functions), the poor relationship between the German literature and film people, the ignorance of the film science (still neither a chair at a university nor a film academy in the country), the press (for giving gossip and scandal stuff too much space) and even large segments of "sincere" critics (often writing merely for writing's sake).

Cantinflas Tops at Mex Boxoffice In 1961, 'Ben-Hur' Biggest Grosser; 'Come Sept.' Hits $80,000 in 5 Weeks

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

While Mario Moreno (Cantinflas) was top boxoffice draw in Mexico last year, "Ben-Hur" (M-G) held honors as top picture grosser, topping over $280,000 dollars during initial preem run in five theatres. Picture is still running at the Olimpia Theatre and during holiday weeks grossed better than $16,000 at the 40c admission. Story for "Ben-Hur" in provinces is the same, with this opus breaking b.o. marks. In Ciudad Jaurez, the film was booked into four houses and had another house added to take care of overflow.

More recent entry, "Come September" (U) carned approximately $80,000 in first five weeks at the Variedades Theatre, breaking former boxoffice records at this house. Film is still running.

Acapulco's Playa Hornos Theatre, the only one with 70m projection installation, has had a good year with "South Pacific," grossing nearly $100,000 for one-a-day night performances. House has sometimes held picture to weekend exhibition and during Christmas-New Year holiday week added other pix.

Cantinflas' "The Illiterate One" was top Mexican grossing pic although actual take has not been released. Other boxoffice hits for last year included "Bachelor Apartment" (UA), "La Dolce Vita" (Astor), "El Bello Antonio," "Juana Gallo" and "El Padre Pistolas." These are listed as tops by Peliculas Nacionales and the National Theatre Operating Company.

National Theatre Operating, the government-owned exhibition circuit, grossed nearly $24,000,000 in the more than 300 houses it directly controls, with $16,000,000 of this figure attributed to Mexican productions.

Outstanding foreign star in Mexico last year was Romy Schneider, whose "Sissi" series made a strong impression on the Mexican public.

Among Mexican players the top draws, apart from Cantinflas, included Maria Felix, Libertad Lamarque, Louis Aguilar, comic Lalo Gonzales and the comic duo of Viruta y Capulina.

Landa Agrees to Remain Head of Nat'l Assn. Of Actors After Mass Plea

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

Rodolfo Landa, head of the National Assn. of Actors, has been prevailed upon to continue at helm of the union. There was consternation in ranks of actors when he tentatively indicated he'd like to give up office to someone else. In a mass demonstration of faith in his abilities, with words of praise spoken for Landa by top entertainers including Mario Moreno (Cantinflas), Andres Soler, Victor Junco, Pedro Armendariz and others, the performers appealed to Landa to continue his post.

Landa, who has led actors during the past eight years, with the last two the shakiest in the history of Mexican show biz, accepted the candidacy for another two-year term. Her reelection now is only a formality.

Cantinflas, describing the union as completely different from any other, a status attained by sacrifice and love on part of membership, said it was one big family and as such it appealed to Landa not to leave office "in these moments of danger for the Mexican picture industry." Junco, seconding the words of Cantinflas, said Landa was the best leader that the actors have ever had.

After Landa capitulated, visibly moved by esteem of his confreres, he was awarded a gold medal for his services by Cantinflas. Dolores del Rio presented him with a diploma, and congratulations came thick and fast from entire assembly.

The Landa leadership assures that there will be no division within the union, a possibility that threatened had he decided to definitely refuse another term.

Film Technicians In Paris Due to Strike

Paris, Jan. 23.

A couple of strikes are due over film technicians being ousted from film studio jobs when the state tele setup takes over two pix studios, and video technicians for higher wages.

Steady film technicians have gone down from 1,100 in 1949 to 650 in 1961. Now the Joinville and Francoeur studios are being taken for vidfilms and at least 50 film workers may be out of a job with some younger workers kept. There may be a complete film strike to protest against this. Meanwhile, tv technicians have pulled several flash strikes recently and may go in for a general one to obtain reclassification and pay hikes.

Negro Leads in Spoleto 'Carmen'

Rome, Jan. 23.

Gian-Carlo Menotti's Festival of Two Worlds at Spoleto, Italy, will present three operas as part of the 1962 season. One will have two American Negro singers, George Shirley and Verrett-Carter in the leads of Bizet's "Carmen."

Prokofieff's "Love Of Three Oranges" and Rossini's "Count Ory" are also set. Thomas Schippers is expected to conduct all three.

New York's Henry Street Settlement will send its ballet group to Italy to present Alwin Nicholais' version of "Nutcracker."

Also due at Spoleto: Jerome Kilty's new play made from Thornton Wilder's "Ides of March."

Costumes and scenery by Steinberg for Rossini's "The Count Ory." This opera and "Carmen" will be staged personally by Gian Carlo Menotti. "Ides of March," leads will be played by Rina Morelli and Paolo Stoppa, same couple which played "Dear Liar" at Spoleto last year. There will be new edition of "Album Leaves."

Verdi's "Messa da Requiem" will be given on the church square as every year, conducted by Thomas Schippers with the Philharmonic from Trieste.

There will be again a film festival of avant-garde films, an art show of African art and one of contemporary American design.

Mex City to Preem 70m Pix in New 2,000-Seater

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

National Theatre Operating Company preems the new Diana Theatre on Paseo de La Reforma Feb. 5, with the showing of either "Spartacus" (U) or "King of Kings" (M-G). House, a 2,000-seater, has 70m projection system. Juan Pellicer, division head, said house has been leased on longterm from private builders.

The official circuit will rebuild the Lux and Rivoli nabe cinemas here, destroyed several years ago by an earthquake. In the provinces, the Olympia Theatre will go up in Tulancingo.

In step up of modernization of its firstruns, Pellicer revealed that 70m projection systems will be installed in the Chapultepec, Roble, Variedades and Latino first-run houses as well as in some key provincial cities.

Kazan Bears Down On Bally for 'Splendor'

London, Jan. 16.

Elia Kazan is currently on a promotional kick for his "Splendor in the Grass," conducting concentrated campaigns in key European capitals. In London, during a three-day stopover, he met all the leading crix and also was interviewed on three tv programs.

He subsequently followed the pattern in Stockholm, Norway and Paris. Kazan winds his tour in Athens where he will stay to work on his next picture.

French Interpretation

Paris, Jan. 23.

Critics have many times reached out to curious "reasons" for failure or success of plays they are reviewing. Leo Sauvage of Figaro found a new one in reviewing "Romulus" from New York.

Play was fine as written by Frederic Durrenmatt but Gore Vidal, who adapted it into English, was wrong for the job, felt Sauvage, since Vidal is primarily a "politically frustrated man, who lost out in the last New York electoral campaign."

Stress Hispano's Counsel as Guide To Film Fest

Madrid, Jan. 16.

Spanish Producers Assn. manifested an unmistakable preference for 1962 film festivals that receive a prior seal of approval from the Union Cinematografic Hispano-America — Spanish-speaking confederation grouping producers associations of Spain, Argentina and Mexico.

Calling on local producers to line up product for upcoming film gatherings, the org listed Cannes, San Sebastian, Berlin and Venice as the four internationally-recognized festivals, but intimated that Hispano's point of view would be a dominant factor in determining the extent of Spanish participation. Implication is that Spanish-lingo fests as San Sebastian, Mar de Plata, Punte del Este and Acapulco will get fullest co-operation.

As for Cannes, Berlin and Venice, last year's policy of combined showmanship and propaganda under a catch-all UCH banner, will be continued and amplified at these three film festivals.

UA to Make Test Case Of Tokyo's Attempt To Censor 'Nuremberg' Pic

Tokyo, Jan. 16.

United Artists of Japan will seek to make a test case of the Tokyo customs authorities' right to "censor" films in the matter of "Judgment of Nuremberg," which the officials want to clip. Scenes in controversy, adding up to less than one minute, are those from documentary footage which depict Nazi atrocities.

Although the company will not take legal action, it will make "respectful representation to the authorities," according to Geza Polaty, manager here for UA.

"We are not suing anybody," he said, "but we are not happy. I feel that this is not a fictional film, but a trial picture. How can the trial discuss something we don't show."

While customs authorities contend their right to "censor" is based on the Japanese Customs Tariff Law providing for embargo of all literature, art objects, etc. deemed injurious to public safety or morals, Polaty does not agree that they have the right.

Merger with Gaumont-British Brings Many Changes in Rank Organization Mgt.; Boost Divisional Responsibility

London, Jan. 23.

Changes in the management structure in the Rank Organization following and facilitated by the merger with Gaumont-British, which took effect on New Year's day, have been revealed by John Davis, deputy chairman and managing director of the company.

All related activities within the group are now under common management, thus facilitating operation of the Organization's diversified activities, and increasing the responsibility of divisional chief executives.

As part of the reorientation of management, it is intended that in future all activities of the group shall trade under the Rank name, both overseas and at home.

Under the new setup, Earl St. John is chief executive for production, Frederick L. Thomas, for domestic film distribution; Colan W. P. MacArthur, for overseas distribution; and Kenneth Winckles, for the theatrical division. Last named, who is also assistant managing director of the Organization, has V. P. Powell as general manager of the theatre group.

The theatrical division, apart from embracing all picture houses in the United Kingdom, also includes catering, dance halls, the Victor Sylvester studios and the health studios.

Other divisional execs include Harold Shampan for film music publishing, William M. Harcourt and H. G. Barker for film processing, Ivor Smith for tenpin bowling and Brian Dowling for press and information.

Frank Poole Leaving 20th-Fox for Rank

London, Jan. 23.

Frank S. Poole is leaving 20th-Fox to join Rank Film Distributors as assistant general sales manager. He is presently assistant sales manager at 20th and has been with that company since 1939.

He started with 20th-Fox as office manager in the branch here, was transferred to the shipping department in 1953, and a year later became branch manager in Leeds. In 1959, he returned to London to become a sales executive.

Sindicato Loans Delay Deplored

Madrid, Jan. 16.

Board of directors of Uniespana (Spanish Producers Assn.) went on record as urging its parent body, the Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo, to speed and increase sindicato credit funds.

Sindicato credit originally provided about 30% of each film budget, and became available generally to producers at some point prior to the half-way filming mark. During the latter half of 1961, sindicato credit funds were not accorded in many instances until shooting had terminated.

While the maximum sindicato loan does not exceed 1,500,000 pesetas ($25,000), this sum together with distributor guarantees constituted the fundamentals in film financing. Credit delays consequently made project financing a hazardous and uncertain venture. Film circles believe the entire sindicato credit system must be overhauled with added funds vitally needed to restore effective support in this area of government film protection.

Prep Mar del Plata Fest Hope for Adequate Power

Buenos Aires, Jan. 16.

New airconditioning equipment, curtains and a new seating arrangement are to be installed in the Mar del Plata Casino Auditorium in preparation for the International Film Fest in Mar del Plata, scheduled for March. Ariel Cortazzo is this year's festival president while Hector de Olivera and Fernando Ayala are on the committee. Delegations are to be lodged at the Hotel Provincial (now in the hands of private concessionaires) while the Hotel's Grand Salon, facing the sea, will be available for the opening and closing receptions.

It is hoped that the city's power supply will be stronger this year and the airconditioner in the auditorium will be in operation.

Assoc. British Picture Corp. Foresees Decline In 2d Half; 1st Soars

London, Jan. 23.

A dip in profits for the second half of current financial year is forecast by the board of Associated British Picture Corp.

An interim statement issued last week, however, reports that trading profits for the first half of the year, up to Sept. 30 last totalled $8,401,100, an improvement of $1,176,000 over the corresponding period in 1960.

Net profit before taxation amounted to $6,915,400, but the Inland Revenue will be collecting more than $3,990,000, leaving a net to the corporation of $2,924,793.

Interim dividend of 10% on the ordinary stock is equivalent to the 20% distribution a year ago because the capital was doubled via a scrip issue.

Mex Film Unions Agree To Reduce Pay Scales

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

Mexican picture industry unions, anxious to get back Hollywood production here, have agreed to reduced pay scales. Hollywood producers would benefit from wage cuts up to 25% for technical crews, according to the Technicians and Manual Workers Section of STPC (Union of Film Production Workers). This policy inaugurated with "Secret Garden," now shooting here, and also for "Time Trap," a Phoenix Production set to roll here.

The director's section also has agreed to a 25% cut for assistant director. Reductions will be the rule until further notice, reflects the new policy of "cooperation" by Mexican unions.

The long dormant project of coproductions, with Hollywood and others is also being revived with producers Mario Zacarias, Jose Luis Celis, Jose Luis Bueno and Oscar Brooks among leading Mexican producers definitely setting productions. Bueno has announced that "The Wounds of Hunger," in coproduction with Hollywood, may go before cameras at end of this month.

British Cinema Grosses Fell 7% in '61 From 1960; Paid Admissions Off 11%

London, Jan. 16.

Although the rate of decline has slowed down, paid admissions in British cinemas last year fell below 500,000,000 for the first time since the end of the second World War. The total as recorded by the Board of Trade, was slightly in excess of 460,000,000 a drop of 11% on the final estimate of 521,000,000 for 1960. In 1957 and 1958, admissions dipped by 17% and the decline reached 20% in 1959, but to 14% a year later.

Gross boxoffice receipts for 1961 are provisionally estimated at $170,800,000, a fall of nearly 7% from the 1960 figure of $183,120,000. Net boxoffice takings are provisionally estimated at slightly under $159,600,000, a decline of 4%, levy payments were estimated at $10,650,000, but there was no admission duty payable in 1961 against $5,880,000 in 1960.

Over the first six months of last year, admissions were less than 9% down on the corresponding period of 1960, but from June onwards the rate of decline was faster, reaching 16% in October and November. A relatively sharp rise in the average admission prices partly offset the effect in the fall of admissions.

The downward trend is further refleeted in BOT estimate that the number of theatres in commercial operation dropped from 3,050 at the start of 1961, to something under 2,800 at the end. The total closures compares with 400 during the previous year.

The BOT statisticians calculate that the rate of fall in admissions in 1961 of 11% was not much above the rate of theatre closures.

Other Aspects in Denker Suit Stand

Despite the fact that the New York Court of Appeals ruled that author Henry Denker could not seek rescission of the contract by which "The Greatest Story Ever Told," was sold to 20th-Fox without cooperation of the other holders to the copyright heirs of Fulton Oursler Sr., (see VARIETY Jan. 3), two other causes of action in Denker's suit vs. 20th are still outstanding.

One is a suit for damages against the film company for not starting production of the film by the time which Denker alleges was specified in the contract. The other is a suit for damages on the grounds that 20th did not give Denker credit re "Greatest Story" in advertising and publicity as allegedly required by the contract. Denker and his lawyers are conferring on their next move in the case.

Public's Beefing Stance in Focus Anew Re Projection Out of Focus

Pleased Reader
New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

A standing ovation to VARIETY for again focusing attention on the projection booth!

VARIETY is read by far more laymen—cinema, tv and theatre buffs who find the local papers all too lacking in news of show business—than those in the trade might realize.

If more of these readers would register protests as cleverly and completely as Paul Caster did in the current issue, they might insist that managers do their job and that projectionists earn their rather remarkable union scale.

Americans all too often happily praise the service, courtesy and efficiency of European waiters, hotels, taxi drivers, doormen, ushers, etc. etc.—but WHAT do we do about improving that of our own?

Rusty Morris

Conscientious Boothman
Charlotte, N. C.

Editor, VARIETY:

In reply to Paul Caster (P. 17, Dec. 27), he is so right—I think the projection in some theatres is the worst thing about them. All the new pictures coming from majors in Hollywood and London are almost perfect as far as focus and photography goes.

If you have good equipment in the booth the projectionist can give perfect projection if he—

(1) Focuses every reel.

(2) Checks frame line every reel.

(3) Adjusts arc lamp.

(4) Checks sound.

And if he does not do these things, give him a broom and let him take the porter's job.

A man with 25 yrs. in the booth.

More From Paul Caster
Glen Oaks, N. Y.

Editor, VARIETY:

Since my words regarding poor projection at Century's Meadows were printed in VARIETY recently, my telephone has been ringing. I have collected several amusing stories suitable for all audiences and—finally—I have been given a tour of the Meadows.

Allen Grant, a Century District Manager, conducted the tour. It's objective: To convince me of the fact that Century strives for quality, both in projection and condition of their houses. Inasmuch as it is far more difficult to knock than to boost, I regret to say that I AM close to convinced. Not convinced that our troubles are over, or that the big screen will be sharp and clear from this moment on; but convinced that if the quality of projection at Century houses is not perfect, it is not because they are not trying.

Let me state first that every complaint I had stated originally was a valid one. "Guns of Navarone" was seen half-in and half-out of focus; "Spartacus" displayed a glaring frame line at one point; "The Hustler" and several other films were also projected with poor focus. But there was more to the problem than met the eye. The gentleman who smothered my complaints ("Night scenes never look sharp; you can't expect perfection, etc.") was NOT, as I had assumed, the manager. He was the assistant manager.

The manager himself is an apparently conscientious fellow who was much upset by my writings. He made no attempt to deny that the theatre was at fault.

The Meadows installed a new reflector in one of their projectors last October. Life expectancy for such a reflector is two years, minimum. This particular reflector was a defective one, and they are replacing it now—in fact, it should be installed by the time I have written this. It was the reason for the glaring discrepancy between the two projectors.

Paul Caster.

Ads in Longhair

Thus it was handled like the guest appearance of an opera company, with hefty advance ticket sale.

The film was not introduced with a trailer, but with diapositives showing stills from the opera, and head shots of the star singers and conductor, much as publicity is handled by the German opera houses.

The theatres were given a ten-part "command publicity campaign," insisting that they use the discreet underplayed type of publicity used for the opera houses here. Placards in front of house showed once again head shots of the stars, instead of the scenes from the production.

As in an opera, programs were sold for pfennigs each (about 12c) telling the careers of the singers, with attractive photos, and 75,000 of these full-color programs have been sold.

The lengthy film (three and a half hours) has two intermissions, and champagne — some with a "Rosenkavalier" brand name — is sold, just as it is at the operas.

And with the unusual length, generally there is just one evening performance, with weekend matinees, similar to the opera houses schedules. Ticket prices have been advanced accordingly to prices set at from 3 DM (75c) to 12 DM ($4), similar to the opera scale. Rank is collecting a 50% rental fee for the pic.

Overall result has been a sensation. The pic opened in Bonn in a downpour, despite which ambassadors from 37 nations were present, with the opening held under the patronage of the British Ambassador, Sir Christopher Eden Steel. The Metropol theatre was decorated like an opera house, with 10,000 roses, and a rose presented to every lady attending.

At Berlin's Zoopalast, it sold out 97.2% for the first two performances, 96.2% for the following two, at this major first-run house. At Frankfurt's first-run Metro in Schwan, the performances went 100%, 97.2%, 89%, 99.6%, and the January 11, 1962, playdate hit 100% again.

At Hamburg's Grindel, its first five dates were again at the 100% mark, followed by 81.9%, 88.2%, and 86%. It scored 100% at other first runs in Muenster, Trier, Osnabrueck, Wuerzburg.

At the only art house where it is booked in for a long run, the 300-seat Tivoli in Munich, it has been playing seven weeks.

Some day's grosses have been as high as 6,000 DM ($1,500), amazing for West Germany, and it is expected that the film will recoup a million marks ($250,000) in West Germany alone, which will bring it well over its production costs. And its ad costs, because of the unusual technique, cost considerably less than the regular film ballyhoo.

Pic is also set to be released in the U. S. and in England where, it is felt, the unusual presentation can again be a big pay-off.

Elvis Presley's next for Hal Wallis is "Cumbo Ya Ya," to roll in Spring in New Orleans.

More Re Army-'Day'

Washington, Jan. 23.

In the latest episode in the "Longest Day" Pentagon serial, Army investigators have poohpoohed gripes by GI's about being "pressured" into duty as extra's in the Darryl Zanuck D-Day epic. But a Senate subcommittee has still not made up its mind as to whether to pursue the matter further.

The soldiers, members of a transportation company stationed at Rochefort, France, had written letters of complaint to Chairman Sam Ervin of the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee. The grievances were sent to the Pentagon by Ervin who asked for an investigation with the comment that if the allegations were true they smacked of "involuntary servitude."

After looking into the GI peeves, the European command averred that "there is no evidence of pressure being exerted by officers" on enlisted men to lend a hand in the filming.

More Regarding Hardtop 'Boom'

Prognostication last week by Allied States Assn. of a hardtop construction spurt this year simply harks back to a pointed banner story in these columns some months ago, wherein the fourwall upbeat, notably as a suburban phenomenon, was documented as of then.

The point then, as now, was that the showmen were only following the business—the proliferation of peripheral shopping centers and housing developments. Most of the new hardtops (out of an estimated 500 or so in postwar rise) had unequivocably aligned with outlying retail drivein projects. This is especially true of the big keys, suffering the problem of deteriorated, congested and just plain declasse central biz districts.

It's the fact that the pendulum of construction over the past decade has swung from ozoners to hardtops that is arresting in the continuing cinema migration. As the Allied prognosis suggests, this probably has something to do with the psychology of permanency, among other factors.

Allied further notes that drivein increasingly face tighter zoning regulations than before, and that upped land prices generally have made the once-cheap pasture almost as expensive to set up as a conventional theatre. And there is, as the VARIETY story suggested, still a "passion pit" stigmata attached to the ozoner, albeit much lessened than at their advent.

As for the construction arithmetic, it's been figured that it costs $240 per-seat for a new hardtop, versus $69 for a drivein; but this doesn't account for current realestate prices which, as noted, have been on the rise and are still.

To extend the recapitulation, hardtops are further favored by year-around operation (respecting northern climes, where ozoners are hampered), sharper projection, and the advantage of matinee biz where feasible. Conversely, of course, the starlit cinemas are still much in favor for the very reasons that first spurted them—their informality, privacy and kiddie-playpen natures.

All G.I's Rubine Ever Met Up With Loved Playacting For Cameras

Irving Rubine, vicepresident of Carl Foreman's Highroad Productions, said in effect this week he finds it difficult to accept reports of dissension among United States soldiers because of their participation in scenes for Darryl F. Zanuck's "Longest Day," now shooting in Europe. Such reports have been a cause celebre in Pentagon circles.

Rubine had a hand in the logistics for Foreman's "Guns of Navarone" and "The Key." Troops from, respectively, Greece and England were employed in these prdouctions, Foreman paid the transportation (petrol) charges.

Rubine's experience, he said, was that the armed forces of the two countries actually were eager to engage in the picture work because it meant diversion—a change of pace. As a matter of fact when disciplinary action was called for in any given instance, the punishment meted out was denial of participation in the cinematic productions.

No Yanks were involved in the Foreman features, obviously. But, as Rubine figures it, similar inclinations obtain with soldiers from various lands.

Arkansas Victory For Telemeter

Telemeter-franchised Midwest Video Corp. won the second round in its fight to locate a home toll test in Little Rock when the Arkansas Circuit Court over the weekend refused to upset state public service commission approval of the cable paysee plan.

Exhibition interests opposed to the proposal, however, indicate their intent to appeal Saturday's (20) decision. Opposition to the project is spearheaded by Philip Harling's Joint Committee Against Pay TV.

The circuit court action predicated on the contention that the Midwest Video experiment was not in the public interest. Exhib plaintiffs also hoped for a precedental ruling that a cable toll system, like standard broadcast media, should come under Federal purview. Exhibs claimed that the public service commission went beyond its scope in ordering Southwestern Bell to furnish necessary facilities to Midwest Video.

In a handout Monday (22), Harling promised that appeals from the latest setback would be pressed, if need be, to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Bridge on the River Kwai," "Pepe" or "The Guns of Navarone," simply because they didn't feel they could get their due from the market because of the low admission prices.

Corkery is "cautiously bullish" about prospects in the Latin American market generally. He has great hopes for President Kennedy's Alliance for Progress program, and observes, parenthetically, that he cannot understand some industryites who persist in believing that politics and business are not inextricably bound up together. This was apropos of his conversation with one homeoffice exec who said he wasn't interested in hearing about the local political situation in a certain market, only in what business was up to.

Corkery noted that the same exec was certainly concerned when Cuba vanished as a market for U. S. films, or when the Venezuelan currency softened to the extent that U. S. profits all but disappeared. "Those were political situations," he said, "which were of vital concern to businessmen and the day-to-day conduct of business."

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Armand Cardea has been promoted to ad-pub-exploitation director of Paramount International, up from second in command. He succeeds Charles Juroe, who exited the company, and will headquarter in New York.

A vet in this job, incidentally, was Paul Ackerman, who left about a year ago. Ackerman is now exec director of CineSell International, which has been in process of formation the past year and which has established a worldwide network of film promotion specialists to service distributor.

This outfit, according to Ackerman, also is set up to engage in various phases of production, coproduction and distribution around the world. Alen Sands York is president.

A film classification bill has been introduced in the N.Y. State Legislature by Assemblyman Joseph J. Weiser, who also sponsored censorship legislation at the last session. It amends Section 122 of the Education Law, to permit the director of the motion picture division, State Education Department, or officers of local bureau, where authorized by the Board of Regents, to classify as "unsuitable for children" any film portraying drug addiction, sexual relationship (sic) or "other scenes contrary to the proper development of children."

"Some Like It Hot," the United Artists release directed by Billy Wilder, was dropped out of the All-Time Grossers compilation in the VARIETY Anniversary Edition. Film had been previously listed and credited with a figure, which was updated at end-1961 to $8,000,000 domestic rentals. But the line of type somehow got omitted in the processes of going to press on the big one.

India's Film Biz A 1961 Shambles

By N. V. ESWAR

Madras, Jan. 16.

In previous anniversary and international film editions of this periodical the agonies of filmmaking in India have been set forth in some detail. One factor has been stressed: the high, not to say usurious, cost of money to make films. Plainly a risk venture, the equivalent here of the commercial "factor" who advances money in the United States has often demanded conditions of repayment, bonus and discount which simply precluded breaking even, much less a profit.

The practical difficulties have continued despite the considerable impact of certain special releases upon the foreign markets, notably the "discovery" of American art film audiences of such films as the "Apu" triology.

Meantime, 1961 was the worst year that hit the Indian Film Industry.

There were a number of external reasons for the sorry plight. Vaults were littered with badly-started, fragmentary and half-finished pictures, the efforts of supine producers, stars and other personnel. For 40 years of its existence, India's film "industry" has refused to put itself on a sound manufacturing footing.

Literally, every one engaged in films pulls in the opposite direction from every one else, with an unnatural insistence on an individualism which amounts to loneliness.

The so-called "leaders" of the film trade once again failed in 1961 to grasp the lesson. They continued to wallow in the same old mess, weary pattern, as if unmindful of the many flops which have sunk them neck-deep. The only consolation, if you can call it that, is that production was only 50% of 1960. Otherwise, the drowning would have been complete.

However, films retain some tinsel-glamour to attract onion merchants and vegetable vendors who put up coin. Then there is the Film Finance Corp.started by the Indian Government which, with its recently increased capital, would whip up a feeble flame.

One omen on India's amusement horizon was the second International Film Festival towards the fag end of 1961. Sponsored by the Government and aided halfheartedly by the trade, it provided material only for a report to be placed of "activity" on a Bureaucratic file. It amounted to little more.

While the selection of films was anything but imaginative and steered away from anything like a true reflection of the progress of film-making in the countries which were represented, the screening of the selected pictures in regular theatres took off all the international or festive character from the entire operation.

MERLE SHORE

NOW SHOOTING, IN HOLLYWOOD, FOR U.A. RELEASE...

Asso. Theatres Eyes $17,500,000 Yr. With Buy of Rube Shor's 14 Houses

Cleveland, Jan. 23.

Expanding company of Associated Theatres, based in Cleveland, expects to hypo its annual gross business to the $17,500,000 mark this year through the recent acquisition of 14 deluxe houses and drive-ins in this territory.

Circuit headed by Myer S. Fine bought theaters from Ruben Shor's S&S Amusement Co. of Cincinnati, O., spreading its banner from Ohio and Michigan to Kentucky.

One of the biggest Cincinnati units purchased is Twin Drive-In, which has two screens and two auto lots with total capacity of 2,400 cars. Other Greater Cincinnati stands taken over from Shor group include Keith's, Esquire and Hyde Park Art Theatres, Western Hills and West Wood, Dixie-Auto Cruise-in, Forest and Woodlawn Drive-ins, Ramon and Valley Drive-ins; Hamilton, O., and Colonial and Paramount in Middletown, O. Another addition is in Danford, Ky.

Associated holdings in Greater Cleveland are 10 houses, the Shaker, Lake, Fairview, Granada, Homestead, Hilliard Square, Imperial, Beach Cliff, Broadview, Shaw Hayden and Avon. Chain operates drive-ins in Ashtabula, Alliance, Canton, North Madison and Youngstown, O., and recently acquired another in Adrian, Mich. It also operates conventional theaters in Akron, Medina and Galion, O., as well as Toledo's deluxe new nabe Colony.

During recent years Fine & Co. have been unloading older houses in declining city areas and investing in more modern theaters in hearts of suburban new shopping centers. By recognizing the phenomenal growth of suburbia, Associated has become one of the biggest local developers of outlying movie houses in this Mid-Eastern belt. Company's owners expect total grossers of expanded circuit will be increased by $6,000,000 this year.

The 14 Shor stands picked up in package are believed to have cost Associated about $3,500,000. Purchase indicates that motion picture picture biz is "not dying on the vine" and reflects a healthy new pattern of updated theater operations in the making, according to the booming Cleveland firm.

Marshall H. Fine is its operating veep now serving his second term of prez of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibs. Other officers include Abe Kramer, secretary, and Leroy D. Kendis, veep. Jerome M. Friedlander, of local law company of Benesch, Friedlander, Menselson and Coplan, is general counsel who handled negotiations for the big buy.

3 at $2.65 in Mpls.

Minneapolis, Jan. 23.

For only the second time in local film history there'll be, next month, three hard ticket features at $2.65 top simultaneously in the loop here. These will be "El Cid" (AA), "West Side Story" (UA) and the reissued "Search for Paradise" (Cinerama). The two first named, both opening next month, will be at Ted Mann's loop firstrun spots, one of which is devoted entirely to roadshows.

"Search," now at Cinerama's downtown Century here, where it went 38 weeks the first time around, is scheduled still to be around until mid-March, even though this is a second run and the scale is $2.65 top, the same as originally.

climbed above expectations. William Castle, producer of the gimmicked "Homicidal," scored so well on a limited p.a. booking abroad that his tour was extended to other keys on the Continent, said Rothman. "Homicidal," he added, is doubling the business of any previous Castle production.

Rothman said he's high on future prospects in view of the "flow of big product on a steady basis" but stresses that, despite the block booking that still obtains overseas, each picture must be individually marketed.

NOW AN OCEAN PORT

Toledo Generous With Film Passes To Allen Seamen

Toledo, O., Jan. 23.

Foreign sailors visiting the Port of Toledo aboard ocean-going vessels will remember this city for its free films, if for no other reason. The Toledo Seamen's Service Organization, which contacted 1,135 sailors from 206 foreign ships during the 1961 season, distributed passes to 721 seamen, good at any of eight local theatres, through the courtesy of the Toledo Theaters Assn.

A total of 408 men and six women from the vessels also made use of YMCA and YWCA facilities, respectively, including free taxi service from the various docks in port to the buildings, through the generosity of the Toledo Seamen's Service Organization. Principal sponsors of the latter are a bank, the Toledo Trust Co., and Willys Motors Inc.

'VIRIDIANA' ROW OVER; GERGELY HEADS SALES

The hassle over Luis Bunuel's 1961 Cannes prize winner, "Viridiana," has been settled by an agreement between the picture's coproducers—Citer, S.A. of Spain and Gustave Alatriste of Mexico—to appoint Francois Gergely to handle worldwide sales of the film. Gergely is a film agent based in Paris.

U.S. rights to "Viridiana" already have been sold to Kingsley International which plans to open the film shortly at the Paris Theatre, New York.

Trouble between the Spanish and Mexican coproducers arose when it became apparent that the film, because of its subject matter, would not be allowed release in Spain, on which Citer depended to get back its production investment. Subsequently, Citer started legal proceedings to prevent Alatriste from making sales in the rest of the world. Agreement on the appointment of Gergely is reported to indicate that coproducers have settled their differences.

Being the official Spanish entry at the Cannes fest last year, "Viridiana" caused something of a sensation when it was first screened, with its verdant comments on religion, chastity and misplaced charity. Picture shared the fest's top prize with the French "Une Aussi Longue Absense."

Crosby's Metro Score

after Life mag carried a spread on "How the West Was Won" from historical lore, Si Rady had just exited post with RCA Victor and joined Crosby Enterprises as tunery top. He proposed to Crosby that it make an album of same title using public domain songs of era. Crosby formed Project Records and did so.

Subsequently, Crosby pitched Metro on making film of title. Later, Cinerama got into the deal. Crosby earmarked his cut of pic's profit potential to St. John's Hospital, Santa Monica. However, in pact drawn with MGM it was stipulated pub rights to score, title and special tunes, and even soundtrack album go to Crosby Ent.

Rady acknowledged yesterday that he is open to deal whereby MGM Records can distribute the track album; even open to a deal whereby Robbins-Feist-Miller can handle some work on publishing score; but he stood pat on stand that the copyrights would remain with Crosby.

As Dimitri Tiomkin is scoring film and doing title tune to Ned Washington lyrics; as Sammy Cahn already has done on special song—and all three are ASCAP members—Rady said Crosby's Marfran Music Co. will publish. Should MGM-Cinerama bring in a BMI writer for some chore—Crosby's Tex Music Co. will publish.

In past years whenever MGM made a film with original music, invariably scores went into its subsid's catalog.

Loew's Theatres, agented by Berk & Krumgold, sold the Loew's Boston Post Road Theatre, Bronx, N. Y., to the Bolte Circuit, headed by Mrs. Edith Marshal.

Buyer plans extensive renovation of the 1,200-seat house.

Mansfield Home-Prints Columbia's Backlog Of 2,000 Short Films

Columbia's backlog of short subjects, numbering 2,000 in all, is going to home marketing via the 8m route. Company has entered an agreement with Mansfield Industries, manufacturer and distributor in the field, which will peddle the product through retailers for silent and sound home projection.

This represents an addition to an earlier Col-Mansfield tieup. This had it that Mansfield will soon market a new 8m sound projector to cost under $100 based on an adaptor developed by Col. Latter is to collect a royalty on every adaptor incorporated into a Mansfield projector.

The Col shorts product for 8m via Mansfield includes cartoons, live comedies, travel and sports reels. Other subjects will be added as they play out the theatrical outlets.

'Lovers' Beats Censor Rap In Portland, Ore. Case

Portland, Ore., Jan. 23.

"The Lovers," Zenith import from France much troubled by various U. S. censor bodies, has notched another victory in Portland, Ore., with dismissal of charges against the manager and projectionist of the Paramount Theatre. They had been arrested under the state anti-obscenity law for screening the film, but Circuit Court Judge Charles Redding ruled that pix do not come under the scope of the statute.

Earlier, in another case involving the same film, the conviction of the manager of Portland's Guild theatre under a city law enabling police censorship of pictures was upset by the state supreme court.

Zenith has also been battling to show the film in a Cleveland arty. And previously via the courts, it overcame the Chicago censors.

Debbie Talks To Columbia

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Debbie Reynolds is talking coproduction deal with Columbia Pictures for her Harmon Productions to make "The 13th Juror," Adela Rogers St. John Good Housekeeping yarn which actress bought two years ago for $5,000 and has just sold to Col for an undisclosed sum.

Star will topline cast if deal is consummated.

LIGHT UP LIGHTSTONE

Veepcy Goes To Embassy's Global Sales Head

Embassy Pictures' Leonard Lightstone, its global sales head, now a vicepresident. He joined Embassy last June after tenure as film buyer for the Rugoff circuit, N.Y., and before that with other Gotham chains.

He has functioned in an increasingly expanded orbit for Embassy, pulling off some key buyup deals in addition to the sales area. With the veep stripes, he's expected to operate even more broadly in production and property decision-making.

NO MURROW RE-VISIT NOW TO HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

He won't accept the invitation of prexies of four talent guilds and AFL Film Council to revist Hollywood for a further discussion of issues he raised, but Edward R. Murrow, director of United States Information Service, has informed Walter Mirisch, head of the Screen Producers Guild, he will "consult and keep in close contact" with the film industry following his return from a trip abroad.

Murrow's missive to Mirisch reads: "The interest you and your colleagues have expressed in finding ways to convey through motion pictures a more positive impression of America is most gratifying and I deeply appreciate the invitation to meet with you in considering what might be done.

"Unfortunately, my schedule will permit no additional commitments for the time being. I will be leaving in the next few days on for three to four weeks abroad. Congressional hearing on the Agencies' Program and Budget for the coming year will follow. I want, however, to consult and keep in close contact with the representatives of the motion picture industry. We face a common danger and the mobilization of resources to meet it requires all of us dealing with communications media to find a common purpose with each bearing a share of the responsibility of its achievement.

Izzo Purchasing Chief, Smith Shifts At Col

Fred Izzo, associated with Columbia Pictures since 1931, has been promoted to director of purchasing for the company, succeeding Herbert L. Smith, who has been transferred to the accessories department.

Col states that additional exec supervision is required in the wake of the takeover of accessories handling.

Though they already have a formidable reputation in legit circles in Britain and the U.S. as a result of the longrunning stage revue, "La Plume de Ma Tante," French director-star Robert Dhery and his co-star (and wife) Colette Brosset are hitting the international bigtime in pix with their new film, "La Belle Americaine."

Dhery reported in New York last week that the film, in which Walter Reade's Continental Distributing had a 25% production investment (and is handling this side), would perform the unusual (in today's market) trick of earning back its $350,000 negative cost in France alone. And steadily building business in its first three U.S. dates indicate the pic will be the most successful French film comedy to play the States since Jacques Tati's "M. Hulot's Holiday" and "Mon Oncle."

Like Tati, Dhery's humor seems to weather the trans-Atlantic voyage well, being built largely on visual gags that have an edge of satire to them, but perhaps more importantly, also have a sort of joyous and innocent gayety. Unlike Tati, however, who is understood to improvise a good deal during shooting, with the result that his shooting schedules equal those for such films as "Mutiny on The Bounty" and "Cleopatra," Dhery says he keeps improvisation-on-the-set to a minimum, having everything plotted in advance. "Americaine" came in just nine weeks.

The star-director, who also coauthored the screenplay, suggests that he did have a certain advantage in "Americaine" in that he had five years to work on the script. He originally signed to do the film in 1955, just before taking off for London and a three-month stand in "La Plume." The three-month stand went to a couple of years, followed by the long run in the States. "We had time to make certain improvements," he says.

Understandably, Dhery and Miss Brosset have tremendous admiration for Hollywood's early film comedians — Chester Conklin, Laurel and Hardy, the Marx Brothers. (Miss Brosset would like to be a female Harold Lloyd.) Dhery is somewhat more reserved about Chaplin, but only when Chaplin insists on putting "greater meanings" into his works. And Jack Benny absolutely fractures him.

Upcoming plans on Dhery's schedule include a new revue in Paris to star Luis de Funes, a standout in "Americaine" in a dual role, plus a new play by Marcel Achard. Latter is due to go on in September, but as yet the play's unwritten as well as untitled. The Comedie Francaise is also after him to direct a play, and David Merrick has been after him to put together another "La Plume."

Or, suggests Dhery, "we might just retire." Business on "Americaine" has been that good.

Entertainers And Politics

Mineral Wells, Tex.

Editor, VARIETY:

I would like to take issue with a couple of opinions expressed by Vanessa Redgrave (daughter of Michael Redgrave) in the Anni issue. She believes that people connected with show business should take a very active part in politics, presumably because they are celebrities and people would listen to them where they wouldn't listen to, say, a politician who usually knows more about the subject of politics than the entertainer does. Frankly I resent this attitude because it gives the entertainer more voice than the average citizen, like me.

Many show business celebrities have appeal that registers primarily with young and/or immature minds. These entertainers do themselves and their country a disservice when they persuade the voters to vote for "their" candidate rather than for the better man, as is sometimes the case. Heaven knows, many voters are uninformed enough when they vote without being led further astray by someone like the Sinatra Clan.

Of course, most entertainers have more dignity and finess than the Sinatra Clan—as entertainers and politicians. But Frank Sinatra, Tony Curtis, Peter Lawford, and Sammy Davis Jr. are excellent examples of how nauseating politics can get when some entertainers dabble in politics. I wonder how grateful Richard Nixon is for the additional votes he must have picked up as the result of the Sinatra's group campaigning for John F. Kennedy.

Personally, I have much more respect and admiration for Susan Hayward—as a person, artist and non-politics dabbler. She was quoted as saying that entertainers should stay out of politics.

I also disagree with Miss Redgrave on the "Bomb horror." I got the distinct impression that she wants the bomb discontinued, along with other armament, by our allies. This would in turn convince the peace-loving Communists that we are peace-minded nations, and they would also disarm. Miss Redgrave obviously does not understand Communism.

American Civil Liberties Lament For 1961: Case Of the Censoring Cops

In the area of motion picture censorship, latest annual report of the American Civil Liberties Union dwells at length on the setback to cinematic free speech occasioned by last year's U.S. Supreme Court decision (5 to 4) upholding police precensorship in Chicago. ACLU concedes its "unpleasant surprise" at the action, noting that it reversed "an apparent pattern of almost a decade" in which film censorship was forced to give ground steadily in the courts.

Report, however, balances the gloom by recounting the several bluenose retreats of the past year, chiefly in Pennsylvania and Georgia and the continuing legalistic efforts to compel exhibition of certain pix in various locales. Report notes that one of the most censor-hounded films is the French "Les Amants" (Zenith), with court tests in the pic's behalf underway in Dayton, Cleveland, and Portland, Ore. This is the film the Chicops had also barred, but which subsequently was greenlighted for Windy City exhibition.

Picture Grosses

'Aladdin' Hep 10G, Denver; 'Song' 8G

Denver, Jan. 23.

Dearth of new films and extremely severe winter weather will take a heavy toll currently at the b.o. "Wonders of Aladdin" is rated fine at Paramount on opener while "Young Sinners" looms good at Esquire, also on initial round.

Below-Zero Still Hits Mpls. 1st-Runs; 'Summer' Sock 7G; 'Song' Big 7G

Minneapolis, Jan. 23.

An example of what local theatres are up against during this sub-zero stretch is a 28-below zero reading on one occasion this week, the sharpest January drop, with a single exception, in weather bureau history here. This severest winter in years naturally is taking a heavy boxoffice toll.

Current lineup, for a change, includes several newcomers. They may be helped by the fact that this week there are two fewer Loop firstruns than usual from which to choose since both the Orpheum, housing a legiter, and the Academy are dark.

Top newcomer looks to be "Summer and Smoke." "Flower Drum Song" still is solid in fifth round at the Mann.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.75-$2.65)—Dark until Feb. 21 when "El Cid" (AA) opens. Last week, "King of Kings" (MG) (10th wk), oke $4,000.

Avalon (Frank) (800; $1)—"Not Tonight, Henry" (Indie) (4th wk). Okay $1,500. Last week, $2,000.

Century (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,100; $1.75-$2.65)—"Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (reissue) (2d wk). Healthy $7,500. Last week, $6,000 for six days.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25) — "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (5th wk). Fair $3,500 Last week, $4,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.25) — "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col). Good $8,000. Last week, "Twist Around Clock" (Col), same.

Mann (Mann) (1,000; $1.25-$1.50) —"Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Continues to deliver excellently. Nifty $7,000. Last week, $9,000.

St. Louis Park (Field) (1,000; $1.50)—"One, Two Three" (UA) (5th wk). Still a winner. Good $3,500. Last week, $5,000.

State (Par) (2,200; $1-$1.25) — "George Raft Story" (AA). Moderate $7,000. Last week, "Second Time Around" (20th) (3d wk), $5,000 in five days.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; $1.25)—"Bridge" (AA). Mild $3,000. Last week, "Carousel" (20th) (reissue) (2d wk), $2,000.

Uptown (Field) (1,000; $1.25)—"Devil's Eye" (Janus). Okay $3,000. Last week, "Purple Noon" (Times) (2d wk), $3,000.

World (Mann) (400; $1.25-$1.50) —"Summer and Smoke" (Par). Big $7,000. Last week, "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk), $4,000.

Garner, retiring chief barker, chairmanned a VC international regional meeting here Jan. 5. Leading in discussions of charity, fund raising and publicity programs were Eddie Emanuel, George Hoover, George Eby and Harry Kodinski.

'Roman' Socko 12G Tronto; 'Song' 13G

Toronto, Jan. 23.

Only newcomers are "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," off to a socko start, "Cinderella" which looks big and "The Happy Thieves" rated thin. Last-named is at Threehouse combo.

However, holdovers are setting the city's pace. "Blue Hawaii" is nice in second stanza while "Pocketful of Miracles" in fourth shapes great. "Flower Drum Song," in fifth, looms smash at Uptown. "Breakfast at Tiffany's" is rated wow in sixth frame at Hollywood.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton, Danforth, Humber (Rank) (2,318; 1,328; 1,203; $1-$1.50) — "Happy Thieves" (UA). Sad $17,000. Last week, "Singer Not Song" (20th), $20,000.

Imperial (FP) (3,206; $1-$1.50)—"Blue Hawaii" (Par) (2d wk). Nice $15,000. Last week, $20,500.

Loew's (Loew) (1,641; $1-$1.50)—"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (4th wk). Still great at $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

Tivoli (FP) (935; $1.50-$2.50)—"El Cid" (AA) (5th wk). Hefty $12,000. Last week, $12,500.

Towne (Taylor) (693; 90-$1.25)—"Cinderella" (Astral). Shapes big $4,500. Last week, "Call Me Genius" (IFD) (4th wk), $3,500.

University (FP) (1,382; $1-$1.50)—"Roman Spring" (WB). Swell $12,000. Last week, "King of Kings" (M-G) (12th wk), at $1.50-$2.75 scale, $14,000.

Uptown (Loew) (2,543; $1-$1.75) "Flower Drum Song" (U) (5th wk). Still lusty at $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

'Innocents' Fast $8,000, Cincy; 'Flat' Good 9G, 'Raft' Bangup $8,500

Cincinnati, Jan. 23.

Four brisk entries bid for a lift in Cincy film biz currently as burghers here shake off prolonged wintry blasts. "Bachelor Flat," rating good at Albee, shapes for a slight lead over the other bunched newcomers. However, "The Innocents" at Grand is making top showing with big take. "George Raft Story" at Keith's also is sharp. "Singer Not the Song" at Palace looms good.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; $1-$1.50)—"Bachelor Flat" (20th). Good $9,000 or close. Last week, "Roman Spring" (WB) (3d wk), $7,500.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,400; $1.25-$2.75)—"King of Kings" (M-G) (10th wk). Limp $4,000. Same last week.

Esquire Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)—"Purple Noon" (Times) (3d wk). Pleasing $1,300. Last week, $1,500.

Grand (RKO) (1,300; $1-$1.25)—"Innocents" (20th). Potent $8,000. Last week, "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (4th wk), at $1-$1.50 scale, $7,500.

Guild (Vance) (300; $1.25) — "Devil's Eye" (Indie) (2d wk). Strong $2,400 after $2,900 preem.

Hyde Park Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)—"Great War" (Indie). Fair $1,000. Last week, "Make Mine a Double" (Cont), $1,200.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)—"George Raft Story" (AA). Sharp $8,500 or near. Last week, "Babes In Toyland" (BV) (4th wk), $7,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; $1-$1.25)—"Singer Not Song" (20th). Good $8,000. House devoted Friday (19) night to special showing of "A Majority of One" (WB) at $2. Turnout was fair. Film opens here Feb. 21. Last week, "Second Time Around" (20th) (3d wk), $7,500.

Twin Drive-In (Shor) (600 cars; 90c) — West side only: "Errand Boy" (Par) and "So This Is Paris" (U) (subruns). So-so $2,500. Last week, "Twist Around Clock" (Col) and "X-15" (Col) (subruns), $3,000.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,275; $1.50-$2.50)—"El Cid" (AA) (5th wk). Firm $7,500 after $9,000 in fourth frame.

Chides Hysterics Over 'Runaway'

Film Industry Very Healthy, Argues Weinstein—Need Foreign Scenery for Boxoffice

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

"The motion picture industry is in a very healthy position and I don't see what all the crying is about despite the number of features American companies are making abroad," comments 20th-Fox producer Henry T. Weinstein.

"I don't believe there is such a thing as 'runaway' production," he avers. "Audiences today are demanding realism in locations instead of phony studio backdrops. This is one of the strong elements in films today."

Weinstein pointed out the fact locations for "Tender Is the Night" were made in Switzerland and on the Riviera will add $2,000,000 to the gross of the Jennifer Jones-Jason Robards co-starrer.

"The scenery in the picture is fantastic and couldn't be duplicated in any studio." He added the cost for sending principals and shooting abroad was done for less than the price of the story.

"I don't agree with the kind of terrible wailing that's going on about 'runaway' production as if it was a plague.

"What you have to figure is the total outlay for foreign production as against the annual budget for films being made here. That is the way you estimate the health of the industry: it depends on monies being spent here on salaries and materials as compared to budgets for films made elsewhere."

Weinstein took up the official salaries and wage earnings reported by the California Dept. of Employment, Research & Statistics.

"By these figures you have proof the industry is in prime financial condition. Particularly when $283,515,455 was paid out in production wages in 1960. When this shows a hike of $75,426,325 from what employes received in 1951, it's a sign things are good for the film worker in Hollywood.

"Also," he went on, "take a company like 20th-Fox which was bankrupt or on the verge several years ago and today is worth a quarter of a billion dollars. That speaks for itself."

There's a lot of hysteria, but why?, he wants to know.

"We mustn't forget this is an international business we're in. The international emphasis is growing every year. The sooner we realize this the better for all of us.

"Further," he reasons, "with the jet age in favor of production today movies can take you to and from Brooklyn or Squeedunk or wherever you are to all ports of the world on the screen for the price of a dollar or two admission. This is an important factor to consider."

Change in production requirements, producing pix where the action takes place is a necessity, something you just don't pass off with scenery on backdrops, something audiences want more and more in their entertainment fodder, according to producer Weinstein.

Norbert Auerbach As UA's Sales Mgr. in Paris

Norbert T. Auerbach has been appointed United Artists continental sales manager with headquarters in Paris, succeeding Nick Pery.

Auerbach has held various sales positions in the continental division of Columbia International, and was managing director for Europe and the Middle East for three years before resigning in late 1960 to go into independent production. (Auerbach's indie-made pic, "The Girl With The Emerald Eyes," will be released in the States this year by Kingsley International.)

Pery, who joined UA last August, was formerly veep and continental manager for Columbia International. Auerbach will be working under Eric Pleskow, UA's continental manager.

Gerlach Sells Motel

Gerlach will continue to operate apartment house he built here two years ago.

'The Hollywood Museum' Is Shortened Billing; Lesser Reports Reasons

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Sol Lesser recently told the Hollywood Press Club the name of the Hollywood Motion Picture and Television Museum has been shortened to "The Hollywood Museum" to avoid overlooking any part of the entertainment industry. He also revealed an additional $1,000,000 has been budgeted to the $4,000,000 original building cost to cover construction of a tower adjunct, with groundbreaking to be in June.

Lesser said the museum may develop a 'third industry" in Hollywood by providing an outlet to make educational film anent the technical skills of the entertainment industry which could be used in all educational areas. He said such a project has not before been thoroughly explored in Hollywood and would be a good area for the museum to operate actively.

Executive noted there are now 32 acting committees from archives to acquisitions working on the museum project. Among latest developments, he said they have secured release of unused portions of films from studios which will be cut into small pieces and sold for $1.00 a piece as souvenirs.

Lesser said he expects to have 40-50,000 founder members of the museum, graded from $1,000 memberships down.

20th-Fox Shares

big negative cost to pay off between anybody makes any money on it.

As important as the money which the four aforementioned "hits" are bringing in at the moment, is the money they'll continue to bring in in the quarters ahead, beefing up the backlog of product in continual playoff. One of the things that really put the whammy on 20th last year was the fact that the unbroken string of flops December-to-April left the company with almost no backlog of money-makers for the rest of the year.

Apparently some Wall Streeters are just as enthusiastic about prospects of future product as the most garrulous of 20th drumbeaters. That list includes two William Holden starrers, "Satan Never Sleeps" and "The Lion," the new "State Fair," Darryl F. Zanuck's all-star "The Longest Day," and, of course, "Cleopatra," which certainly appears to be the big gamble of alltime. Conceivably this one film, which may well go over an $18,000,000 budget to become the most expensive film in the history of the industry, could wreck 20th once and for all.

Whether or not anybody on Wall Street takes "Cleo" producer Walter Wanger seriously when he predicts a $100,000,000 gross potential for the film, the wide-ranging publicity on the pic doesn't seem to be hurting the parent company. One 20th exec even went so far as to state, quite seriously, that every time the face and form of star Elizabeth Taylor appears in the press, the stock goes up. He argues that traders on the Big Board are just as hot blooded as you and I—maybe even more so.

Perhaps a more significant, if not quite so romantic, reason for the new upbeat is that 20th management, largely at the insistence of "new" Wall Street board members Milton S. Gould and John L. Loeb, has instituted far-reaching economies throughout the company, cutting overhead considerably, and has clarified a production policy which previously was swinging between fewer-but-bigger pix and more-and-more-modest pix, with alarming irregularity.

Right now that policy is fewer-but-bigger, and the chances are that there will be no return to the kind of indiscriminate production which in 1960-61 resulted in such throwaways as "Madison Avenue," "The Right Approach," "The Fiercest Heart," among others.

VINCENT LOPEZ LIFE ON 20TH-FOX LIST

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Vincent Lopez gets biopic treatment by producers Thom Fox and Sheldon Graff for 20th-Fox release, with Barney Sarecky adapting screenplay from bandleader's "Lopez Speaking." Filming is skedded for November.

Expected that such personalities as Jimmy Durante, Gloria Swanson, Eddie Cantor, Rudy Vallee and others will be sought to play selves in cameo roles. Lensing will be done both in Hollywood and N. Y.

Lopez continues, in his umpteenth year, at Hotel Taft, Manhattan.

approvals on at least a handful of yarns. Production head is anxious to manifest a one big pic a month pace minimum once he gets the ball rolling smoothly again. This would enable the sales department to approach the future with a regularity of key releases supplemented by outside commitments of one or two monthly additions.

"Something" is star's finale on the Westwood lot under an old pact for $100,000, a steal at star's bid and ask prices today. As a result, 20th has been bending backwards to satisfy Miss Monroe. Particularly in view of her last film, "Let's Make Love." Star was ill during pic, her absence and delays in finishing production with Yves Montand hiking the final cost more than $500,000.

Studio, too, at one time had "Where's Charlie" all set for MM with Cukor to direct. In this instance, director got wrapped up at MGM with "Lady L," later canceled by Culver City plant after $2,000,000 was dumped into preparations. Delay in Cukor's reporting resulted in 20th filing a $7,000,000 suit against Cukor, settled when he agreed to direct "Chapman Story," which producer Richard Zanuck moved to Warner Bros. lot after 20th's board voted thumbs down on project.

Weinstein, oddly enough, had "Watcher in the Shadows," in his lineup but couldn't get the go signal from Levathes. Hence he was finally set 10 days ago to do "The Visit" starring Ingrid Bergman, with a September start.

Khiringhelli before he, the tenor, left to sing "Girl Of The Golden West" in Japan. To quote: "But the La Scala contract was not in Tokyo at my arrival and not in the following mails. Instead, each day arrived interesting propositions from other parts of the world and just in the time period reserved for La Scala. There was an offer for five orchestra concerts, one from Eurovision, and four recitals in Germany. Naturally I accepted. Opera houses surely know that singers of international reputation are not engaged by talk but by commitment. When La Scala's letter finally arrived, I had disposed of all my free time for next season and the one after next."

At this point Mme. Del Monaco commented, "After all the coldness we have suffered in three months at the Met, to suffer more cold at La Scala is not necessary."

The Del Monacos keep an apartment in Rome and a house in Lausanne, Switzerland. Just returned from Japan, he will return there next season to sing "Otello" and also go to Russia. He will sing this season at Covent Garden, Palermo and San Francisco.

Swaffer Was Good, and He Knew It

Certainly he was the most disputatious reviewer of his day, and many managements barred him from their theatres. He abandoned theatre reporting—his phrase—in 1931 for political journalism because he saw outside the theatre a much more moving drama, more bitter tragedy and more living comedy than anything that was acted on the stage.

Some years ago he told this byliner that another reason for quitting the theatre was that his arrival at an opening night caused a bigger stir than the rising of the curtain. "People were discussing me instead of the play. I was the centre of all eyes and I hated it," he commented—not very believably.

An ardent Socialist and an impassioned orator for the cause, Swaffer was equally at home addressing a rally of thousands or an audience of one. We in the London office of VARIETY had unique experience of this, and every new recruit to the staff was a fresh target for his anecdotes. He never tired of telling his favorite yarns to fresh audience, such as how he was responsible for making Herbert Morrison the Home Secretary in Churchill's wartime coalition; how he pioneered picture journalism; and the role he played in the Socialist victory in the 1945 polls.

Although his formal connection with show business ended when he gave up dramatic criticism in 1931, Swaffer loved to write about show people. His Sunday column in the People was crammed with anecdotes about star entertainers. And, in the lush postwar years, when the London Palladium was the bigtime centre of the vaudeville world, featuring international headliners in every bill, Swaff was a regular first-nighter, always to be seen standing in the back of the orchestra stalls.

His wife (who died about six years ago) never accompanied him at an opening, or at any other function. "She can always buy her own seat if she wants to go," he used to say.

Liked It Backstage

In those Palladium days, Swaff—as he was always called—was always to be seen backstage at the end of the show in the Number One dressing room, and during those years he established many close international friendships. His firmest favorites were Danny Kaye and Sophie Tucker, but he had the happy knack of cultivating them all whether they were high on the stellar roster or not. He always enjoyed describing the incident when he took Harpo Marx to the House of Commons, and in the lobby introduced the comic to Winston Churchill. Harpo, overwhelmed by the sense of accasion, asked the statesman for his autograph. "On the contrary," said Churchill, "I should be asking for yours."

For many years preceding his death, show business and the journalistic profession found good reason for feting Swaff. On his 50th anniversary in Fleet Street, he was honored by the Variety Club; a few years later he was involved in a social whirl for his 75th birthday celebrations, and the last big public occasions was a dinner in his honor just over two years ago to mark his 80th birthday. That was hosted by Odhams Press and was attended by statesmen, politicians, editors, showbiz personalities and personal friends from Fleet Street. On that occasion he had intended to make the speech of a lifetime running for more than two hours, but sat down, apparently exhausted, after 45 minutes.

A few weeks later he was compelled to leave his Trafalgar Square apartment, as the whole block was being pulled down for redevelopment. He never wanted to leave his beloved square, and confessed "I hope they have to take me out in a coffin."

Inevitably, everyone who knew Swaff intimately had his favorite yarn. The most typical, so far as this reporter is concerned, refers to a comparatively recent discussion between him and one of his editors. In his later years, Swaff became hard of hearing, and during this discussion, the editor was asked to repeat almost everything he said. Finally, almost in exasperation, he pleaded: "Swaff, why don't you try a hearing aid?" Swaffer was outraged. "A hearing aid? Me? You know I don't like to look ostentatious."

That was the sort of remark that came naturally from a man whose black hat, white flowing hair, stock, and ash-covered suit was known throughout the country, and whose proud boast it was that he was the only person who could be caricatured without portraying his face.

Swaffer was proud to be known as the Pope of Fleet Street, a title he is suspected of inventing. It will be a long time, if ever, before there are smoke-signals to herald Pope Hannen the 2nd.

At the memorial service to be held at St. Martin's in the Fields tomorrow (Wed.), Sir Ralph Richardson will read the lesson, and Lord Morrison (formerly Home Secretary Herbert Morrison, and now president of the British Board of Film Censors) will deliver a tribute.

Despite the increase in appropriations sought, USIA projected a decrease in the actual amount of foreign currency purchased under the program. Moreover, only $800,000 is earmarked for guaranty of commercial films, the same as contemplated during the present fiscal year's curtailed program. Spelling out the deemphasis on commercial entertainment matter, the budget message had this to say:

"In 1962 (fiscal), the more restrictive criteria for the materials to be covered by this program were adopted. Stress is placed on educational, scientific and technical materials."

26 FRENCH FILM SHOWMEN CAN'T BE WRONG

In all the arts, starting with their haut cuisine and haut couture, the French have a recognizable, exportable flair. It is probably accurate to declare that in their films, as in their gloves and perfumes, the greatness and the uniqueness lies in their quality of "Frenchness". Meanwhile, since the Liberation, there has been a remarkable renaissance of the French feature film which is now regularly exhibited in more countries than ever before.

Significantly, the leading producer-distributor organizations of France address the American and other world markets through the nationally and internationally circulated trade-paper par excellance.

Booming Spanish Film Production: 62 Native Plus 17 Collaborations

Madrid, Jan. 23.

Spanish film production soared in 1961 to a record breaking total of 91 features, 62 of which were national product and 17 made in coproduction. Previous production mark was registered in 1956 and 1958 when tally reached 75. In 1960, 73 films were completed and classified for state subsidy aid.

Most extensive production program in 1961 is credited to producer Cesar Gonzalez who heads the list with five pix and who also chalked up his 100th production in the course of 20 years as Spain's most prolific producer. Runner up is Cooperativa Cinemagrafica Union with 4 pix. Six companies turning out 3 each last year are As Produccion, Este Films, Hispamer, Buhigas, Balcazar and I.F.I. of Barcelona.

While coproductions in 1961 showed an increase over the previous year, it was still well below the record set in 1956 with 23 coproductions. Worthy of note and marking a trend that is expected to show continued expansion, was the fact that Spain coproduced 6 of its total 17 co-ventures last year with Argentina. While this alliance was already underway before both governments affixed final signatures to a coproduction pact last year, the new agreement substantially spurred co-partnered projects between the two countries and there is every reason to believe the number will increase this year.

Though film production increased, the percentage of films made in color last year dropped sharply. Whereas 28 color films out of a total yearly output of 73 were recorded in 1960, last year there were only 39 out of the all-time high of 91.

Also worthy of note is the continued rise in film production costs. The average film budget, pegged in 1956 at 3,200,000 pesetas, was 66% higher last year. The average cost is now around 5,200,000 pesetas which is still under $100,000. Conclusions drawn in film circles is that film budgets will continue to be corseted to sindicato credit and state subsidies to minimize film making risks.

Addition of 17 new producers to industry rosters last year partially explains the sharp increase in film production during 1961.

of course, contained numerous skits razzing Mrs. Montgomery as a capital political writer of considerable influence and glamour.

Yoks were the loudest during a skit wherein Mrs. Montgomery interviewed John Q. Taxpayer, who complained, in song:

"My money lies over the ocean; my money lies over the sea.

And I've got a good clear notion it c'n't gonna co[illegible] to me."

Harry Hirschfield, in good form, had a running collection of jokes. He claimed original authorship of the gag describing The Twist: "An asset to music."

Walter Kiernan, as usual, did the "this is your life" monologue on the guest of honor, reminding the crowd of former President Truman's description of Mrs. Montgomery after she told more about him than he wanted to see in print: "Little Miss Cyanide."

Local club prexy, Robbie Robinson, the ringmaster for a decade here, was in charge.

Wheelwright, in New York the past week, unveiled elaborate plans so far as the functioning of his unit is concerned. He said the independent company will draw up full campaigns for each forthcoming production for use by the outfit's own ad-pub reps at various global points and/or the indie distributors with whom Bronston is doing business.

He added further that the promotional material will be tailored in terms of suitability for each local territory.

Wheelwrights scripts included MGM's "Blossoms in the Dust."

Galbreath, Industrial Producer, Unveiling First Theatrical

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 23.

Richard Galbreath, maker of industrial films, will hold the preemiere of his first theatrical feature film, "Night of Evil," on Jan. 27-28 in the Embassy Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind. The film was made in that city during the summer of 1960.

Lisa Gaye and William Campbell have leads in the film, which is based on the life story of Dixie Ann Dikes, Miss Colorado of 1958, who landed in jail for attempted robbery.

Galbreath says that, if he can get the right script without running into too much expense, he would like to shoot another feature movie shortly. His past experience includes serving as a radio station musician and arranger, portrait photographer, fashion photographer, commercial film producer.

Roadshow-Plus-Grind Simultaneous Showings For French 'Black Tights'

Magna Pictures, in an unusual move in terms of U.S. playoff pattern, expects to open its offbeat Paris-made "Black Tights" simultaneously in roadshow and grind engagements.

Schizoid policy was adopted out of necessity rather than choice. Company would prefer a uniform hardticket launching, but, as in New York, is faced with an unavailability of roadshow situations in possibly several keys. As it looks now, for instance, Broadway won't have a roadshow theatre available for the film's Gotham bow expected in late February. Hence, it will play popscale, continuous in N.Y., and in CinemaScope, whereas roadshow dates will use 70m prints. As of the moment, only other booking firmed is a hardticket run at the Four Star, Los Angeles, in March.

Color pic was produced by the late Joe Kaufman, with Terence Young directing. It depicts in dance and music four approaches to love, and costars Maurice Chevalier (billed as "host"), Cyd Charisse, Moira Shearer and Jeanmaire.

Another angle, possibly also innovational, is that projectionists will work from music cue sheets to vary music levels for contrast and emphasis.

Check for the amount was turned over to the American Congress of Exhibitors last week by National Allied prexy Marshall Fine.

Ohio Segregation Battle

Columbus, O., Jan. 23.

Ohio's new "public accommodations" law, which bans discrimination because of race, religion, or creed in places of public accommodation, including theatres, is getting its first test. Lewis E. Gegner, a Yellow Springs barber, has been charged with discrimination for refusing to cut the hair of Negro Paul N. Graham.

This is no new experience for Gegner, who was the first barber ever convicted in Ohio for discrimination when tried under a Yellow Springs anti-discrimination ordinance in September, 1960. In that case, a jury found him guilty but because of a lack of injunctory powers in the ordinance, Gegner was free to continue his usual operations. He was fined $11.

If found guilty, Gegner could be ordered to "cease and desist" from discrimination. He could seek a retrial or a court hearing. If his guilt is upheld and he then refuses to serve Negroes, he could be held in contempt of court.

Tuesday For Opera Films in Milwaukee

Milwaukee, Jan. 23.

Oriental Theatre, commencing today (Tues.) and continuing for six consecutive Tuesdays, is showing filmed versions of operas in "Fine Arts Film Festival," on a hardticket basis. Film Festival series tickets are sold at $7.50 each, tax included. The price covers the entire concert series.

"Madame Butterfly" opens. Others are "La Gioconda," "Don Giovanni," "La Forza Del Destino," "Two Loves Had I" and "Belles and Ballets."

Arthur Watkins

others have tended to take on the character of an international film fair. "I see no reason why there should not be scope for even greater individuality," said Watkins. "Why, for instance, a particular Festival should not specialize in, say, comedy films or in pictures of social significance." There is no good reason, thinks Watkins, why, for example a well-made Norman Wisdom farce shouldn't find a Festival showcase.

"Another problem facing Festivals," he continued, "is the task of selecting International Juries. Half a dozen times a year I am asked to try and find qualified jurors, but suitability and availability are not always coincident. Juries must be international in character and composed of representatives of all sides of the film industry."

Watkins believes that there is no doubt that a Festival win can help a film, particularly if it is a reasonably commercial subject. "There's no doubt that Festivals are of value. But producers must have confidence in them," he stressed. "There must be no suspicion of politics or lobbying for that would destroy the entire fabric of the Film Festival."

Common Market?

What will happen to the British film industry if, and when, Britain enters the Common Market?

"Certainly, the position wants watching very carefully," says Watkins. "The unions seem to think that the Common Market could affect protective legislation. They fear that such a move could rob the industry of the Quota Act, State aid from the National Film Finance Corporation and also that life blood of the business, the Eady money. Well, the producers realize that it is a significant factor. They realize that there is a possibility of any, or all, of these disappearing. But they insist that such an event is not automatic."

Finally, what is the position regarding co-production with the French, Italians and Germans? Said Watkins: "Our talks with the French have been conducted over quite a long time. We chose France, by the way, for these preliminary talks because conditions of work in that country are most similar to those in Britain."

The Unions are naturally anxious for an assurance that there would not be less employment or worse conditions in the event of any coproduction get-together. "Our producers sympathize with the Unions' concern for their safeguards. The principal objects of such coproduction are to fight the twin curses of the industry, falling attendances and increasing costs — and also to make possible through shared investments those larger scale pictures which are in demand." Watkins is sure that Anglo-European co-production would have that effect. "Over a given period," he continued, "the personnel used from the two countries concerned would have to balance out, so that there would be no question of decreased employment among technicians."

Watkins and the members of the BFPA clearly look forward to working closely and increasingly with various European countries, but he stressed that one urgent thing must be borne in mind if the proposed alliances are to work out to mutual benefit. He says: "Subjects must be chosen that are not hybrids. They must be stories that are completely acceptable to the audiences of both countries. Which, after all, is what the word 'international' surely stands for, isn't it?"

Film Reviews

Only Two Can Play

film version, but the result is a lively, middle-class variation along the lines of "The Seven Year Itch." With Peter Sellers in nimble form, a Bryan Forbes' romp of a screenplay and the Launder-Gilliat touch in direction and production, exhibs should have little difficulty in finding cash-paying patrons for this racy piece.

Some of the humor is over-earthy and slightly lavatory, and the film never fully decides whether it is supposed to be light comedy, farce or satire. But it remains a cheerful piece of nonsense with some saucy dialog and situations capably exploited by Sellers and his colleagues. He is a member of the staff of a Welsh public library. A white collar job. He is fed up and frustrated with the eternal prospect of living in a shabby apartment with a dispirited wife, two awful kids, peeling wallpaper, erratic plumbing and a dragon of a landlady.

Into his drab life floats the bored, sexy young wife of a local bigwig and she makes a play for Sellers. The fact that she can influence her spouse to get Sellers promotion is hardly in Sellers' mind. But what is in his mind never gets a chance of jelling. Their attempts at mutual-seduction are thwarted by babysitting problem, sudden return of the husband, intrusion of a herd of inquisitive cows when attempting a nocturnal roll.

Eventually, she lands him the job, he comes to his senses and, deciding that the joys of extra-matrimonial nibbles are outweighed by the problems, turns in the job and returns to his wife, who has, herself, been indulging in a spot of come-hither with a local crackpot poet.

Bryan Forbes' screenplay has been upped with some neat dialog and some excellent situations. For instance, Sellers and his wife uncomfortably attending a smart party thrown by the sexpot hostess; and Sellers attempting to get out of her house unobserved when it is invaded by husband and friends. But it is the sidelights of characterization that provide the neatest chuckles, and Sidney Gilliat's direction makes the briskest play with these.

Sellers adds another wily characterization to his gallery. His problems as frustrated lover carry greater weight because, from the beginning, he does not exaggerate or distort the role of the humble little librarian with aspirations. Mai Zetterling and Virginia Maskell provide effective contrasts as the two women in his life. Miss Zetterling produces a piquant line in comedy sex appeal, though only in one scene is she allowed to frisk down to basics. Miss Maskell plays the wife with the slightly faded despair, but shows spirit in the closing sequences.

As a guest star, Richard Attenborough turns up sharply as a smalltime poet, Kenneth Griffiths is the worried, seedy Welch clerk to the manner born, and Maudie Edwards is a strident, credible landlady.

The decor and locations have been selected with the utmost care, John Wilcox's lensing is okay and there is an unobtrusive score by Richard Rodney Bennett. There is more subtlety is Amis' novel than is allowed to appear in this film, but hidden between the jokes, some obvious, some less so, there is a vein of truth that will not escape any married man or woman.

Un Coeur Gros Comme Ca!
(A Heart as Big as That!)
(FRENCH)

Paris, Jan. 16.

Films De La Pleiade release of Pierre Braunberger production. Written, directed and lensed by Francois Reichenbach. Editor, Knoute Peletier. Preemed in Paris. Running time, 90 MINS.

Again a young filmmaker uses his camera to prod into life and catch it on the run as well as add to it by staged scenes. There are some moments of revelation, but this tale of a young African Negro boxer is more a documentary-type feature pic than an entertaining tale. It looms mainly for specialized chances.

The images are backed by the boxer's thoughts and sometimes blend to give insight and feeling to his life and needs. It shows him coming into Paris counselled by fellow passengers. His taking a little room in a worker's district, and then his wanderings and discovery of Paris and his first fight form the basis of this yarn.

Camera work is good and there are many scenes that point up the humming life. His meeting with a girl, a woman telling his fortune, and his training and talk with a blind boxer are all firstrate. But there are also many passages that seem like stuffing, such as episodes around Paris and a sudden montage of fight knockdowns from newsreels.

This gives insight into a Negro boxer's needs and attitudes, and the fact that this vocation gives him a standing in a white world. The final fight is well done. In short, another of the French essay-like films that use film to capture truth, but is an offbeater needing special handling.

Chikita
(SWISS)

Zurich, Jan. 16.

Beretta-Film Zurich release of Turmus-Film Zurich (Rene Groebli) production. Directed by Karl Suter. Screenplay, Suter and Hans Gmuer; camera, H. P. Roth; music, Hans Moeckel. Stars Hanne Wieder; features Cecar Keiser, Gustav Knuth, Charles Regnier, Paul Buehlmann, Max Haufler, Ines Torelli, Franz Muxender, Margrit Laeubli. At Urban Theatre, Zurich. Running time, 100 MINS.

(In German-Swiss dialect)

Satirical cabaret, one of the more popular forms of entertainment in the German-speaking part of Switzerland, sets the pace in this new Swiss film comedy, one of the most enjoyable local entries in some time. Its makers and players all have a cabaret background to which this film owes some of its best moments. Whether it is strong enough for the foreign market appears questionable, however, because much of its locally-slanted humor must unavoidably suffer from dubbing or subtitling.

The tongue-in-cheek story concerns an expatriate Swiss girl who owns a certain "house" somewhere in South America. Following a revolution, she comes back to her native town in Switzerland where her past soon becomes known. But instead of getting a cold shoulder from the town's "respectable" citizens, she is discreetly cajoled into opening a "circle for cultural contacts" where tired businessmen may find peace, comfort and the rest. After a clash with the authorities, involving a teenage jazz cellar, she returns, with a new Swiss husband, to South America where, meanwhile, a counter-revolution has put her back in business.

Fastpaced direction by Karl Suter, skillful lensing by H. P. Roth (including a hilarious parody of silent movies) and a uniformly excellent cast are its best assets. There is an abundance of visual and other gags as well as an often sharply witty dialog. German stage and screen thesp Hanne Wieder as the notorious Chikita is delightful. Many of the other players, notably Cesar Keiser, Gustav Knuth and Max Haufler, offer brilliant cameos.

director could actually show him a completed script.

Negulesco's future agenda includes three possibilities. "The Treason House of Martin Hughes," based on a novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim; "Sand Against The Wind," and an original about a girls' reformatory. Which ever he does first will probably be shot in Europe. It will also be another "family affair," with his wife having an active part in the production.

In addition to supervising the wardrobe for "Jessica," Mrs. Negulesco also researched the choreography for the picture and wrote the lyrics for four songs sung by Chevalier in the film. He has hopes that one or two of the songs will catch on, and "then perhaps she will keep me. Every good Roumanian hopes for that some day."

Arizonans Back W. B. Hunter's Producers International Pictures

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

New distribution-production company tabbed Producers International Pictures Inc., has been set up with William B. Hunter acting as exec veepee and backed by a group of Arizona bizmen. Unit has already acquired four features and one full-length animated feature, all produced in Europe, for 1962 release, and likewise is prepping production of four pix to be made here.

Upcoming releases include "The Centurians," wth John Drew Barrymore, Mitchell Gordon, Jacques Sernas, Genevieve Grad and Anna Maria Canale; "The Huns," with Sernas, Chelo Alonso and Folco Lulli; "The Triumph of Maciste," Kirk Morris, Cathy Caro; "The Gladiators;" and animated "The Reluctant Dragon."

Titles of upcoming productions now planned include "Nobody Cares for Me," "Jump to Glory," "Where the Girls Are," "Maniac."

Hunter previously was general sales manager of Barjul International Pictures, which he ankled in 1959 to become prexy of Sterling World Distributors, which handled, among other pix, "Justice and Caryl Chessman."

'PREJUDICE' IS THE KEY

Government Wants Out In UA Suits Sans Rap

Federal Judge David N. Edelstein Friday (19) in New York reserved decision on the Government's motion to dismiss the two-year-old antitrust action against United Artists and United Artists Associated, which sought to stop acquisition by UA of features from Warners and RKO for tv distribution.

The Government argued for its motion to dismiss without prejudice. UA asked for dismissal with prejudice, which would block the Government from ever reinstating the suit.

The judge asked for briefs next Friday (26).

ance, has been the means of industry survival.

The industry, he went on, apologizes for its popularity abroad in reply to charges about distortion of the American image. "And yet don't our pictures taken as a whole reflect the broad range, diversity and sweep of America?"

On the other hand, he argued, a distortion of America would result if foreign audiences were given only propaganda films.

Now's the time to call a halt to the apologizing, whether for the aforementioned alleged sins, or the changing role of the film theatre in the American community, or the handful of fast-buck producers who deal in smut, or whatever, Johnston insisted.

The industry, he contended, should be proud of its films with greater intellectual appeal and of its efforts to attain greater creative heights. He added the trade should take pride in its achievement of world industry status and the diversity of its product.

Johnston rammed home another point, this concerning the public's "obligation" to the motion picture. He said the call is out for the classification of pictures whereas, he added in effect, parents themselves should be the monitors of their children's filmgoing. This responsibility rests with the adults and if it's information they require it's readily available in the press and via the reviewing agencies. Those segments of the public asking someone else to decide which pictures their children should see are trying to duck their own responsibilities, said the MPAA prez.

US-USSR Joint Film

with Cowan and Wilson is Walter Reade's Continental Distributing Corp., which will put up the U.S. side of the financing. How much that will come to, Cowan said he could not estimate as yet.

Wilson will do his own screenplay, which is to be directed by a Russian director yet to be chosen. Plans are to use two top U.S. stars and two top Russ stars. Cowan says that at least one "big" American star already has shown interest and suggested that since the star's price is such that he (Cowan) and Reade might make a deal with a major U.S. distributor who might get the pic for Western world distribution (outside the U.S.) in return for supplying the "name" star. But this, Cowan emphasized, is just one of the many details which still have to be worked out.

"Meeting," most of which will be photographed in the Soviet Union with some U.S. locations, concerns the rivalry, personal and professional, between an American scientist and a Soviet scientist. Author says it plays no propaganda tune, being solely concerned with people, not political systems. "Meeting" was Wilson's first novel to feature a Russ background, but two of his previous novels, both of which had scientists as their chief protagonists, were big sellers in the Soviet Union. In fact, Wilson, whom one Soviet expert called the "literary Van Cliburn," has pulled the remarkable stunt of getting royalties out of Russia, to the envy of the Authors' League of America which had Adlai Stevenson speak for it, to no results, in Moscow.

Why his huge popularity in the Soviet Union? Wilson suggests it may be because in Russia scientists are glamor boys with all facets of their lives being of vital interest to the general public. He also suggests that they like his works because his heroes are people "who care intensely about the world—I believe the phrase is that they are 'committed heroes'—trying desperately hard to accomplish something positive."

Picture will not be shot in separate English and Russian language versions, but, in so far as possible, with the characters speaking what they ordinarily would speak under real life circumstances. Wilson and Cowan do not want to use subtitles or dub, and say simply that there are a "variety of devices for getting around the language barrier."

Mosfilm of Moscow will be the Russ partner in the deal.

Ace Films Possibly Nearing Reality; Policy Disputes Engaging Leaders

Despite the delays getting Ace Films off the ground, the expectation still is that the new exhib-backed production entity will shortly be in business. It's understood at least three prospects are being weighed for the top job, and that a selection is imminent.

Sidney Markley of AB-PT is believed a possible chief. This would be with the circuit's blessing.

While there has been some uncertainty about the "right man" for the post, another reason for the leisurely pace in getting the show on the road is believed to be a division of opinion on distribution and production policies to guide the outfit. The differences aren't being spelled out, of course, but they reportedly have to do with—among other things—whether Ace should go into picture-by-picture distribution deals, or align at the outset with an established releasing company. Type of product, including general budgetary considerations, has been another problem.

Last week's exec committee meeting of the American Congress of Exhibitors disclosed that the project apparently has inched forward a bit more. Lawyers for the C. of E. have drawn up a stock prospectus for the Securities & Exchange Commission, but this must bear the names of Ace Films officers before it can be submitted.

In other actions, the meeting voted another term for chairman Emanuel Frisch, to serve through '62, and, by resolution, urged exhibs to back the current 13-week 20th-Fox sales drive salute to prexy Spyros Skouras, citing the exec's "leadership, rare vision and courage."

Committee also set up plans for the reissuance of four of the 12 industry institutional short subjects, originally made in 1949. Plan is to furnish the four shorts with updated soundtracks, and with rental profit—if any—earmarked for C. of E. coffers.

PONDERING THE ISSUE

On Sophia Loren Equality-of-Billing Claim

N. Y. Supreme Court reserved decision last week on temporary injunction sought by Sophia Loren, who wants her name removed from all "El Cid" exploitation-advertising. Alleging breach of contract, actress claims an electric Broadway sign for the pic fails to give her equal billing with costar Charlton Heston. (Her name is under his, albeit same size, but according to her complaint she is to be billed on same line as Heston in all advertising.)

Her suit names Allied Artists, as domestic distrib; Samuel Bronston, Bronston Productions, and the Warner Theatre, where hard-ticket film is now playing.

'Unfriendly 12' In Another Defeat

Washington, Jan. 23.

The so-called "unfriendly twelve" lost another preliminary round in their court battle to force seven major studios to tear up their alleged "blacklist." But their legal rep, David I. Shapiro, declared that he has just begun to fight.

U.S. Court of Appeals here rejected Shapiro's request for a temporary injunction against the Motion Picture Assn. and seven member companies barring them from imposing any blacklist on his clients.

In the same action, the three-man appeals bench sidestepped any ruling on the actual merits of the antitrust charges the 12 actors and directors have lodged against the MPAA group. Shapiro had urged in the court arguments last month that a finding of illegal concert by the studios be handed down on a so-called "per se" basis, meaning no formal trial was necessary.

In requesting the quickie decision, Shapiro argued that the facts already on the record spoke so loud as to make any further proceedings superfluous. The attorney for the 12 cited the Waldorf Declaration against hiring communists or those suspected of Red links and the distribution-financing agreements between the majors and the indie producers whereby the former, in bankrolling indie productions, insist on veto power over hiring and firing.

The appeals court, in an unanimous decision, decided the facts did not speak as loud as Shapiro contended and there was no justifiable basis for issuing a preliminary injunction or a per se finding of antitrust guilt against the MPAA members. The action affirmed a district court decision against the injunction last September.

Former Eisenhower Administration Attorney General William F. Rogers, in his first court argument since reentering private practice, was vindicated in his arguments that no unlawful concert was involved in the refusal of the studios to hire the suspect talent—only a unanimous, understandable reluctance to give employ to those with dubious political connections.

In affirming the district court decision against Shapiro's clients, Circuit Court Judge Walter M. Bastian cited the general rule that "a denial of a preliminary injunction will not be set aside on appeal unless the district court's action does not in fact constitute a 'clear error or abuse of discretion'."

Enterprises Combined Inc. Will Speed Film Trade Between India and U.S.

A new company, Enterprises Combined Inc., has been set up in New York to promote a "two-way motion picture channel" between India and the United States, according to Aslam Khan, general manager of the company. A major goal of the company will be the marketing of Indian pix in the U.S. and other countries in the western hemisphere.

In addition to trying to sell Indian films to U.S. distribs, Enterprises Combined will act as agent for producer of non-theatrical, documentary and scientific films, and will rep Indian studios and distribs in setting up possible coproduction deals. Further, it will serve as purchasing agent for equipment in the theatrical film and tv fields.

As part of his effort to find American buyers for Indian pix, Khan is hoping to arrange for festivals of Indian films in both New York and Los Angeles late this year.

1st Movement: Network Variation On A Minow Theme

Washington, Jan. 23.

Since level-headed, erudite, statesman-like industry leaders are hard to come by (they can be counted on the fingers of one hand), it could well be considered a break that to CBS corporate prexy Frank Stanton fell the lot of setting the tone and the tempo as the leadoff witness here today (Tues.) as the Federal Communications Commission launched its climactic three weeks of hearings into television network practices.

This, of course, is the long-anticipated, full-dress confrontation of Messrs. Newton Minow, Stanton, Robert Sarnoff and Leonard Goldenson, far-reaching in its implications and over which CBS, NBC and ABC have been burning the midnight oil for many weeks in preparing "the case of the networks." And since Stanton is singularly equipped as a man with style and background and is acutely alerted to the whole ramifications of a Minow-helmed FCC regime, he responded in kind. His testimony had the two-fold virtue of brevity and pungency, approaching the manifold issues that are involved in a manner that did credit to the industry as a whole.

There were no sensational, headline-inviting overtones to his testimony, but they were words carefully weighed and sifted, a model of decorum and common sense in evaluating the function and role of television in our society. It was testimony calculated to win FCC respect and create a favorable atmosphere designed to ease the burden for the witnesses to follow. (CBS testimony will take up the remainder of this week; Bob Sarnoff & Co. take over next week, with ABC coming up the rear.)

'Moment of Truth'

Blanketed by press and broadcast coverage rarely, if ever, accorded the FCC, the "moment of truth" between the Government agency and the networks got under way in a "high noon" atmosphere.

With the klieg lights on full power, the stakes of the grand finale of the network programming hearings are to a large extent a matter of public image for both the webs and the industry as a whole. Feeling that the medium has been a whipping boy too long for the misadventures of Charles Van Doren still figures in industry psychology. The hope is to reverse this defensive role.

It's problematical whether it will develop, but many, from the daily press especially, anticipate a personality duel between chairman Minow and the network heads. Recalling the attacks and counter-attacks since the wasteland speech, there is an expectant atmosphere of an impending shoot-out. Latter probably accounts for the in-depth news coverage (a record 56 reporters on hand for Minow's background briefing on the eve of the hearings alone).

Drift Toward Program Control

Stanton put himself on record in expressing alarm over "a drift toward indirect, but nevertheless effective, program control by the Government.

"We do not think that the unhappy results of such control would come about overnight, but in the long processes of history, there would certainly be a day of reckoning."

At another point he sounded a plea for a more effective use of the spectrum, favoring increased competition in the form of more stations and more networks as the best assurance of the growth and improvement of television.

Stanton's testimony was highlighted by the following pertinent observations:

"I want to emphasize that our fear of program control is based on very deep convictions. We do not see it primarily as a matter of our own ox being gored. We see it as a matter of pressing public interest, and we feel it is our duty, in any proceeding where it could be an issue, to restate our fundamental position.

"The wide range of opinions expressed in all the long sessions of this hearing as to what kinds of programs should be on television has served to highlight a strong human instinct. We all seem impelled to lead others to the heights we ourselves have attained—or think we have attained — through some form of coercion or cultural speedup."

"I confess that there has occurred to me the possibility that the more sophisticated who are restless with the type of entertainment that appeals to others may need a rededication of faith in that hopeful experiment that is our democracy.

"But those of us who are in broadcasting know very well that the moment we give way to any impulse to offer only those programs which, because we like them, we think are best for everybody else, we not only risk immediate and total disaster, but we negate the very essence of democracy.

"In a society dedicated to the importance of the individual, each of us would fight for the right of every other American not only to state his own views, but to exercise his own preferences in taste and judgment. We in broadcasting have the responsibility to serve the American people."

". . . Broadcasting must not only keep pace with progressive change but anticipate it, for real progress in television programming is responsive to a ferment of demand from all the millions of families who are looking at it for some five hours a day for diversion and information. That demand is the only force that can have validity and lasting authority. And true change and progress in this demand can result only from the gradual elevation of the educational level of the American people. Television itself has partieipated in this process, and it is for this reason that we, from time to time, move ahead of our audiences without their losing sight of us."

. . . of Vistas & Horizons

"There is not the slightest doubt that television to most Americans has already opened up whole new worlds, new horizons, new experiences. The dramatic and constant rise in educational background is the force that is going to make television better, if only because it cannot long survive unless it responds to this force. Broadcasters cannot ignore it, and they cannot countervail it. They will, in the interests of their own survival, pay attention. They will, in their own interests, respond to it. And television will improve as advances are exacted of it by the 47 million family units it reaches. At the same time conscientious consideration must be given continually to the demands of significant minorities in this huge audience.

"It seems to us that as television moves forward in a constant effort to improve, the most likely instruments of progress are the enterprise and initiative of competitors and the public's pressures, which are normal and healthful in a free, pluralistic society."

"I am disturbed when some of our affiliates do not carry some of our more serious programs. But I would be as much against anyone, by threats of punitive action or by raising doubts about their right to survival, forcing affiliates to take such programs as I would be against forcing them not to take the programs.

'No National Emergency'

"We cannot have it both ways. We cannot have the freedom to progress without having the freedom to choose and, in that choice, sometimes to make mistakes. If they are mistakes that really matter, we may be absolutely sure that the public will make itself heard—and will exact satisfaction. In the meantime, we see no national emergency in television programming. There is no wholesale abandonment of their responsibilities by American broadcasters. The public has not deserted television nor is there any public uprising against the general content of television programming. The day-to-day competition of the networks has brought each season not dozens, not scores, but hundreds of programs of distinction.

"I do not want to suggest that all of this means we ought to be satisfied with the status quo. All of us—broadcasters and this Commission, critics and the public—are in league with the future and must share a responsibility for keeping this medium moving."

On the scarcity of channels;

"The major direction this can take in television is formulating a better system of using the spectrum to make possible new stations and to encourage new networks. I am well aware that many thoughtful observers have been susceptible to new advances.

"CBS has always taken the position that increased competition in the form of more stations and more networks is the most promising road. The record will show that in the early years of FM and television we were hopeful that FM would provide many more stations and that all television could be in the UHF part of the spectrum, because it seemed likely that such a course would make possible the most service to the most people by the most stations and the most networks.

"We have never abandoned our hope that there would eventually be a breakthrough in the present limitations on the use of the spectrum for television broadcasting. It is all too true that we have at present no answer to some very tough technical problems in the adequate propagation of the UHF signal and the resulting economic problems. But I do not believe that this means there is no answer. We will have to resist the comfortable conviction that nothing further by way of technical progress is possible in television. . . .

"All of us concerned with television must bring new force, new concentration, new ingenuity to bear on a technical breakthrough opening the doors to more competition.

"We believe that the widespread use of all-channel receivers would be an important step to encourage the use of UHF frequencies. In this connectiin, we must look at television as a total system—not in terms of separate hardware components of transmitters and receivers, but in terms of standards which apply to both transmission and reception. These standards embracing both VHF and UHF areas of the spectrum are the system for television today. Full utilization of this system requires that sets be able to receive signals transmitted in all parts of the spectrum assigned to television . . . This will require a constructive, a patient and a confident attitude on the part of all, for it will not come without jolts and dislocations that will have to be dealt with in a spirit of hope and determination rather than of despair and defeat. And it will not be accomplished overnight.

"The fast way to growth or improvement in free societies is often the wrong way. The only sure way is through the increased acceptance by the public of what is good and the increased rejection of what is shoddy. This is sometimes a painfully slow process. But it is a process that has proved to be spectacularly productive. It invites experiment and innovation. If is the surest way to insure that television, with its great potential, will always be a medium serving, and drawing its strength from, a free people."

At the Minow briefing on Monday, one newsman was under the misapprehension (he was corrected) that the commission was going to disinter the payola-quiz scandals and toss them in the faces of the network toppers, as one example of how the notion of a "dramatic confrontation" has built up in advance of the three-week on banc hearings.

The concrete results of the hearings won't be in for several months anyway—in the form of a report and new recommendations for network regulation, either new legislation or revised FCC rules. Still standing, of course, is the Commission's 1960 report, reaffirmed last year, on the Harris-Bennett bills in which FCC came out for direct regulation of the webs, but not licensing.

Revisions and updating of this stance will be in order, and Minow is known to hope the commission will digest all the evidence and make up its mind before House Commerce Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.) launches consideration of network regulation bills later this session.

FCC is not likely to reverse its position that direct regulation is needed. The only question, as Minow is reported to see it, is how precisely it should be done.

Minow The Big Draw

Minow has had spectacular success in his role as a focal point for groups critical of broadcasting. The limelight of the network hearings may be counted on by Minow to further strengthen his hand and make possible more stringent recommendation than might otherwise have been possible.

At any rate, Minow is known to want as much publicity as possible and is getting, initially at least, as much as he could hope for. And there appears little doubt that Minow is the big draw. The 1960 hearings by the full Commission (sans Minow) in the midst of the scandals, during which about 100 varied groups griped about tv's alleged shortcomings, was for the most part, routinely covered. There was no hoopla in the form of background briefings and dress rehearsals for the broadcast coverage as was held for the NBC-TV team which will put the entire proceedings on tape.

Confronting the web hierarchy is a mountain of questions, some slightly loaded, accumulated during the course of previous phases of the programming inquiry.

In a spirit of fair play, the FCC let the network heads know the gist of the queries they would have to field in letters sent last November, consisting mostly of allegations made about various network programming practices and policies.

The commission outlined these general topics:

Control over programming; relations between the webs and talent agencies which double as program packagers; methods of program selection, news and pubaffairs practices; dictation of content by sponsors and role of the affiliate in the program selection process.

Aubrey Sees TV as 'Vast Wonderland' In Strong Defense of CBS Practices

Washington, Jan. 23.

A strong affirmation of current network programming fare and web practices as they relate to CBS-TV was delivered by the web's prexy James T. Aubrey today (Tues.) to the Federal Communications Commission.

Highlights of his voluminous prepared text included:

The web's need to be a popular medium, accenting entertainment, providing balance and programming in news, pubaffairs.

A rejection of the so-called "magazine concept" for television.

A defense of ratings, as "important, but not the only tool determining audience interest."

CBS-TV losses for news, pubaffairs shows in 1961 amounted to $5,000,000.

Change in sponsorship patterns and the increased number of hour-length programs has resulted in more programming being produced by or licensed to the network.

Aubrey wound up his prepared testimony with a striking defense of current tv programming. Said he: "No other medium has become such an important part of people's lives. All of us remember those who predicted that as soon as television's novelty wore off viewing would decline. Instead 47 million television families today watch television an average of some five hours daily the year round.

"It is because of their eagerness to enjoy this entertainment that the public has invested 23 billion dollars in television sets over the past 12 years. It is because of the appeal of this entertainment that network advertisers invest more than $2,000,000 every night of the year."

In short to Aubrey, tv is a "vast wonderland" instead of a "vast wasteland," as characterized by FCC chairman Newton N. Minow.

In one of the few detailed explorations of the "magazine concept" before the FCC, Aubrey denied that the adoption of such a concept would improve tv fare.

Aubrey contended: "To exclude an advertiser from identification with a program of his choice would also eliminate his accountability to the public for the program which carries his advertising message. With the elimination of program association, pure circulation becomes the only criterion for the purchase of network television time.

"In other words, network television would be forced into the posture of a medium which is purchased solely on the basis of circulation and those programs which give diversity and balance while delivering smaller or more qualitative circulation, would inevitably, we believe, be forced out of networks' schedules due to the pressures of competition."

Addressing himself to the web's business practices, Aubrey said, "I want the record to be quite clear that to the best of my knowledge and the knowledge of my associates most closely involved, we have not sought to obtain a participation in a program as a condition of that program's acceptance

Sen. Dodd Gets In TV Act, Orders Hearing Day & Date With Minow's

Washington, Jan. 22.

The Senate Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee, emerging finally from a series of underground sessions, resumes open hearings tomorrow (Wed.) on allegations that network execs are responsible for beefing up tv programs with sex and violence. Group decision to resume was announced only this week.

In announcing the hearing, chairman Thomas Dodd (D., Conn.) charged that his unit has on hand "documents which show direct instructions have been given at various times by network officials to inject more sex and more violence into tv shows to boost or maintain ratings."

ABC-TV prexy Oliver Treyz, former NBC-TV program boss David Levy, and William Capitman, who once ran an audience measurement outfit called Communications & Media Reserch Inc., will be on tap for tomorrow's opening session.

Dates for further hearings haven't been set yet, but a subcommittee spokesman said top programming of the networks will probably be heard. He added that the scheduling of further witnesses will be done to avoid conflict with the present FCC hearings.

(In New York, various observers feel that Dodd picked a "strange time" to reopen his juve tv hearings, particularly since the first phase of his public probe falls smack dab in the middle of the much-publicized FCC hearings, which began today (Tues.). There have been allegations and speculations that Dodd wants to grab off some of FCC chairman Newton Minow's space by hanging on to his shirttails.)

Dodd said that when web execs testified at his hearing last summer they protested that they were not responsible for the j ap in tele-

TV'S 'JUGGLE ME A WINNER'

A Murrow-For-Governor Boom?

For years, Edward R. Murrow's name has been mentioned for elected office in Washington. All the reports turned out wrong, in the final analysis, because the former newscaster himself evidently rejected the overtures to run. However, again his name comes up—two ways: first as a possible candidate for Senator from New York, to run opposite Republican Jacob Javits, and as Gubernatorial candidate in the same state, both this year.

Reports in the trade and in various political circles say that Murrow, presently h.ead of USIA and a resident in Pauling, N. Y., is more interested in the Gubernatorial race, which, should he go through with his candidacy on the Democratic ticket, would pit him against Nelson Rockefeller.

30 Yrs. On the Air For Bert Parks ('Life's A Bowl of 13-Wk. Cycles')

Bert Parks—the smile you can read by, the toothsome tumulter and ebullient emcee of innumerable game shows—is marking 30 years in broadcasting this year. And for a big part of way, it's hardly been a bed of critical roses for the vet performer of whom it might be said that nobody likes him but the public.

It happened again with his most recent show, "Yours For A Song," a stanza doubling in daytime and nighttime on the ABC-TV web. The New York critics blasted away, but the show is considered to be building satisfactorily and has been renewed for another 13-week period. Parks said: "I measure my life in 13-week spans. If the studio is lit up when I arrive, I know I'm still working."

With respect to the critics, Parks is more philosophical than impervious. "You got to have the skin of a rhinoceros or be an illiterate not to be affected by what the critics say, but the ultimate critic is the public and they have generally had a favorable opinion."

That's borne out by Parks' record. At 47, he's not only one of the few surviving holdovers in television from the heyday of radio back in the 1930s, he also has a unique show biz record of consistent employment. In the past 30 years, starting as a staffer on a hometown Atlanta station and extending to his current assignment, he's only been out of work for six weeks.

Back in the '30s, which Parks calls the most glamorous era in broadcasting, he was a staff announcer on CBS and straight emcee on the Eddie Cantor show until 1939. For the next three years, he was with the "Camel Caravan" and then did a three-year turn in the Army. Back in mufti, he emceed "Break The Bank," a radio show which made the transition to television via the simulcast route. That show ran for 11 years and then came "Stop The Music." He recalls that one New York critic characterized "Stop The Music" as reaching

Sun. at 7 Up For Grabs at NBC-TV

It's going to be quite a race to see who gets Sunday-at-7 on NBC-TV. The network seems to have given up the idea of retaining "Bullwinkle" in that choice half-hour before Walt Disney's "Wonderful World of Color," although it's likely General Mills will continue sponsoring the stanza elsewhere on the sked.

Meantime, Kraft has a deal with Screen Gems for the development of the half-hour "Tom Sawyer," and Kraft and SG are said to want the spot very much. It's equally possible that "National Velvet" could get the time period, in a shift from its current Monday-at-8 slot. (NBC is not likely to renew "Velvet" at the current time.)

If Four Star's "McKeever & the Colonel" goes to a half-hour instead of an hour as originally planned, it's a candidate. So is Larry Harmon's cartoon remake of "Laurel & Hardy," and so is Metro's "Andy Hardy."

Love That Sponsor

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Lawrence Welk, whose ABC-TV show is sponsored year-around by J. B. Williams Co., is taking his band and troupe to Florida to play for a party for Williams' prexy Matthew Rosenhaus on St. Patrick's Day—which also is the prexy's birthday.

It is a gratis gesture; however, rather silver-lined, for one-niter promoter Bill Daly has rented Miami's Civic auditorium and there will present Welk aggregation at a March 16 gig for which Welk is guaranteed $10,000 against 60% of gate in the 13,000-seat indoor arena. Welk also will tape an ABC-TV show, at Miami's Dipmat Hotel March 14-15.

The party for Rosenhaus will be at soapmaker's home on Hibiscus Island, offshore from Miami Beach.

CBS-TV Going In For Innovations In Prepping Sked

CBS-TV, which has about two dozen program projects in the works for next season, is making some tall gambles that innovations might pay off.

Innovations take the form of an hour vidfilm series in which the running lead and prime mover is a woman (Herb Brodkin's "The Nurse"); of an hour vidfilm series in which the accent is on comedy (Kingston Trio starer "Young Man in a Hurry"); of a half-hour comedy anthology skein, hosted by Victor Borge, who also will play a number of episodes. There have been no web anthologies keyed to comedic episodes.

In the grabbag for next season, web has some projects in the established track, as per usual. Oscar Katz, programming v.p. for the web, though, has tried to reach out in about a dozen different directions, basing each plunge on some careful analysis of program potentials. Within the next few weeks some of the pilots will be coming in and some of the big advertisers will begin committing coin for next season.

Katz and his programming aides in N.Y. and Coast have keyed their projects to recognized names in the trade. It's a Bob Banner, Jack Webb, Brodkin, Max Lieb-

Room For '1 More' Has Room For Plenty More

"Room for One More," the Warner Bros. half-hour dramatic series which bows on ABC-TV Saturday (27) night, has proved to be a slow business getter to date. Only two sponsors, Block Drugs and Armour, have picked up minutes in the show thus far.

Future of the show will depend on a sales pickup after the preem. It's figured to have a tough rating row to hoe opposite "Perry Mason" on NBC-TV.

MAJOR SHUFFLES IN PROGRAMMING

By GEORGE ROSEN

Ever since, some years back, the "Danny Thomas Show" was converted from a Wednesday night flop on ABC-TV into a surefire winner by being shifted to Monday nights on CBS-TV, there have been a number of attempts made to duplicate the feat. Some, like Thomas, have made it; others failed. Certainly the most striking evidence of recent vintage where musical chairs paid handsome dividends was the NBC shifting of "Bonanza" from a dubious Saturday night entry to its current click status Sunday nights at 9.

In plotting the '62-'63 schedules, the three tv networks are now engaged in the most highly speculative checker game yet, in the projected juggling and shifting of current entries. (Time was when such maneuvering could be kept a secret until it became a fait accompli, but those conditions no longer prevail. With sometimes five and six different clients and agencies represented on a single 60-minute program, invariably the battle tactics of one network become common knowledge at a rival network within a matter of minutes. When, a few weeks back, ABC maneuvered a shift of "Ben Casey" for next season, both CBS and NBC knew all about it even before the ABC rank-and-filers were apprised.)

Today it's imperative for a network to know what the competition's got up its sleeve and to know what show is going where. That's why Bob Kintner, Ollie Treyz and Jim Aubrey are on a constant telephonic merry-go-round with key clients and the tv-radio heads of agencies, keeping tabs on the latest maneuvering in show juggling. One false move, where an hour show is concerned, can cost some $6,000,000 to $8,000,000; guessing has to be reduced to a minimum.

When, for example, CBS last week got wind of the fact that NBC was planning a switch of the Mitch Miller show from Thursday night 10 to 11 to Friday night 8:30, with possibility that the new Jack Paar hour will either go into the Miller Thursday period or follow "Sing Along With Mitch" at 9:30 on Friday, it immediately set in motion CBS' own checker game to compete with the new lineup. The fact that "Sing Along" may no longer be around to whittle down the Thursday 10 to 11 "CBS Reports" ratings, has already invited fresh thinking on the possibility of standing pat with the public affairs entry instead of moving it into a 7:30 berth.

In at least two instances CBS is taking under advisement the moving of solid hits (namely "Gunsmoke" and "Defenders") to strengthen other evenings. As an illustration, CBS is talking in terms of shifting "Defenders" to Wednesday evening 8:30 as a counter-maneuver to ABC-TV's proposal to shift "Hawaiian Eye" into the coveted Wednesday 8:30 period following "Wagon Train." Since "Defenders" won its case on Saturdays, CBS reasons that it can mete out the same punishment to "Hawaiian Eye" and at the same time bolster its own Wednesday lineup.

Where "Gunsmoke" would be shifted, if at all, hasn't been determined.

Along with the ABC plot to drum up some Nielsen excitement for "Hawaiian Eye" through its back-to-back slotting with "Wagon Train" is a contemplated shifting of "77 Sunset Strip" to 8 on Friday following "Flintstones."

Extend Bible Game Show

The "Bible Story Game," NBC-TV Sunday morning religioso game show using moppets as contestants, has been extended another 13 weeks.

Buddy and Beverly Piper are creators and hosts of the series.

Mort Werner's British Dickers On NBC Int'l Ventures With ATV, BBC

London, Jan. 23.

A major change in NBC International's activities is likely to result from a series of discussions initiated in London last week by Mort Werner, NBC veepee in charge of programming, during a four-day stay.

One immediate outcome is the setting up of a three-way partnership deal between Associated Television, Herb Brodkin and NBC International for the production of an hourlong pilot entitled "Espionage." Production, however, will be delayed pending the current Equity strike, though it is hoped that if the dispute is being prolonged it will be possible to reach an accommodation with the union to go ahead with the project.

Werner emphasized that the present deal was restricted to the making of a pilot, though if the end result was up to expectations, a network deal with NBC would certainly follow. The series, if it eventuates, would be distributed through ATV (or its wholly owned subsidiary, ITC) in Britain, and NBC would retain rights to the rest of the world. After the networking playoff in the United States, ITC would probably take the series for subsequent syndication.

NBC International is also showing interest in ATV's "Man of the World" skein starring Craig Stevens, and Werner indicated that discussions had reached the "development stage."

Werner also followed up on talks started in Hollywood a few months back with Ronald Waldman, general manager of BBC-TV Enterprises, and, as a result, NBC International and the British web are to go ahead jointly in the production of a pilot for a project called "Waltzing Matilda." The two outfits also discussed the possibility of working together in the production of children's programs. Werner admitted he was high on the BBC's "Maigret" series, though no deal had been made.

Also on Werner's crowded agenda was a number of sessions with execs of TWW, the commercial tv company operating in the Wales and West of England area, with which NBC International has a management contract. TWW, apparently, owns a property which Werner thought was "most interesting," and a co-production deal may follow, but the name of the property is being withheld for the time being. An interesting wrinkle to this project is that it would mark the first time a regional web has ventured into the vidpic arena.

All Keyed Up

If you're looking for a job in the CBS-TV program department, make sure to bring along your Phi Beta Kappa credentials. Last week's appointment of Marc Merson to Mike Dann's N.Y. program department pointed up anew the scholastic attainments of the key "Dann boys," to wit:

Larry White, Phi Beta Kappa (Syracuse U);

Jerry Leider, Fulbright fellowship (Bristol, England);

Alan Wagner, Phi Beta Kappa (Columbia U);

Marc Merson, Phi Beta Kappa (Syracuse U). Later is from WNTA-TV, before that CBS.

WMCA Precedent: A 32½-Hr. Week Offer To IBEW

Broadcasting in New York will have its first 32½-hour work week, or at least that's the way it now shapes up in dickers that have been going on between radio indie WMCA and Local 1212 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

N. Y. union reports that the station has made the six-and-a-half hour day (over a five day week), and that's including a half-hour for lunch. Present work sked is eight-hour day, also including lunch. Week's wages will remain the same, the union says, if it accepts the offer from WMCA. (Pay scale for a 40-hour week is about $187.)

Local 1212 deals with some 20 stations in the met area and with CBS Network. Laborites expect that the new WMCA offer will set a precedent for the others in upcoming talks.

There are a small number of men working at the WMCA transmitter site. For them, the union has negotiated a four-day work week, eight hours a day.

Besides the lowering of working hours and the reported maintenance of present pay levels, WMCA pick up the entire Blue Cross, picks up the entire Blue Cross, Blue Shield costs for IBEW rank-and-filers in its shop and for their families.

WMCA is asking a five-year agreement. After three years, if the cost of living has gone up 5%, there will be 5% pay increases for the IBEW'ers.

RTES 1962 AWARD GOING TO STANTON

The third annual award of the Radio-Television Executive Society for major industry contribution and leadership will go to CBS corporate prexy Frank Stanton. The presentation will be made at a black tie affair to be held March 8 in the grand ballroom of the N.Y. Waldorf-Astoria.

The RTES' first award was made to Gen. David Sarnoff, RCA board chairman. Last year it went to President Kennedy and Richard N. Nixon for their "Great Debates" on tv.

Stanton was the virtual unanimous choice of the RTES' 14-man board.

Another major RTES function in March will be a two-day Collegiate Conference, to be held in N. Y., with participating students enlisted by stations around the country. It will take place March 29-30 with likelihood that NBC board chairman Robert Sarnoff will keynote the event.

Report Hausman Quitting TIO Post

Louis Hausman, director of the Television Information Office, is expected to inform the TIO board in Florida tomorrow (Thurs.) that he will quit when his three-year deal is up next October.

Feeling is that should Hausman resign from the organization, started two years ago to inform the public on tv, TIO will move under the umbrella of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, headed by Gov. LeRoy Collins.

Evidently, efforts have been made to persuade Hausman to sign a new contract, but the former CBS exec still wants out.

'Arsenic & Old Lace' Set All-Star Cast

Cast has been set for the Hallmark production of "Arsenic and Old Lace" which will get an NBC-TV airing Feb. 5.

Boris Karloff returns to his original stage role of Jonathan. Dorothy Stickney goes into the Abby role, originally played by Josephine Hull. Others set are Mildred Natwick, Tom Bosley and Tony Randall. George Schaefer will produce-direct.

UPA's Full-Length Animated Specials For TV; $7,575,000 Production Sked

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

United Productions of America leans heavily toward television in its upcoming $7,575,000 production program. In addition to two animated theatrical features, cartoonery projects six one-hour tv animated shows, 26 half-hour color shorts and a 90-minute tv sports show.

Although animated feature is not new for UPA which made "One Thousand and One Arabian Nights" for Columbia about two years ago, idea of long animation subjects for tv marks a new departure not only for pen and ink film company but also networks. NBC is reported dickering for "Magoo's Christmas Carol" which has been in work past four months. It will be filmed in Eastman color for exposure next Xmas.

Prexy Henry Saperstein planes to Gotham this week for network confabs. He expects to wind deal before returning here in two weeks. Pic will have Mr. Magoo as Scrooge, Gerald McBoing-Boing as Tiny Time. It will be finished in October. It will be done tongue in cheek. A top composer for Broadway musicals is being lined up to utrn in the clefs and bars.

Second tv animated special will be done with live action called "Gay Purr-ee Party." Stars like Judy Garland, Robert Goulet, Red Buttons, Hermione Gingold and Paul Fees, who star in "Gay Purr-ee'" theatrical animation for Warner Bros. release, also will appear in the subject. Magoo will host a party welcoming viewers to UPA Studios to see affair wrapping up the theatrical film, parts of which feature principals to be included.

Subject is being slated for November tv showing with Chicago top cat food manufacturer discussing sponsorship.

Third tv special will be based on July 4 holiday. Saperstein has been talking with United States Information Agency in Washington. Subject will be sponsored on air, following which negative will be turned over to USIA for dubbing and distribution in 100 countries in 52 languages.

Other three pix are in story stages and without titles, as yet. Each will cost from $300,000 to $500,000, prexy Saperstein noted.

Second theatrical feature also will be a musical but with Latin American setting. Work has started on untitled $1,000,000 subject for Spring, 1963 release. Warners has made a pitch for distribution rights but Saperstein prefers to wait until he sees how his first "Gay Purr-ee" comes out.

UPA has just finished 26-hour color shorts with Fran Allison, star of the Kulka, Fran & Ollie tv show. Star acts as hostess in cartoon series on sophisticated level

Just Supposin'

Figuring is that CBS will have good cause to put its tour of the White House (with Jacqueline Kennedy) up for a tv award, probably the Emmy.

But if the Feb. 14 telecast wins, it's quite likely CBS, which initiated the idea, will have to share the award with rivals NBC and ABC, because they will be paying part of the freight for the special pub-affairs stanza.

Looks Like Revue Gets Nod on NBC's 90-Min. TV Series

Looks very much as though Revue Productions is the outfit to produce the 90-minute western that NBC-TV is seriously contemplating to fill the 7:30-9 p.m. Wednesday time next season. Web, which is characterized as almost sure of going with the radical program departure (a 90-minute action series), is now talking producers names and scripts with Revue.

Since Revue also produces "Wagon Train" and since "Wagon Train" next year is shifting to ABC-TV and a continuation of its Wednesday 7:30-8:30 slot, it looks like Revue will be competing vs. Revue. Moreover, "Wagon Train" might well be called Revue's hottest tv property. And in terms of the production nut ($160,000 or more weekly), the new NBC 90-minuter might easily be considered equally important to the producer. Yet one show has virtually got to do damage to the other.

NBC was definitely looking at the UA offering "Magnificent Seven," and evidently liked it. It also "talked" to other producers, but the web turned to Revue, it is said, partly because of the company's giant Hollywood facilities. (Show will require two to two-and-a-half full production units.) It is assumed that the network also turned to Revue because it could probably supply sufficient talent (and plenty is going to be needed for a weekly hour-and-a-half format).

Doing a regular 90-minute film, one source said, will be like doing a weekly feature film. Decision to greenlight the "Wagon Train" replacement is expected shortly, particularly since a stanza of such dimensions will have to get rolling, if humanly possible, even before the hour product.

NBC doesn't seem to be underestimating the production problems that will occur in starting from scratch this late on such a giant-sized outing.

Title and stars for proposed series have not been chosen.

8 Sponsors Yen Still-Unmade Pilot

The "Empire" pilot has not even been shot by Screen Gems, but there are eight major sponsors who have shown varying degrees of interest in buying the telefilm hour, principal interest coming from Procter & Gamble and Chrysler, it is reported.

Pilot for "Empire," being underwritten by NBC-TV, won't be finished until March, and the sponsors haven't even seen the script. But Pontiac, Ford, Liggett & Myers, Lever, Nabisco and Scott Paper have all shown interest, in addition to the other two mentioned. One reason seems to be that NBC-TV is willing to place the hourlong telefilm, which has a contemporary "southwestern milieu," in at either 8:30 or 9:30 on Tuesdays. For all intents and purposes, "Empire" is being thought of as the replacement for "Cain's Hundred," now 10 to 11 on Tuesdays. ("Alfred Hitchcock Presents," a half-hour at 8:30, will become an hour—but on CBS.)

NBC's Tuesday lineup therefore will read either "Laramie," "Dick Powell" and "Empire" or "Laramie," "Empire," then "Dick Powell." The three hour shows might well be all that NBC airs on Tuesday night. The web weeks ago considered cancelling "Cain's," installing a new half-hour at 10 and returning 10:30 to the stations, and obviously, the affiliates stand an excellent chance in '62-'63 of getting 10:30 returned for sure.

Richard Egan will front the "Empire" pilot. Another factor in the sponsor interest is said to be the very fact that producer Screen Gems this season has a good track record, and that, coupled with a Tuesday time period, make it worth the risk, pilot or no pilot.

Nov. Telecast for D.C. Culture Center

The board of trustees of the National Cultural Center has decided to do its closed-circuit money-raising tv stanza next Nov. 15. Target is $5,000,000 for use by the proposed D.C. setup, according to Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the board.

Robert Saudek will produce the two-hour c-c spec, and Leonard Bernstein will act as host. Helen Hayes has already agreed to appear as well.

Stevens says that the Center has a $30,000,000 target, all told, on funds. Hopefully, the tv show will provide one-sixth.

The telecast will be fed to about 250 cities across the country, with the Center permitting local cultural groups to establish the scene for receiving the c-c show. In some cases, it'll be at $100-a-plate dinners, in other theatre, arena and hotel parties. Total gross is anticipated at $10,000,000 but with the local civic groups divvying it up on a 50-50 basis with the Center.

To make the $10,000,000 gross, the Center figures it has to get 1,000,000 attendees across the country.

CBS' Religioso Femme Fatale

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

At CBS Pamela Ilott is looked upon as a "miracle worker" of sorts. As one CBS exec put it she plays the religioso field "like an organ."

Miss Ilott, director of religious broadcasts for CBS-TV and CBS Radio, has an uncommon zeal for her work. Her job is part show biz, part religion, part missionary, part tradition, and parts ad infinitum. She has to get along with Baptists, Jews, Catholics, Buddhists, Episcopalians, Methodists, Mormons, and a variety of sects, all reflecting man's religious experience.

It's not a role which she takes lightly. She confesses it's full of tensions, as well as victories. The milliners share all this with her. Everytime she needs a lift or feels the need for a reward, she buys a hat. "I've got 300 hats," she says, and "I've had a Viennesian psychiatrist friend of mine say my hat buying is perfectly normal. He told her that after all I live in a man's world and it's the most natural thing for me to reaffirm my femininity with hats."

Miss Ilott is an attractive woman who in her personality brings a spark of the stage to the many church gatheings she attends. British-born, she acted on the stage in N.Y. and London before getting into the religioso field in broadcasting. Her educational background is unusual. She obtained a degree in comparative religion and church history from England's Durham U. She also earned an Oxford-Cambridge diploma in religion.

One thing's for sure—all this religioso background has not made an ascetic of her. She seems to enjoy life, the real, as well as the mystical, and her voice and manner has the grace of that union. It's not only the hats, it's the fountain. She says she loves the sound

Midway Quietus: Few Replacements

Midseason finds few casualties and replacements on the three networks, a situation credited not to the merits of all the shows, but to the caution of programmers to chance what they feel is a sure short ride.

Among the comparative handful of replacements, the entries this season show little flair and creativity. On CBS-TV, for example, web offered a nighttime version of a daytime show, "Password." Even if the game show should catch on, the entry has nothing to do with program creativity. Then, there's the new Grouch Marx retread, "Tell It to Groucho," which borrows heavily on Groucho's former series. Again, the viewer hearing about re-"Password." Even if the game show should catch on, the entry "what's new" after seeing these so-called new entries.

The decline of midseason replacements is due to the heavy reliance of the webs on Coast film suppliers. It also is due to the sharply diminished pool of creative talent still associated with the three networks. Even when it comes to "live" programming, webs, because they are short staffed with creative programming personnel, must turn to outside "live" packagers. It was a Goodson-Todman, for instance, which had to come through with the nighttime version of their "Password" show.

Film producers, for valid reasons, lend themselves to what now is generally recognized as a frozen season. Coast vidfilm houses, which have what they think may be a good property, don't want to expose it for a January or spring start. Likelihood of such an entry to beat what would have to be a low rated time period is slim indeed. From the film producers' point of view, it would be financial suicide to kill off a promising property via midseason exposure when all the odds are stacked against success. So, film producers hold off for the new season.

The hold-off attitude also is reflected at the network and outside "live" package levels. There, too, the feeling is that the climate is better for success at the season's start, when the hoopla and excitement of a new season is present.

Every once in a while, a midseason entry comes along to upset all the rules in the book. "Sing Along with Mitch" started as a special on NBC-TV at midseason, last year, becoming a weekly entry as soon as the web recognized its pull.

There aren't many "Sing Alongs," though, and an industry which takes many gambles, prefers to play it safe when it comes to midseason replacements.

Anatomy of A Rating: Dissecting The NBC-TV Saturday Night Movies

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Telefans of old pictures have shown a decided preference for features with a heavy dramatic tone, judging by the Nielsen ratings on 13 pictures shown on NBC-TV's "Saturday Night at the Movies." Attracting the largest audience nationally was "Demetrius and the Gladiators" with a rating of 21.8 and audience share of 35.4. Lowest marker was registered by a comedy, "Dreamboat," with 15.7 average audience and 24.6 share.

While the ratings and share are barely in the accepted area of safety, it is considered in the trade strong for a series in its first season and bucking such stout competition as "Defenders," "Have Gun, Will Travel," "Gunsmoke" and Lawrence Welk. Post 48's from 20th-Fox have had only on-the-air promotion, with local stations on the network buying their own newspaper space.

It will be argued that the stars rather than the titles attract the largest home audience but a breakdown of the two-hour span by quarter hours would indicate that oldies are turned in and liked or disliked, the latter reaction resulting in progressively lower audience count. On the dramatic shows the level held fairly constant.

Here are the shows, their stars and how they were rated by Nielsen (average audience and share):

"How To Marry a Millionaire," Marilyn Monroe, Betty Grable, Lauren Bacall, 20.5-37.8.

"Snows of Kilimanjaro," Gregory Peck, Susan Hayward, 18.7-31.5.

"Titanic," Barbara Stanwyck, Clifton Webb, Robert Wagner, 20-34.2.

"Garden of Evil," Gary Cooper, Susan Hayward, 21.3-35.2.

CBS Radio Gets A Man Shoot Sponsor

American Motors Corp., on behalf of Rambler, will sponsor CBS Radio's coverage of Saturday's (27) planned orbital space shoot. Sponsor, via Geyer, Morey, Madden & Ballard, also will pick up the tab on two special programs preceding and following Lt. Col. John H. Glenn's flight.

RCA International is picking up the tab for WRUL's worldwide shortwave coverage of the orbital shot. Show will be aired in Spanish and English.

'GE Theatre' In NBC-ABC Dickers As Hour Entry

The show the network doesn't want at all anymore is wanted twice as much by the sponsor.

Longrun "GE Theatre," being bounced out of its Sunday night half hour by CBS at the end of the season, is likely to move to another network in an hour format.

General Electric and agency BBDO have been negotiating with both NBC-TV and ABC-TV about the possibility of an hour drama for next season. If the deal goes through, sponsor coin will probably remain the same as the bankroll for the CBS half hour with GE backing the new hour on an alternate basis.

JANET KERN QUITS AS CHI TV CRITIC

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Janet Kern, tv critic for the Chicago American the past 12 years, has resigned to complete a book she's been writing and to devote fulltime to lecturing and freelancing. American editor Lloyd Wendt has named Bill Irvin her successor, as of Feb. 1.

Irvin is a veteran Chicago radio-tv columnist, having worked 18 years on the old Times, and later the Sun-Times, in that capacity. He broke in as assistant to Larry Wolters, the Tribune's then radio critic, some years earlier. Irvin went to the American in 1957 to work on the picture desk, but recently he bagan writing tv pieces for the Saturday edition and video features for the Sunday paper's Leisure Magazine.

NBC's Radio Biz In 5-Month Upsurge

NBC Radio reports $6,500,000 in new and renewed advertising coin during the five months between last Aug. 1 and last Jan. 1. Bill McDaniel, exec veep over the radio web, made a point of emphasizing this was a net figure—after all discounts were taken out.

NBC Radio's 1961 profit, he said, was way ahead of 1960's. This is significant since it is known that NBC Radio showed a bit of black ink in 1960.

There were 52 advertisers who collectively supplied the $6,500,000.

'ALL THIS & MORE TO COME'

Publisher Hurls a TV Challenge

Chicago, Jan. 23.

A New England newspaper publisher today dared the tv industry to survey the public with the question: "Would you prefer television with or without commercials?"

Speaking at a session of the Newspaper Advertising Executives Society in Chicago Monday (22), J. Warren McClure, publisher of the Burlington, Vt., Free Press, declared, "Have you ever seen a consumer study sponsored by a television station or network which asked people what they thought of television advertising? Television has spent a fortune on surveys and studies to try and justify the unaudited facts about itself."

In a burst of candor, McClure admitted, "tv is here to stay," but, he continued, "television does not—nor is it ever likely to—supplant the newspaper as America's basic communications and advertising medium."

After declaring newspapers the winnah over tv in advertising effectiveness, McClure took up the case for Madison Ave.: "Sure, there have been abuses in advertising. Charges of bad taste, however, have been mostly directed against our competition—in the air. Consider this dramatic fact: when you add up all the stipulations, and discretions of advertisers generally, you will find only a minuscule, microscopic handful of violators in comparison to the billions of dollars in advertising placed by America's agencies. I doubt whether any industry the size of the advertising business can match its clean, clear, overall record."

He told the ad men that it was the newspaper industry's job to help Madison Ave. mold its true image. "What should that image be?" he asked. "I would venture to say that Madison Avenue is the nerve centre of the American economy—the avenue to prosperity . . . Remember: there is no Madison Avenue in Moscow. No free press either."

Intellectuals in Vanguard as Opposition to Israeli TV Mounts

Tel Aviv, Jan. 23.

Fifty Israeli intellectuals, among them 13 professors of the Hebrew Univ. in Jerusalem have signed a petition against tv in Israel.

The petition was submitted to a Government appointed committee, which is to decide whether to install the first tv station in Israel. The committee is studying a recommendation made by two UNESCO experts who have studied tv possibilities in Israel. They have recommended that a government owned and directed tv station should be installed, provided it will devote all its time only to educative programs. The committee will announce its decision within a few weeks. It is believed that the decision will be affirmative, despite Prime Minister Ben-Gurion's objections and despite the professors' petition.

"It is doubtful," the petition says "whether the educative possibilities of tv are worth the harm done to children, who will spend most of their time watching tv programs." Even if the committee decides in favor of television, at least Saturdays (the official day of rest in Israel) should be saved for the family's sake and no programs should be transmitted from Friday evening until Saturday evening, the professors demand.

Those who favor television even on Saturday point to the fact that the government-owned radio does transmit on Saturdays.

Meanwhile the Theatre Owners Association has started a public relation campaign against television, supported by some of the newspapers.

Iffy Status Of Boone, Brennan

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Next season's status of the stars of two highly rated programs was doubtful while negotiations are still in progress. Walter Brennan of "The Real McCoys" wants to taper off to a dozen or so shows against the 39 he's being doing for the past few years. Dick Boone's continuation in the CBS-TV Saturday night slot is not yet firmed.

Milt Grossman, agent for Boone, said that the network is "thinking" about putting another show in his time period next season. "We've got so many other deals cooking for Boone," said Grossman, "we hope he isn't back next season for CBS-TV."

Boone's pact with the network has a year to go, according to Grossman. "The only settlement

SG'S 'PICK A LETTER' CANADA PRODUCTION

Screen Gems has decided to start full production in Canada on a new five-minute vidfilm series for moppets. Fronted by cartoonist George Feyer, skein is called "Pick a Letter."

Production plans to do 26 shows in the next 10 weeks, Jean-Claude Tramont is producer-director and Charles Winter, himself a moppet personality, is writing. Tramont, with Herb Sussan, exec producer for SG in New York who is also working on "Letter," comprise the same production team now making "By Pierre Berton," another SG series now being syndied in Canada.

Rogers-Hartigan: Documentarians Who Dig World

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Helen Jean Rogers, producer-director-writer, and Bill Hartigan, a specialist with shoulder-borne sound cameras, are now comprising the first full-fledged documentary team to emerge out of the ABC-TV's "Bell & Howell Close-up" series. The duo worked together on "The Troubled Land," last year's study of the ferment among the Brazilian peasantry, and "The Remarkable Comrades," this season's report on the Italian Communist party. Now they are leaving this week for England for a one-hour wrapup of the prevailing mood in that country now that it is about to join the Common Market. It'll be telecast in April.

Hartigan, an ex-Marine cameraman who landed in a Chinese prison camp during the Korean war, is awarded the major credit for developing "Close-Up's" distinctive photographic style which prefers immediacy to pictorial polish. In transforming the camera from observer into participant, Hartigan makes his shots while carrying about 100 pounds of equipment into the hub of the crowd scenes. This has to be done as inconspicuously as possible and with a cat-like motion to minimize the bounce of the lens.

Miss Rogers and Hartigan do not purvey an optimistic view of the world in their documentaries. They show it as they see it and ABC-

FCC RESULTS ON BIG STICK POLICY

Washington, Jan. 23.

Federal Communications Commission's annual report to Congress underscores the crackdown on broadcasters with a boasting recital on how the campaign has been waged interlaced with plain implications that more is to come.

The report—first to be compiled since Chairman Newton Minow took office—begins its chapter on broadcasting with these words:

"Broadcast regulation during the year was marked by intensified Commission efforts to assure compliance with its rules and regulations, particularly in the matter of the broadcasters' responsibility to serve the public interest.

"A programming policy was enunciated, a closer check of station performance was instituted—especially at license renewal time, and special attention is being given to complaints and other indications of infractions. Stress was placed on the requirement that applicants and licensees ascertain the programming needs of their respective communities and meet them with balanced programs.

"Applicants for new stations, major changes, license renewals and transfers must now give local public notice of such intent. And hearings, insofar as possible, are held in the communities affected."

In carrying out its big stick policies, the Commission's report bragged about how for the first time in its history, it thumbed down an application solely on grounds of inadequate programming preparation. This was the June 28, 1961, turndown of Suburban Broadcasters' bid for a new FM station in Elizabeth, N.J.

The report also claimed that the public was lending its voice in increasing volume to support the more stringent broadcast policies. It said:

"Publicity given to Congressional inquiries into various broadcast practices, the Commission's programming inquiry and related actions and pronouncements, and the industry's promise and efforts to improve program content, have raised the public voice in protesting many aspects of station and network programming."

Previously disclosed in part by VARIETY, the Commission for the first time published the actual volume of protests channeled to the Commission. It recounted that during the last three months of 1960, mail received by the Complaints & Compliance Division totaled nearly 1,150 pieces—not counting 1,270 letters objecting to an NBC-TV rodeo show. For the first five months of 1961, this mail jumped to about 4,300 letters.

Further breaking it down, the report said for the eight months beginning Oct. 1, 1960, nearly 1,800 correspondents griped about program balance, individual programs, profanity, program cancellations; over 500 objected to excessive crime and violence some 390 others didn't like allegedly slanted news and editorializing; 550 complained about false or misleading commercials, lotteries, hard liquor, tobacco and underwear blurbs; about 350 complaints were lodged against contests, publicity stunts and other promotional practices; about 250 were upset about excessive length and content of commercials and 100 made allegations of payola practices against licensees.

In further recital of its crackdown, FCC said that during the fiscal year 1961, "more revocation proceedings were instituted and more renewal applications were pegged for hearings than in any other year in the Commission's history."

In addition, the report added, the Commission invoked a cease-and-desist order for the first time in a broadcast case as well as the new sanctions of shortterm renewals and fines.

NBC-TV's 16 Pilot Projects For '62-'63 Come In All Shapes, Sizes

There are at least 16 pilot projects on the NBC-TV roster for '62-'63 sale. Most of them are via coproduction setups with outside telefilmeries.

First, there is the announced "Andy Hardy" half-hour situationer being done by Metro. Metro is also up for two spinoffs from "Dr. Kildare," the regular Thursday NBC-TV hour skein. One is called "Search," and the other, said to stand an excellent chance in the web's eyes, is "The 11th Hour," a story about psychiatry fronted by Wendell Corey and due for early May exposure on "Kildare."

Bob Hope Enterprises has already supplied a 30-minute roughcut of a situationer called "Amy," with Donald Woods, Irene Hervey and a newcomer, Sharon Farrell. (Hope bought as theme song, "Once In Love With Amy.")

Jess Oppenheimer is shooting an item called "Big Brain," a situation comedy, this week. Screen Gems (see separate story) has an hour pilot called "Empire" in the works. Four Star has already lensed a 30-minute situationer with Dean Jones known as "Ensign O'Toole."

Tab Hunter Productions was assigned a pilot with Jack Carson called "Kentucky Kid," but no shooting date has been set. Ralph Edwards, who like Hunter had a show recently eliminated for the NBC sked, is doing a half-hour pilot with Richard Basehart called "Tomorrow's Newspapers."

Other pilots are "McKeever & the Colonel," 30-minuter out of Four Star; "Saint & Sinners," a spinoff from Four Star's "Dick Powell Show," which has a newspaperman format; "330 Independence Avenue," a pilot on espionage activities; Peter Tewksbury's (Revue) "Young Men" situationer; and "333 Montgomery," a legal series with Edmund O'Brien as lead, out of Metro.

There is also the 90-minute pilot in preparation to fill Wednesdays at 7:30. It will probably be by Revue. Besides the above, NBC-TV itself is planning two spinoff pilots from its hourlong "Outlaws." One is called "Daring Young Man," with Frank Telford doing production. The other, to be shortened to a half-hour by Andrew Lewis, is called "The Outpost."

SNYDER, WEDLOCK SPLIT AFTER 33 YRS.

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Comedy writing team of Howard Snyder and Hugh Wedlock is breaking up after 33 years, longest span in radio-tv history.

Wedlock has gone to N. Y. to write a stage play, telling his partner he's fed up with tv. Snyder will continue on his own and is now prepping two pilots for William Morris Agency. Split came when their option for writing "The Hathaways" expired, which was not affected by the extension granted the sponsors.

ABC Moving Up Premiere Dates; Mid-Sept. Bows

For the 1962-63 season, ABC-TV will not repeating this season's role of being the last to preem its new shows. On the theory that the firstest with the newest will be the mostest in the ratings, ABC-TV is planning to move up its preems from the first week of October to the middle of September.

Tipoff on the earlier kickoff is the fact that ABC has only bought a 24-week string of films from United Artists starting April 8, rather than adhering to the customary 26-week cycle. The last UA film will be seen on Sept. 16, permitting a Sept. 23 bow for the incoming Sunday night shows.

At the present time, ABC execs are not planning to extend the film run into next season, although sales developments may persuade them otherwise. ABC is selling minutes in the Sunday night films at a flat $31,000 for new pictures and $21,000 for repeats. The schedule calls for 15 new features and nine repeats.

There's now a good chance that the UA films will be moved into the 8:30 to 10:30 p.m. berth on Sunday nights rather than 9 to 11 p.m. It's figured that the earlier time will earn bigger audiences for what ABC execs believe to be a lineup of potent b.o. films. Earlier telecasting of the films will mean shifting of "Lawman" from 8:30 to 9 to 10:30 to 11 p.m. It's understood that R. J. Reynolds, chief sponsor of "Lawman" has okayed the switch.

PM East: More Wallace, Less Joyce Davidson

"PM East," the Westinghouse package which bows as a 90-minute stanza with the Feb. 5 show, is shifting its billing in favor of host Mike Wallace. Actual title of the new series will be "PM" starring Mike Wallace.

Joyce Davidson is continuing on the show, but her role will be as roving reporter. There was some discussion about scrapping the "PM East" title entirely and calling in the "Mike Wallace Show."

Newhart Troubles

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

After a long series of disagreements with Bob Newhart, producer Roland Kibbee and director Coby Ruskin are leaving the comedy show after two more broadcasts. Ruskin reports final break came when Newhart refused to rehearse script and insisted on cue cards for his sketches.

Show is now in its second cycle of 13 weeks and moves next week to N.Y. for guesting by Jack Paar. Ruskin said he and Kibbee would then bowout. Both have been with the Newhart show since the start of the season.

'Ben Casey,' '77' Get New Tickets

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

First renewal for a new 1961-62 series was handed to "Ben Casey," the hourlong medico series produced by Bing Crosby Productions. ABC-TV reticketed "Casey" for next semester, and at the same time renewed Warner Bros.' "77 Sunset Strip" for next season.

The medical show, regarded by many as the sleeper of the season, finishes current production of 32 segs early in May, resuming production for next semester May 21.

BCP prexy Basil Grillo has okayed preparation on next season's scripts and they're being readied by exec producer-creator James Moser and producer Mathew Rapf. Signed again for next year are Vincent Edwards, who essays title role, and Sam Jaffe and Bettye Ackerman, who also star, and Jean Wills and Ted Landers, who have stet supporting roles.

As for "77," it will be heading into its fifth year on ABC-TV.

ABC-TV Ups Worster

Merle Worster has been promoted to director of technical operations for ABC-TV, working under Frank Mark, ABC v.p. over engineering.

Worster had been manager of tv operations for the engineering department's eastern division.

WCBS-TV's Highest Yet Per-Pic Price in $1,000,000 7 Arts Deal

WCBS-TV, the New York CBS flag, has reportedly paid in excess of $1,000,000 for the 41 picture in the latest batch of post-'48 Warner Bros. releases. Breaking down to approximately $25,000 per feature, this is at least $3,500 higher than the per pic price paid by rival WOR-TV not too many months ago for 30 Metro films.

The $25,000-plus price-tag is the highest ever paid in a given market for a feature film, it is understood. It wasn't too many years ago that observers could recall when $10,000 was a record price to pay for a pic in N.Y., which is the top-paying market in the country, but the post-'48s have really opened up new price vistas to the major distribs.

Seven Arts Associated is the distributor of Volume III of the Warners catalog which is what WCBS-TV bought. Seven Arts was initially asking $30,000 per pic, it is reported. And WOR-TV was from the very outset willing to pay a flat $25,000 for a seven-year deal, which is probably what CBS has. WNBC-TV was in the running too, wanting to use the films in its latenight Saturday slot, after the NBC-TV feature films, and the NBC flag in N.Y. was interested in paying at least as much as either of its two rivals.

Seven Arts lists all the films as post-'50s. Included in the package is "April In Paris," "Battle Cry," "Big Jim McLain," "Boy From Oklahoma," "Calamity Jane," "Dallas," "The Easy Way," "Great Jewel Robbery," "House of Wax," "Iron Mistress," "Jazz Singer," "King Richard & The Crusaders," "Them," "Miracle of Fatima," "Mr. Roberts," "Strangers," "Sea Chase," "South Sea Woman," "Stage Fright," "Strange Lady in Town," "The Wrong Man" and "Young Man With a Horn."

Considering it's quite possible not all 41 films will be shown by WCBS-TV on its premium "Late Show," observers tend to feel that the price, if amortized on the basis of per pic usage, will run considerably higher than just $25,000.

Duck Pins Seek Comeback Via TV

Pittsburgh, Jan. 23.

The Duck Pin Bowling Assn. has hopes of bowling over the 10-pin industry and is going for the first strike in Pittsburgh via tv.

The duck pinners, whose pitch is the smaller ball and smaller pins with emphasis on the younger sports in the bowling set, are bankrolling a series on WIIC-TV, "Duck Pin Derby," from the Whitehall Bowling Lanes in Pittsburgh. An Association spokesman says the show will be the basis for an all-out promotion to bring back the popularity of the duck pin game.

"Derby" will be devoted to youngsters 18 years old and under with three age divisions of competition. Kids wanting to register for the show must go to a duck pin lane and qualify by bowling three games.

Mutual's Norman Baer Sparks KHJ Formula

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Norman Baer, director of news for Mutual Broadcasting System, has been assigned to cover KHJ under the reaffiliation of the station with Mutual, it was revealed by Mutual president Robert Hurleigh. Baer will work closely with the existing KHJ staff to aid in dissemination of the Mutual service.

Affiliation became effective Jan. 1, reestablishing an association that existed from 1937 to August, 1959, when the station left Mutual. Under new deal, which constitutes a time swap, Mutual sells the half-hour and KHJ the hour slots, with station allowed to draw on Mutual's 36 news broadcasts a day. Mutual offers five minutes of top name newscasters on the half hour. Deal will give KHJ worldwide coverage of news, including live extraction, excerpt material of actual news personalities' voices (Churchill, Kennedy, etc.) and closed circuit services on an immediate-available basis.

WABC Gets AM Rights For Mets Ballcasts

WABC Radio, N. Y. flagship of the ABC Radio web, will be transmitting the New York Mets baseball games this season and next under a two-year deal signed last week. Sponsor is Rheingold and deal was made via J. Walter Thompson. Lindsey Nelson and Bob Murphy will be covering the games for both radio and tv. WABC began carrying promos about Mets coverage 10 minutes after the deal was locked up last Wednesday.

WOR-TV will be carrying the Mets' games on television.

Hub's WNAC-TV on Cultural Kick

Boston, Jan. 23.

WNAC-TV has embarked on a cultural kick in which it will show opera and art films. Bill McCormick, president of WNAC-TV, laid out the new programming at a press luncheon in the Ritz Carlton, kicking off the 1962 season.

Starting last Sunday the station opened its opera televising with "The Golden World of Opera," starting with "Lucia di Lammermoor" with Nelli Caradi and Alfred Poli, from 2 to 4 p.m., continuing through spring.

At 5:30 p.m. on Sundays, WNAC-TV is programming strong films, with a two-hour "Sunday Movie Spectacular" preempting "Maverick" on the web at 6:30 p.m. Preeming the series is "The High and the Mighty," with John Wayne and Claire Trevor. Films following will be art films from the station's newly-acquired Seven Arts package plus MGM and NTA films.

Most drastic change is station's Monday through Friday daytime sked.

Louise Morgan moves from 1 p.m. to follow Jack Lalanne's exercise show from 9:30 to 10 a.m. The "Jane Wyman Show" from ABC-TV follows at 10 a.m. and "Cinema Showcase" moves up to 1 to 2:30 p.m. Starting Friday (19) at 9 p.m., the area's Volkswagen dealers present once a month the new factual documentary, "Perspective on Greatness." Preem is the life story of Al Smith. "The Man From Oliver Street." WOR-TV, RKO General's New York station is also programming "The Golden World of Opera" and "Perspective on Greatness."

Nat Gassman, prexy of BCG Films, which distributes "Perspective" came to Boston last week for a special screening for the press at WNAC-TV. Another program set for prime evening time showing on WNAC-TV is "Space Flight," produced by RKO General's pubaffairs. This will be skedded some time in early '62. McCormick said. "Expedition Boston," which is one of McCormick's brainchilds, a positive picture of facets of life in Boston, will be promoted to a once a month prime evening time before January is out. It has been on from 6:30 to 7 p.m. every third Wednesday, alternating with ABC-TV's "Expedition."

Nix TV-Radio Shows For Pitt. Ball Players

Pittsburgh, Jan. 23.

Members of the Pittsburgh Pirates, world baseball champions in 1960, have been informed that they will no longer be permitted to have their own radio or tv shows. Last year Dick Groat and Bob Friend had radio shows and Don Hoak had his own tv show with Bob Prince called "Tiger by the Tail." Hoak is known as the "Tiger" to the fans and his teammates.

The ban was made by general manager Joe L. Brown to cut down on outside activities by the Pirates, who had a bad year last year. Spot appearances on tv or on the banquet circuit will not be affected.

Cantinflas Vidfilm Series Pushed Anew; Aim at Global Spread

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

They are trying to lure Cantinflas (Mario Moreno) to accept a television contract again. This time writer and producer Julio Narvaez has come up with a series more in keeping with comic's talents and stipulations for a quality production.

Cantinflas is being offered starring role in an initial series of 13 videotapes, in which he would enact role of a vagabond, happy-go-lucky, short on cash man of the streets who encounters a thousand and one vicissitudes and misadventures in different parts of the republic.

Lure offered to Cantinflas is that series would be distributed worldwide, not only plug him but tourist attractions of Mexico. Comic has been and is a one-man propagandist for his country.

Only drawback is that comic would have to continue on with series envisaged as a continuous effort. Also pay offered for initial stanzas is modest, a mere $14,000. Comic has not committed himself to an outright refusal, but his other contracts may make it impossible for him to accept the offer.

There is some talk of interesting an American tv producer to make series a truly major production and achieve widespread international production.

CBS Pubaffairs To New Zealand

The New Zealand Broadcasting Service became the fifth foreign telecaster to purchase, as a package, the major portion of the news and pubaffairs programming produced by CBS News.

In addition, NZBS bought a large program roster from CBS Films. The buy, one of the largest to date for New Zealand, includes eight entertainment series. Telecasting rights include Auckland, Christ Church, Dunedin and Wellington. Shows are "Rawhide," "Perry Mason," "Brothers Brannigan," "Whirlybirds," "Richard Diamond," and "Trackdown," among others.

Included in the CBS News program package are "CBS Reports," "Twentieth Century," "Eyewitness," "Great Challenge," At the Source," and "Accent," as well as special programs produced by CBS News. NZBS will select from these programs and schedule them on a weekly basis.

Other countries in which CBS Films has concluded similar arrangements for CBS News programs are England (British Broadcasting Corp.), Australia (Australian Broadcasting Commission), Japan, (Tokyo Broadcasting System) and the Philippines (Inter-Island Broadcasting Corp.). Similar contracts, with some modifications, have been written with Rediffusion Hong Kong, Ltd., Sveriges Radio and TV in Sweden and Statsradiofonin TV in Denmark.

'ALCOA PREMIERE' SET DOWN UNDER

Sydney, Jan. 23.

ATN, top Sydney commercial station, has signatured Fred Astaire's "Alcoa Premiere" series for the key 8 p.m. Sabbath viewing. Astaire is well known here via his visit with Stanley Kramer's team filming "On The Beach," plus his purchase of Aussie racehorses.

ATN is also setting a new revue under the title of "Revue 62." Station's N. Y. reps are presently dating U. S. talent for preem here Feb. 18. It was ATN that featured here last year such talent as Billy Daniels, Molly Bee, Dave Barry, Neil Sedaka, Margaret Whiting and Paul Gilbert.

With this territory now only 20 flying hours from the U. S., talent is ready to make the Aussie trip for tv and nightclub dates on a limited stopover.

Other top shows hooked by ATN include "Checkmate," "Frontier Circus," "The Horsetrader," "Counterthrust" and "The Johnny O'Keefe Show."

Larry Haeg: 'Most Stations Only Interested In Fast Rating, Fast Buck

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Larry Haeg, general manager of WCCO Radio, Minneapolis, told the advertising trade here that most radio stations in the country "do not deserve to be perpetuated with your advertising dollars." While making a case for the effectiveness of quality radio as an ad medium, he said to the Chi Broadcast Advertising Club last week, "If I were in your position . . . I would not spend a single nickel of advertising on at least half the radio stations in this country."

The stations Haeg referred to were those which "are nothing more than licensed jukeboxes, whose managements' chief concern is oscillating constantly between the fast rating and the fast buck." He said, "These stations serve neither the interest, convenience and necessity of the listener nor of the advertiser. The most unfortunate part of the situation is that these stations occupy the majority of our frequencies."

A station that is Number One, he noted, ought to be first not only in ratings but in service as well, and by every measure of quality. This could never be the case with a station that is staffed by a few disk jockeys and a fleet of salesmen, he pointed out.

He urged the agency people to select stations with care, buying only those that offered the quantity of a good cumulative audience (indicative of acceptance) and the quality that comes from "a solid philosophy of service." The service, he said, must be there every day. Haeg further stated that the quality station, unlike the "fast rating" station, tends to set up "the best possible climate for sales."

33 Japanese Properties For Interlingual Int'l

Interlingual International, which claims to be the top distributor of foreign tv program material in Japan, acquired 33 different properties for that market during the year just ended. Properties ranged from "Untouchables" to features to cartoons.

List of properties acquired by Interlingual during '61 for the Japanese market included "Peter Gunn," "The Rebel," "You Asked for It," "Superman," "DuPont Theatre," "Brave Eagle," "Whiplash," "Popeye," Alexander Korda features, "Felix the Cat" and "Clutch Cargo."

FCC Stands Pat on Crosley Indpls. Nix

Washington, Jan. 23.

Federal Communications Commission has moved to reaffirm its decision withdrawing the grant of Indianapolis Channel 13 from Crosley Broadcasting Corp.

FCC announced that the staff had been instructed to draft orders denying Crosley's petition for reconsideration of the decision. The case was sent back to FCC by U. S. Court of Appeals here on grounds Commissioner T. A. M. Craven, whose ballot swung the grant to Crosley was directed to vote by FCC General Counsel, having held off previously because his engineering firm had been retained by Crosley.

Although the Commission's announcement of the staff instructions doesn't technically amount to the final rejection, ordinarily such moves aren't announced unless the Commission has made up its mind with some certainty.

Following a final rejection of Crosley's plea for a reopening of the case, the firm may take an appeal to federal court.

CHI WBBM-TV SETS APPRENTICE PROJECTS

Chicago, Jan. 23.

WBBM-TV is cooperating with Northwestern University's speech department in affording on-the-job experience to seniors majoring in television. The CBS o&o is creating four apprentice projects, one for each quarter of the school year, to which an NU student will be assigned. He'll earn 12 units of credit at school and will be expected to produce a paper on a specific aspect of the station operation.

First student in the practical training program started at WBBM-TV last week and was assigned to the program department for a period of three months. During that time he'll work variously in the production, film, operations and public affairs sections—gratis, of course.

McCarthy's TV Look-See In Africa, Middle East

John G. McCarthy, prexy of Television Program Export Assn., is on a tour of Africa and the Middle East for a first-hand appraisal of the status of tv there and its potential growth.

On his tour, he plans to establish permanent reporting posts to keep up with tv developments there. Prior to leaving, McCarthy estimated that the populous large area has only about 75,000 receiving sets covered by approximately 15 stations.

Murphy Buy Okayed

Washington, Jan. 23.

Morgan Murphy newspaper-broadcasting chain has won Federal Communications Commission's okay of its multi-million dollar buy of KXLY-AM-FM-TV, Spokane, from KELP Television Corp. One protesting vote was cast by Commissioner Robert Bartley who wanted a further inquiry into the sale.

Les Lear Series For Syndication

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Les Lear, who had produced "Welcome Travelers" from 1947 to 1955 on several different networks, both radio and tv, is planning to create "a sequel" to the old show for tv syndication next fall. It's intended as a daytime entry.

Lear is planning to call the new series "Stopover," because the "Welcome Travelers" title belongs to Procter & Gamble, which had sponsored it all eight years. Basic idea of "WT" will be retained, namely that there are some interesting stories to be gleaned from the estimated 100,000 traveling persons who stop off between planes or trains in Chicago each day. Per the old format, four basic types will be represented in each segment. Lear calls them "The Extrovert," "The Offbeat Character," "The Sympathy Case" and "The Star." As before, they'll get gifts for telling stories on the show.

Host for the new series hasn't been decided upon as yet. Tommy Bartlett had been the greeter-interviewer on "Travelers." The P&G-sponsored show had started on ABC Radio, switched to NBC Radio two years later, then (in 1953) was simulcast on NBC-AM-TV, and moved over to CBS-TV in 1954. It fizzled out after it had moved from Chi to New York.

BBC-TV Enterprises Names del Strother

London, Jan. 23.

Greeve del Strother has been named assistant general manager of BBC-TV Enterprises, the organization within the web which is helmed by Ronald Waldman, and handles sales of the Corporation's programs in overseas markets. Sandy Callum, who joined BBC from the Rank Organization more than a year ago, has been promoted to sales manager.

BBC-TV Enterprises was set up just under two years ago under the title of BBC Promotions, and has pioneered the distribution of the network's product in most world territories.

HAZARDS OF TV CARTOONERY

That Hub Bookie Raid-New Chapter

Boston, Jan. 23.

Latest chapter in the continuing reaction from CBS-TV's documentary "Biography of a Bookie Joint," blacked out in Boston and yet to be shown to citizens of this area, brought about a first for tv in the Hub and shook up the Massachusetts Legislature.

A House Rules Committee hearing Thursday (18), at which Rep. Harrison Chadwick (R.) was called to account for his televised charges against his colleagues on the national tv show, was televised by WHDH-TV, CBS affiliate in Boston, marking the first time in this state that a legislative hearing has been covered by tv cameras.

WHDH-TV, using four cameras, at the 900-seat Gardner end in the state house covered the hearing for four hours and 10 minutes and reran it same night from 11:15 to 3:25 a.m., preempting some $10,000 worth of time including the Jack Paar show.

The station also fed the show to WLLP-TV, Channel 22; and WHYN-TV, Channel 40; both in Springfield, Mass. A team, headed by Les Arries, director of WHDH-TV; Robert Cheyne, promotion director; Joseph Levine, news director; John Day, pubaffairs director; with Bok Kinkead on production; George St. Andre, engineering supervisor; Jack Hynes and Jim Harrington, announcing and interviewing; set up the show after the station had received permission to televise from the speaker of the house, John F. Thompson.

The point of the hearing was to determine whether or not Chadwick maligned the Massachusetts Legislature in making his bookie-legislators link remarks on the CBS-TV documentary.

The televised proceedings had all the drama of some of the famous national tv hearings with frequent sharp verbal clashes between Chadwick and committee counsel Harold Katz.

TV scored a big victory with the first televised hearing in the state. Hub tv critics gave the show rave reviews for camera work, scope, interviews and attention to detail. Many legislators who did not want to take the time to sit through the lengthy session watched it on a tv set in the House cloakroom.

CBS o&o's Pubaffairs Contrib Totes up to $15,000,000 for '61

The five CBS-TV o&o stations allocated approximately $15,000,000 in time and facilities to the area of local pubaffairs programming during '61, according to a CBS tabulation. The allocation, it was stated, was an increase of more than $1,000,000 over the previous year.

The $15,000,000 for the five o&o's includes eight hour-long documentaries which were aired in prime time preempting network programs. Eight additional prime time documentaries were not included in this figure as they were fully sponsored.

In addition to the 60-minute presentations, stations broadcast six 30-minute documentaries on a variety of local issues. Other programs included in the figure are appearances by civic and political leaders, time donated for charity appeals, a telethon in Chicago and the extensive regularly-scheduled weekly series produced in cooperation with local groups.

In the educational programming area, the five stations produced a total of 14 weekly half-hour series, drawing upon the staff facilities of area colleges, schools and educational associations. Groups included the Board of Education in New

Remco TV Budget Over $1,000,000

Remco Industries, toy and games manufacturer, has increased its spring and summer tv budget for '62 to over $1,000,000.

Remco has just signed a deal for a 15-minute segment on CBS-TV's "Video Village, Junior Edition" series. Toy and game outfit already is a 52-week advertiser on NBC-TV's Shari Lewis outing.

In addition to its web campaign, 20 major markets have been bought for an extensive 52-week local spot campaign. The spots are being slotted in the 5 to 7 p.m. children's programming bloc.

This combination of local and network tv will run until September of this year when an additional $1,780,000 will be poured into a total of 65 local markets, additional participations in network shows and once again, sponsorship of Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade on NBC-TV. Plans are currently in works for supplementing the tv advertising with a heavy print campaign. Agency for Remco is Webb Associates.

U.S. Hearing Highlights' Set As WNEW-TV Entry

The "U.S. Hearing Highlights" package has been bought by WNEW-TV in N.Y. and as the kickoff entry the station will be devoting a one-hour show to the hearings of the FCC on television network programming which opened in Washington yesterday (Tues.). Show will be telecast Sunday night from 11 p.m. to midnight.

Produced by G. Bennett Larson with Clark R. Mollenhoff as editor and commentator, series will cover other top D.C. hearings to be held by Congressional Committees or other Governmental bodies such as the FCC.

Block-Booking On Pre-'48s To Supreme Court

The Supreme Court will hear the pros and cons of the anti-block booking order issued by U.S. District Judge D. J. Dawson against six distributors of pre-1948 feature films for television.

Both Justice Dept. and five of the six distributors (National Telefilm is not appealing) appealed the order. Justice, which sought the ban on block-booking claims Dawson's order isn't strong enough, while the distributors say it goes too far.

Justice Dept., citing the Paramount decree against block-booking of films for theatrical exhibition as a precedent, takes issue with Dawson's reasoning that while the practice is illegal per se, it's okay to offer films in a package or block "on a temporary basis." In its brief filed with the high court last fall, Justice Attorneys said:

"The anticompetive impact of block-booking is precisely the same whether or not the seller indicates he may sell the tied films separately if they cannot be sold as a package to anyone in the same market."

The Government urged strongly for tightening of Dawson's anti-trust order lest block-booking be established in the increasingly important field of post-48 films. Justice is plugging for sale on a picture-by-picture for television.

SOME MAKE IT BIG, MOST DON'T

Like no other branch in the syndie biz, there are the have and have-nots in cartoons. The popular ones make it big, the others are drowned in red ink.

According to cartoon distributors, other phases of syndication, half-hour vidfilms or features, for example, don't have that have or have-not cleavage looming so large. Other syndie phases, it's said, have shaken down to when some rule of thumb is applicable virtually to all entries.

A generalized approach to syndie cartoon distribution is hazardous. Stations across the country are said to be increasing their kiddie time blocs, the showcases for cartoons both old or new. These kiddie time blocs, according to reports, are well heeled with sponsor coin. Yet, in the season winding up, quite a number of freshly made-for-tv cartoon entries have failed to get off the ground.

This seeming anomaly is explained by the no-hit climate in the market-by-market field. If the new entry is an unknown quantity, without a pop character of today or yesterday, station buyers are wary. The comparitively expensive new entry must compete against current faves and the large pool of old cartoons. Then, the sale "must be by the bushelful" and that's an impossible way to come out ahead on most new packages.

The have-not wail is offset by the hoorahs coming from the successes. Winners include the Hanna-Barbera trio for Kellogg, sold on a national spot basis; "Popeyes," the newies from King. Features continuing the success of the sailor vaultees; "Mr. Magoo" and "Dick Tracy" from Television Personalities; "Bozo, the Clown," "Deputy Dawg," and others.

In the off-network field, ABC Films is doing fine with "Casper, the Friendly Ghost & Co." CBS Films is out in the market with "Tom Terrific," which had a long ride on "Captain Kangeroo."

There will be a good deal of interest in the syndie play to the nighttime cartoon network series which in their first season splurge failed to make it for the most part. It's been a syndie truism that the network clinkers usually are clinkers in syndie, too. Whether that truism will be upset remains to be seen.

One of the pioneers in the made-for-tv syndie cartoon field other than the H-B "Huckleberry Hound," is Trans-Lux's "Felix the Cat." The successful "Felix" formula seems to apply to such entries as "Popeye," "Magoo" and "Tracy." That formula is to take an established cartoon character with a pre-sold following and fashion the series. The big exception to the rule, of course, is "Huckleberry Hound," which spawned "Yogi Bear" and "Quick Draw McGraw." The lone nighttime network success, "The Flint-

STILL LOTSA CHI IN DREIER'S FUTURE

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Alex Dreier and the management of Chicago station WBKB-TV are trying to spike a rumor circulating along Madison and Michigan Aves. that the newscaster is going to leave the Windy City soon to settle in San Francisco. Apparently it is causing some concern with his present sponsors and prospective ones.

Dreier has a contract with WBKB that runs through 1962 and says he has every intention of renewing for five more years in 1963 if things continue to go as they have been. Sterling (Red) Quinlan, veep in charge of the ABC station, says the feeling is mutual in re the contract renewal.

Monte Carlo TV Festival Building Into Event of Stature, Though Lots Of Kinks Still to Be Ironed Out

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Monte Carlo, Jan. 23.

The Monte Carlo International Television Festival just concluded, looks to emerge as the one most likely to build a true worldly flavor as soon as some kinks are ironed out.

Sixty two tv shows, mainly films with four taped entries and some kinescopes from 15 countries, competed in the Monte Carlo affair which ran from Jan. 6-14 but handed out its awards at a gala Wed. (17) with noted Italo pic director-actor Vittorio De Sica doing the honors in the presence of Prince and Princess Rainier. Yanks took two of the nine official prizes with five going to Eastern Bloc countries and one each to France and Japan.

Main kink was the abstention of the European Television Union countries, that is the state tv branches of France, Italy, Belgium, West Germany and Great Britain and others. But this will probably be solved next year with the ETU participating. It was felt somewhat strange since Monte Carlo is so integral a part of France. But Britain and France had films via private vidpic companies.

ETU reportedly has held out since it prefers to back its own fests, namely Eurovision and the Prix Italia, and does not want to compete with non-network entries. But at fest's end it seemed this would be ironed out next year.

With no axe to grind, except perhaps the usual touristic and publicity pitch, Monte Carlo looms a perfect place for a winter tv fest. It has the hotel facilities, theatres and its own tv setup for technical aspects, plus weather and a wide open policy and a shrewd mixture of jury people from many of the performing arts.

There is no gainsaying the great importance of video as a new show biz arm and cultural innovation

Len Schlosser To WBBM As Program Director

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Len Schlosser, who has been working on special programs for CBS Radio's owned-stations division in New York, will return to WBBM here on Feb. 1 in a new capacity, as program director. He'll replace Art Thorsen, who left the station the first of the year.

Schlosser had been pubaffairs director for the Chi station until 1960, when he was transferred to Gotham to work on CBS' "Dimension" series. Recently he completed a seven-part documentary for the owned stations, "How Serious the Challenge." In his previous tenure with WBBM, he gained homeoffice recognition for producing "Summer Night at Ravinia," "Lyric Opera Broadcasts," and "Ballad for the North and South," a special which was rebroadcast on the network.

In his new capacity, Schlosser will be in direct charge of pubaffairs as well as all other programming activities.

'Special of Week' As Sterling Entry; 26 Full-Hr. Shows

Sterling Television is packaging "The Special of the Week," a series of 26 one-hour specials to be sold in syndication, for telecasting starting in the fall.

The ambitious project grew out of the need for a residual market for the network and non-network specials produced by David Wolper and Sol Turrel. Latter is prexy of Sterling.

Individual specials already slated in the package include "Hollywood: The Golden Years," "Legend of Valentino," "Biography of a Rookie," and a visit to Paris helmed by Maurice Chevalier and Fernandel. There also will be an updated version of "The Race for Space," and the upcoming Wolper entries, "Invasion," dealing with D-Day, and "Story of Hong Kong," both slated for "DuPont Show of the Week." In addition, Sterling is negotiating for a pic, "White Steed," to be included in the package.

A prominent host will be cast.

TAC LIBRARY GETS 'SOVIET TIMETABLE'

Salt Lake City, Jan. 23.

"Soviet Timetable," vidtaped pubaffairs show made by KCPX-TV in cooperation with the Utah National Guard, has been accepted by Television Affiliates Corp. (TAC) for their library.

TAC, a Trans-Lux subsid, is a clearing house for distribution of locally produced tv programs throughout the country.

"Soviet Timetable" advises people of the facts about the inroads that communism has made in America and suggests how America can retaliate. Program also is the story of the Freedom Academy in Utah where high school student leaders learn about Americanism.

French Line Buys Citron

The French Line has bought a 13-week schedule on the Casper Citron show on WRFM, N.Y., to promote the launching of its newest ocean liner, the S.S. France.

Business was placed through N. W. Ayer.

Schaefer Loves Late Show Pix

F. M. Schaefer has renewed its deal with WCBS-TV, N.Y., for single sponsorship of from six to nine pix in 1962, to be slotted in the "Late Show" time period.

Kickoff pic will be Gary Cooper starrer "Cloak and Dagger" on Feb. 21, on the eve of Washington's Birthday. Other pix in "Schaefer Award Theatre" will be keyed to holiday eve presentations whenever possible, as in the past.

Deal, set through BBD&O, marks the fourth year for "Schaefer Award Theatre" on WCBS-TV. Four films were shown the first year, 1959, six in 1960 and nine in 1961. Current deal is for six pix, to be selected from the station's big cinematic library, and an option for three others.

The highest rated film in the series so far was Schaefer's preem presentation, on Thanksgiving Eve of 1959, when "Sergeant York," starring Gary Cooper, registered an Arbitron of 30.0. That figure represents the second-highest rating ever attained by a pic on WCBS-TV, exceeded only by the 32.3 achieved by "The Late Show's" "Unconquered," also starring Cooper.

Cooper is one of the three "most seen" star in the Schaefer series. Late actor has been in four "Schaefer Award" films. The others, with three titles apiece, were Tyrone Power and Cary Grant. Cooper's average rating for his three films was 23.1; Grant's was 21.5, and Power's 21.3.

Altogether there have been 11 Schaefer presentations with a rating of 20.0 or better.

Young People's Concert

It's always a delight to the eyes and ears to have Leonard Bernstein conduct the N. Y. Philharmonic Young People's Concert. There may be some question as to the selections, the technical explanations of the music, but there's no question that before the hour expires the viewer's musical experience has been enriched.

For his last outing on CBS-TV, Thursday (18), Bernstein explored the Parisian influence on three composers, George Gershwin, Ernest Bloch and Manuel de Falla. It was a fascinating excursion in cultural interaction, as Bernstein explained and offered examples of how the Parisian influences was reflected in the works of the three composers.

Following the exposition, the N. Y. Philharmonic played the full rendition of Gershwin's "An American in Paris," Bloch's "Schelomo," and de Falla's "Three Cornered Hat." Canadian-born cellist Zara Nelsova was featured in the "Schelomo" number.

Producer-director Roger Englander handled the cameras with care and dexterity. As usual, the faces of the youngsters as they listened to the music was a definite plus on the home screens. Haro.

CBS Reports

If all the people who should have been interested had watched CBS-TV's telementary, "The Fat American," the hour would have had an audience of about 50,000,000. That's about one out of every three Americans, the number that the show, scripted and hosted by CBS newsman Harry Reasoner, declared as overweight.

The "CBS Report" stanza, aired Thursday (18) at 10 p.m., was a thorough and interesting job with light as well as serious moments. On the light side, there was the filming of a session of the Calorie Counters org of Queens, L. I., with a bevy of hefty chicks singing about and discussing their weight problems. Their approach to the evils of overeating was like a parody on Alcoholics Anonymous, and the Greater New York accents must have been bewildering to many western viewers. The Reasoner script kept the study from becoming weighted down with statistics and medical jargon with a touch of levity here and there and such illustrations as the fact that it takes 15 minutes of tennis to work off the calores in one martini.

Experts in the fields of medicine, psychology and nutrition abounded, and the second part of the show was devoted primarily to the battle between the dairy industry and that segment of medical profession that links fatty foods with heart disease. Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman, sounded slightly hysterical himself when he called the medical findings a "scare," and warned that if the public continued to lay off dairy products the government would have to buy them up at high cost. CBS had fun with that one, setting it against some shots of soldiers in the chow line, preparing to sup on a new government-ordered diet that specified margarine instead of butter. Bill.

Du Pont Show of the Week

The flavor of the Big Top was excellently captured in "Circus," the Du Pont Show of the Week's offering on NBC-TV Sunday (21). Through the script, by Richard Hanser and Bill Ballantine, the narration of vet clown Emmett Kelly, and a camera that continually moved in the right directions, the circus and the people who make it up came alive. Show rates a repeat at an earlier hour so the kiddies, who were probably asleep at Du Pont's 10 p.m. kickoff time, can savor some of the magic.

The approach was wide-eyed but it never got overly sentimental. More could have been done with the performers, as was done with La Norma, revealing her innermost thoughts as she cavorted on the high bar but what was done was fine and revealing as far as it went.

The circus in action, whether it was with the performers under the tent or the hands striking the big top for a move to the next town, created a captivating image. Most of the program's punch came in the first half hour but even the last half, which seemed a little repetitious at times, redeemed itself with some excellent shots of the Flying Alexanders at work.

Most of the program was done with Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus whose people rate a bow for cooperating with the NBC-TV crew so well. Donald B. Hyatt, producer-director, is also to be commended for presenting a show that was virtually an Annie Oakley to the circus and more. Gros.

Cain's Hundred

After a faltering getaway last fall, "Cain's Hundred" has shaken down into a sharply executed action stanza, ranking in the same league with any of the other one-hour crime-busting series now on network television. Last Tuesday's (16) outing on NBC-TV was a sample of this show's strong casting and headlong pacing. If the scripts are somewhat sketchy in their black-and-white tones and if star Mark Richman's performance is moralistically grim as the implacable guardian of the law, this is par for the course.

Titled "The Debasers," last week's show was pegged to a publisher of pornography, in itself a daringly racy idea for tv. As it worked out, however, the story pursued a safe course of depicting the pornographer's attempt to achieve respectability. En route, some barbs were thrown at corrupt public relations operators and newspaper columnists who were on the racketeer's payroll. But Nicholas Cain, ex-mouthpiece for the syndicate and now an operative for some unspecified Government agency, exposes the culprit, notching another step forward in his campaign to knock off the nation's 100 top mobsters, hence the title of the series, "Cain's Hundred."

Cast of "The Debasers" was marked by solid performances by Neville Brand, as the tough pornographer, and Robert Vaughn, as his slick publicist. Marsha Hunt played Brand's remorseful wife competently. Herm.

WCBS-TV Views the Press

CBS' Moscow correspondent Marvin Kalb drew a profile of the Soviet press on Sunday's (21) outing of "WCBS-TV Views the Press." Kalb's profile completed a three-part study of the foreign press, the other chapters of previous Sundays devoted to England and France, handled by CBS correspondents in those countries.

Kalb's analysis was a primer in the way Pravda, Izvestia, and the Soviet news agency Tass handles news. His examination stressed the uniformity found in the newspapers of Russia, the absence of dissent, the propaganda function of all news. By indirection at one point, he showed how a foreign correspondent tries and sometimes succeeds in anticipating Soviet foreign policy by adept reading of Soviet newspapers. To the uninitiated, the 15 minutes proved to be a good, articulate basic analysis; to the more sophisticated, it was a reminder of the rigidity and conformity of Russia's top press organs. Horo.

Bell Telephone Hour

Andres Segovia bowed on the "Bell Telephone Hour" last Friday night (19) with a couple of delicately wrought guitar pieces which were among the highlights of the stanza. For a "pops" series, this show manages to mix a considerable amount of serious music into its offerings and Segovia's performance, staged without adornment, was a sample of how palatable and longhair repertory can be made.

Most of the other guests were all on this series before, including ballet stars Maria Tallchief and Erik Bruhn, film songstress Jane Powell and singers Sally Ann Howes and Earl Wrightson. The Chad Mitchell Trio opened the hour with a fresh group of folk songs excellently handled, Miss Powell closed the show with a brace of pop standards done with the assistance of a dance troupe in elaborately staged production numbers. Herm.

FOCUS
With James Whitmore, Coleen Dewhurst, Tom Bosley, Betty Field, Arthur Hill, Zack Matalon, Nathaniel Frey, Howard Freeman; Alexander Scourby, narrator
Executive producer: Doris Ann
Producers: Milton E. Krents, Fielder Cook
Director: Cook
Adaptation: S. Lee Pogostin
60 Mins., Sun. (21), 5 p.m.
NBC-TV, from N.Y. (tape)

NBC-TV's 60-minute "Focus" presentation on Sunday afternoon (21) represented the first major attempt to translate Arthur Miller to the tv screen. Produced in cooperation with the American Jewish Committee's Institute of Human Relations, with S. Lee Pogostin doing the adaption and with Fielder Cook as director, Miller's novel about anti-Semitism in a middle-class N.Y. (Queens) neighborhood was converted into a live-on-tape production with a cast comprising James Whitmore, Coleen Dewhurst, Tom Bosley, Betty Field and Arthur Hill, among others, with Alexander Scourby supplying narration.

As an instrument of propaganda, this tv version of "Focus" delivered its message, if ineptly. As tv drama it left much to be desired. Granted that Miller's subject is timeless; that prejudice and fanaticism in one form or another (be it anti-Semitism, anti-Negro or anti-anything) is as prevelent today as when Miller wrote it back in '45, yet the feeling was inescapable to the viewer that the method of exposition was dated.

At best propaganda is not easily translatable into drama fare. In novel form there is ample opportunity to give it an in-depth treatment to provide motivation, background, etc, and also to develop characterization. At no time did any of the characters come to life. They spouted their prejudices and niggardly beliefs, but these came out only as words. In fact both Whitmore and Miss Dewhurst as the unfortunate Gentiles who happened to look Jewish seemed to be acting as separate individuals, physically stiff and unfeeling. The same could be said for Tom Bosley as the chief hoodlum and Betty Field as the mother. They said their pieces but didn't communicate as people.

The artifice of introducing narration with the statement that, in effect, "this is somebody else's neighborhood, not yours," certainly wasn't powerful enough in itself to make up for what the play lacked. Perhaps in Pogostin's mind this was the point on which to focus, yet the play itself came off as defeatist. Propaganda to be highly effective must either blast its message home so hard as to pack an emotional wallop, or must show an attempt to fight or correct the evil. The weaklings in this tv "Focus" did nothing but save their own skin. In the Miller original it ended on a more positive, hopeful note. Rose.

THE WORLD OF JIMMY DOOLITTLE
With Alexander Scourby, narrator
Producer-Director: Eugene Jones
Writer: Joseph Liss
60 Mins., Thurs. (18), 8:30 p.m.
PUREX
NBC-TV (film)

(Edward H. Weiss)

NBC-TV's special projects unit hit a high spot with its "World Of . . ." series last Thursday (18) in a warm, highly professional portrait of an American hero, Jimmy Doolittle.

Taking old newsfilms, it traced the airman's history from his early flights down to World War II. Second half of the filmed stanza was made up of candid glances at the 65-year-old general's busy life today. Timeliness was obvious, with the Don Hyatt special projects crew making a point of bringing Doolittle's contributions right up to the present era of space rocketry and the man shoot.

Writer Joseph Liss tends to be reverential and a mite sentimental in treating figures in contemporary history, but he still arranged his material so that any viewer could feel he really knew Doolittle after the 60-minutes were up. The airman was strong, active and purposeful and decent to the core.

PERSONAL APEARANCE
(Trad with a Twist)
With Chris Barber's Jazz band, Ottilie Patterson, Chubby Checker, Terry Lightfoot and his New Orleans Jazzmen, The Viscounts, Linda Scott, The Galliards, Kathy Stobart, Betty Smith, Ronnie Scott, Tommy Whittle, Back O' Town Syncopators, Original Downtown Syncopators, Peter Knight Orch, Gary Marshal
Producer: Ann Suudi
Director: Philip Casson
60 Mins., Wed., 8:00 p.m.
Granada-TV, from Manchester

Granada-TV snapped up Chubby Checker to guestar in this musical bash in an effort to bring the show in with all the current musical raves—Traditional (Dixieland) jazz, rock 'n' roll, the Twist, modern jazz and the old-time drawingroom delivery as revived here by the Temperance Seven.

Lacking in presentation ideas, the show consisted of one long belt of varying styles of music punctuated by raw young vocalists giving vent to rock numbers noticeably in need of electronic assistance. However, chief guest Checker demonstrated the Twist with great agility and verve as he powerhoused through "The Twist," "The Fly" and "Let's Twist." These numbers were so startlingly similar, though, it was difficult to tell he had changed them.

Checker's big spot came three-quarters of the way through the session—by which time the trad jazzing of the Chris Barber, Terry Lightfoot and Back O' Town Syncopators bands had blown through such standards as "There'll Be Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," "Tavern in the Town," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Darktown Strutters Ball" "Muskrat Ramble" etc.—and repped the only exposure the Twist received.

Solo spots by Linda Scott, The Viscounts, Ottilie Patterson and The Galliards were injected with little imagination and with no contrast in tempo. Miss Scott voiced "Don't Be Money, Honey" in exact style used on her disk which sold quite well, while The Viscounts did the same with "Who Put the Bomp?" which was less of a success. In direct contrast, Ottilie Patterson, Chris Barber's jazz-singer-wife, has improved considerably after several small outings on tv. She sang a swingy "Hot Town" to her husband's backing, a highlight of the show.

With hit folk singers Robin Hall and Jimmy McGregor leading, the the Galliards came over as the most versatile of the vocal groups but seemed misplaced in an essentially beat show like this. The modern jazz feature starring Ronnie Scott, Tommy Whittle, Betty Smith and Kathy Stobart was a corny "battle of the tenors" in which the musicians obviously had little heart.

Apart from Checker, the show offered nothing new and could even help to cool off the trad fad with its exposure of so much unversatile noise from inexperienced lips. Watt.

INSIDE CHINA
With Ian Trethowan, Felix Greene, Roderick McFarquhar
Director: Geoffrey Nethercott
30 Mins., 10:35 p.m.
Associated Television, from London

Felix Greene's report on Red China, published as "The Wall Has Two Sides," is currently much discussed in the press. The book, chiefly aimed at an American public, attempts to suggest the extent of Chinese achievement since the war, to indicate the vast enthusiasm for the regime, and to argue that it's foolhardy and irrelevant for the U.S. to treat Chou and Mao as if they were naughty children, faces turned permanently to the wall.

All these points came out in this program, although the filmed material brought back by Greene was somewhat slim and unadventurous and had to be supplemented, rather feebly, by slides.

Ian Trethowan chaired the ensuing chat between Greene and journalist Roderick McFarquhar, who specializes in China affairs. Greene insisted that he saw no signs of Chinese resentment at Red authority, that the evidence went to show that they were proud of their industrial growth. He thought that Western ideas of freedom were hardly relevant in their society, and he quibbled with McFarquhar about the powers and local authority of the commune. He also tended to skate over the vast Pekin error that led to last year's agricultural famine.

Unfortunately, McFarquhar wasn't much of an antagonist, seeming to suggest that it was highly deceptive to find out what was going on in China by travelling there. He pursued a minor academic course, and let Greene win on the wider issues.

The program, ably directed by Geoffrey Nethercott, wasn't as visally stimulating as it promised—for instance, there was no interview with Chou En-Lai, as announced—and would probably race more pluses in the States than in Britain, where the subject isn't a Red rag to John Bull. Otta.

BRITAIN IN TRANSITION
With Aidan Crawley, Randolph Churchill, Al Capp, Michael Frayn
Director: Bill Morton
30 Mins., Fri., 10:30 p.m.
Associated - Rediffusion, from London

Two days earlier "Postscript to Empire," the Westinghouse documentary about present-day Britain presented under the Intertel banner, had been networked by the commercial web. Its portrait was reputed to be so provocative and shockable for local viewers that this discussion was supposed to be some sort of counterblast. However, the resultant talk was so tetchy and simless that it did little to clarify or amend.

Emcee Aidan Crawley kicked off by claiming that many viewers had judged the British image, as presented, absolutely false, to which the huffing-and-puffing Randolph Churchill added such epithets as "jaundiced" and "dull." Al Capp, representing the U.S. point of view, also considered the program a bore, and by this time it might be wondered whether this inquest was really necessary.

What little that was constructive that emerged was this:—that the American team erred in concentrating on the Isle of Dogs and Stevage New Town as representative, which they are palpably not, that the rural side of British life was totally ignored, that there was too much emphasis on class differences (Churchill claimed that the U.S. was the most class-ridden country in the world), and, according to Capp, that the U.S. has gotten so clean-handed and status-conscious that it's impossible to get the dirty jobs done.

Journalist Michael Frayn made a few wise comments, and the program, competently directed by Bill Morton, would have benefited by the denial of a little free speech to Churchill. Otta.

Idea of this series of six is the cute one of bringing back historic personalities to be quizzed by posterity, in the flannel-suited person of Edgar Lustgarten. Henry VIII and Oliver Cromwell have already had the treatment, and the one caught put George Washington in the answering spot.

If Washington had been captured by the British—would he have had any defense against the charge of treason? That was the drift of Lustgarten's probe, but, in this instance, it seemed rather a tenuous basis for the questions. However, although the cut-and-thrust of argument was feeble, the program made a painless way of filling out knowledge of Washington, who explained his motives in fighting the French, disclosed his personal interest in Ohio land, and discussed his resignation from the Virginia Regiment. The motives for leading the Revolution were clearly displayed, and the talk closed with an over-glib question from Washington: "Does all go well with the Union?" Lustgarten reassured him that it did.

Alexander Knox was excellent

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week five different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S

(*) ARB's October 1961 survey covered a multi-week period. Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program are listed, with the multi-week rating of all programs in the time period given.

Quality and Deadlines

There are people who adored the song, "Bali Ha'i" until they learned that Richard Rodgers had written the melody in ten minutes.

This is pretty much the same bunch (an ever-dwindling minority, we're happy to add) which insists there can be no genuine artistry or quality in any field that must regularly fill schedules and meet urgent deadlines. Like television.

Well, rather than argue the point on a theoretical level, we'd like to cite just a few of the programs that have made this past year one of NBC-TV's most distinguished seasons:

▶ The color documentary, "Vincent Van Gogh: A Self-Portrait," traced the artist's life through his paintings, drawings and letters. Hat-tossing critics unashamedly trotted out such modifiers as "stunning," "breathtaking" and "spellbinding."

▶ A brand-new concept in TV journalism came into being with the "NBC Special News Reports"—known more colloquially as the "Instant Specials." A good-many of these expertly-produced documentaries ("Russian Pandora," "Chimp in Orbit") were based on a news event that had occurred just a few hours before. ("Piracy in the Caribbean" reached viewers while the captive luxury-liner Santa Maria was still being pursued by the ships of three Navies, and you can't get much more current than that.)

▶ "David Brinkley's Journal" proved that a news series can lash out with directness

at such deserving targets as slums, crime and undisciplined installment-buying without impairing its tongue-in-cheek approach to European rock 'n' roll, foreign TV commercials or the wackier aspects of modern art.

▶ Another notable ground-breaker in the news field was "Update," a series designed to give teen-agers a better understanding of such matters as the new Africa, the Common Market and nuclear fallout. (Even viewers whose teen years are well behind them have found the program wonderfully enlightening.)

▶ "Victoria Regina" demonstrated that a succession of beautifully drawn and superbly acted vignettes on TV can be quite as overpowering as any conventionally constructed play. Seldom, if ever, has there been a TV drama in which so many different "favorite scenes" were so eagerly championed by the reviewers.

▶ In following the progress of some 35 young Americans from their indoctrination and training in Texas and Puerto Rico right through the beginnings of their assignments in Africa, "The Peace Corps in Tanganyika" documentary may well have—for the first time—translated an abstract ideal into a reality for millions of viewers.

▶ Through its insistence on top-drawer scripts, performers and production, "The Dick Powell Show" quickly made a firm place for itself in one of the most demanding TV arenas of all—the full-hour, weekly drama anthology. It also served as further confirmation of NBC's long-held belief that "professional" is not a dirty word.

▶ And just before year's end, came the NBC White Paper, "Khrushchev in Berlin," a study of the last six months of history as viewed from "over the shoulder" of the Soviet leader. Critics hailed it as a "chilling," "vivid" and "remorselessly documented" suspense story.

Television does have its heavy schedules, and it does have its uncompromising deadlines. But this is one network that will not allow such factors to rule out the conscientious pursuit—and frequent attainment, we hope—of excellence.

The preparation of a TV show may be limited to just a few hours or may be done over a period of months. Neither the critics nor the public should be asked to make allowances in the first case or to pay blind homage in the other. The proof of the pudding (if we may mangle a metaphor) is in the seeing. Everything else is spinach.

London Agencies

London, Jan. 23.

British Market Research Bureau completed two surveys for J. Walter Thompson. The major survey, "Television Attention Research 1961" combines the findings of a winter and summer investigation. The second probe, "Housewife Attention Ratings During Commercial Breaks" was conducted over the phone in the London area. One of the main findings: less than half of Britain's housewives in a room with tv during prime time watch the program to the exclusion of other activities. But there is no significant difference to the amount of attention paid to commercials as opposed to programs, the investigation disclosed . . . An "important section" of the Ben Truman beer account shifted to Rumble, Crowther & Nicholas, which is to start a campaign immediately. RCN also landed a fat account from Diana Shoemakers of Leicester for whom the agency plans an extensive spring campaign . . . David Harrison, former Television Wales & West sales manager, and Kenneth Cowley, senior account exec with Glover Pethick Advertising, have linked to found a new agency—Harrison, Cowley Advertising . . . Tobler Chocolate is to launch a new filled bar in London this month using much tv promotion. Followup plans for the rest of Britain also include hefty use of video . . . Brylcreem is currently using 60-second spots on all commercial tv stations here.

Athur Burton has been appointed chairman of Intam, international division of London Press Exchange. Burton is also president of LPE's recently-acquired American agency Robert Otto-Intam Inc. . . . Theme of this year's Advertising Association's conference will be: "The place of advertising in competitive world marketing—with special emphasis on the Common Market"

RALSTON PARLAYING CHIMPS & 'MARGIE'

Ralston, which was considering dropping its half share of ABC-TV's chimps, "The Hathaways," after 26 weeks, will continue with the Friday night at 8 p.m. show but under a revised plan that includes another show.

Instead of the original 39 stanzas and 13 repeats, show will now go 26 and 26. Cereal company takes on "Margie" in the bargain beginning April 20 for the rest of the run and summer repeats. "Margie," which has been dropped by Procter & Gamble, will be sponsored by Ralston in its new 7:30 p.m. Friday berth with the coin alternating from week to week with "Hathaways."

JWT's Big Year Gives It Undisputed Leadership; McCann-Erickson Slides —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

There's little question which agency will be the greatest of them all when billings for 1961 are toted next month.

A year ago Advertising Age, which annually compiles the billings, asked "who's on first?" in a front page sidebar to the money story. Toss-up was between Interpublic (McCann-Erickson) and J. Walter Thompson. Both bill well over $300,000,000 worldwide. And a couple of years ago when McCann-Erickson was sliced up into subsidiaries under the Interpublic label, predictions were that the shop would overtake JWT, the traditional leader.

But JWT has had a good year. Interpublic has had a bad year. In domestic billings, the latter may be headed by not only JWT but also BBDO and Young & Rubicam.

The big score for JWT was the Liggett & Myers switch of $20,000,000 from McCann-Erickson and Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample. Besides the $12,000,000 to $14,000,000 loss of Chesterfield biz to JWT, McCann also lost Bulova, whose billings had slid in a few years from $7,000,000 or so to $1,500,000. JWT also got the giant Reingold beer account from Foote, Cone & Belding, while losing the Schlitz business out of the Chicago office.

Things have been rocking for JWT since Norman Strouse took control as chief exec officer in 1960 (Stanley Resor retired and sold his stock to the employee's fund). Before that McCann-Erickson appeared to have a clear shot at the billings title. JWT lost Shell Oil's $15,000,000 and the RCA biz in rapid order, but recouped nicely this year. JWT's anchor account, the $90,000,000 Ford international money, accounts for about a fourth of the agency's total billings.

On the bright side for Interpublic, which reportedly is 90% owned by the employee's retirement fund with Marion Harper holding a controlling share of the remaining 10%, is the creative rep being built by the subsidiary McCann-Marschalk agency, which bills more than $30,000,000. Agency was mainly a nuts-and-bolts shop when McCann bought it out a few years back. But this year McC-M even unloaded its blow torch account (sort of symbolic of progress), the Otto Bernz firm of Syracuse. As one ad man says, one trip upstate by the account man would rub out the profits for the year.

Anyhow, McCann-Marschalk is building a reputation for sharp consumer advertising on several accounts — and making a little dough too, the man said.

Compton O'Seas

In yet another international move by a major agency, Compton is forming group of five new Garland-Compton firms on the Continent.

Companies will be Garlan-Compton Paris, S. A., in France; Garland-Compton Bruxelles, S. A., Belgium; Garland-Compton Italia, S. A., Milan; Garland-Compton Lausane, S. A., Switzerland; and Garland-Compton Frankfunt, Germany.

Directors will be Compton prexy Barton Cummings in New York and Leonard Garland, managing director of Garland-Compton Ltd., London.

Adsville: Veepee stripes for Charles Jones, Allen Memhard, Charles Packer and Robert Williams in the client service department of Leo Burnett Co., Chicago . . . Norman Fitzgerald, formerly with Shaw, Aves & Ring, has joined Olian & Bronner, Chicago, as production manager . . . John L. Southard, formerly with Benton & Bowles, has joined Papert, Koenig, Lois as an account supervisor . . . J. Brooks Emory Jr., formerly in charge of BBDO's drug division, has joined the exec staff of Donahue & Coe to work on special assignment from agency prexy Don West.

New Biz: Louis Milani Foods, Los Angeles to Riedl & Freede. Account was at Cunningham & Walsh.

No Biz: North, Chicago, has resigned the breweries Division of City Products Corp. (Pilsener, Cleveland, and Regal, New Orleans), and Kenyon & Eckhardt and Max Factor cosmetics also have parted ways.

With the Station Reps

With the reps' current worry over the trend to minute buys on the networks (using the webs as spot carriers) comes a study from Television Advertising Representatives, the Westinghouse station reppery, designed to show that the networks, when used alone, don't allow "market-regulated advertising pressure."

In a pitch that will make the agency rounds, Larry H. Israel, TvAR prexy, says, "audiences for network programs tend to tilt away from the markets that represent the prime marketing target for most companies."

Titled, "TILT: The After-Math of Network Television," the study says the top 20 tv markets contain 55% of all the tv homes in the country, yet most web shows fail to deliver 55% of their audience in these markets, representing the prime source of income to most companies.

TvAR marketing and research veepee Robert Hoffman says that 62 of the 65 nighttime programs checked received less than 55% of their national audience from the top 20 markets. Almost half, he says, of the shows get only 35% to 45% of the audience in the 20 markets.

Says Hoffman, "the effect of network television tilt can be seen in even clearer perspective when the comparison is in terms of actual 'lost audience' rather than percentages." The study illustrates the point with ABC-TV's "Cheyenne," which has a national aud of 9,800,000 (ARB). If the show's audience paralleled the tv population, it should reach 5,400,000 families in the top 20 markets. Instead, the oater's audience in these markets come to 4,200,000. Thus the study claims that the show's lost aud is equal to the total number of tv homes tuned into the show in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago combined.

Study winds with suggestions for advertisers: switch to spot tv if distribution and sales pattern do not warrant a web effort; reinforce with spot tv if advertising is concentrated in one or two network shows; and if the advertiser is using a number of web shows via participation, drop the weak sisters doing poorly in the "must" markets and switch to spot.

Briefs: WWRL, New York's full-time Negro market station to John E. Pearson for national representation. Station was unrepped . . . Joseph P. Cuff, national sales manager of Eastman reppery, named veepee in charge of sales . . . Gannett Newspapers WHEC-TV-AM, Rochester, and WINR-TV-AM, Binghampton (both New York), to H-R Television. Stations are moving from Everett-McKinney Co. to H-R along with Max Everett, formerly E-McM prexy, who joins H-R as a veepee in charge of new biz development, effective Feb. 1 . . . Norman Nelson, formerly veepee and ad manager of Calumet Publishing, joins AM Radio Sales in new post of director of marketing and sales development.

Brit. Equity Gets Confidence Vote On Its TV Strike

London, Jan. 23.

At a mass meeting of actors on Sunday (21) the Equity executive committee gained yet another vote of confidence for the way in which it has handled the current dispute with the commercial tv contractors. Earlier in the week, however, an attempt to whip up feeling against Equity's campaign had been made by Peter Cadbury, Chief of Westward-TV, a regional tv contractor.

Aided by popular actors like Raymond Francis—who starred in a strike-hit Associated-Rediffusion program "No Hiding Place"—Cadbury spoke to a meeting of actors and the general public in an effort to gain support for an end to the dispute.

In Cadbury's view, arbitration is the only way by which the disagreement over fees will be settled. He says both Equity and the contractors are in a strong position and, therefore, fear of a extremely prolonged rift is great. But, considers Cadbury, the longer the actors stay off the small screen the less they are going to be missed.

Justifiably, he believes the thesps' role in video is day by day becoming more endangered as the public is settling for old feature films instead of live or tape shows. An inevitable result of this dispute, Cadbury says, is less tv employment for actors. The stars are alright and so are the bit-part players. But the "middling" performers will suffer. He therefore believes that a return-to-work and arbitration would be the best possible answer for the artist as well as the contractors.

On the whole the dispute seems to have affected actors and live shows only. Commercial contractors are content to replace blacked out live shows with feature films and imported material and, claims one program chief, the audiences temporarily lost with the departure of about 10 topline shows have been regained via oldtime pix.

Newburgh 'White Paper' Sold To Bristol-Myers

NBC finally sold a "White Paper" this season. Bristol-Myers bought full sponsorship of "The Battle of Newburgh," being done by the NBC News series Sunday (28).

The Newburgh hour (slated for 10 to 11 p.m.) is the ninth in the "White Paper" series, a controversial format produced on Irving Gitlin's aegis. Sponsors have shied away from its controversial aspects. B-M has lately become interested in news stanzas, having bought into a daytime news strip on NBC and into weekend news programming.

Al Wasserman is doing the actual production for Gitlin, Young & Rubicam placed the B-M order.

covering music, art, fantsy, sing-a-longs to modern jazz. Company has $3,000,000 invested in series aimed at night time viewing. Sponsor is slated to be set by Saperstein on Gotham trip.

To be available for March exposure is 90-minute all star golf show with Jimmy DeMaret narrating. NBC is negotiating. NBC is negotiating for it. It will be a tv first in that subject, will have winners of four major tournaments, each playing each other, from U.S. Open, P.G.A., Masters and U. S. Amateurs.

Film was shot in Palm Springs with $22,000 in prizes awarded. Winner has been crowned Golf Champ of the U. S. A. McGregor-Doniger has already signed for one-third sponsorship and Saperstein is in process of wrapping up other two-thirds.

Bert Parks

"a new low in television," but the show had a six-year run.

Although Parks is wholeheartedly committed to being an emcee and meaning every grin as much as humanly possible, he also wanted to prove that he was capable of doing something else. It wasn't precisely "Hamlet," but Parks played the lead in the Broadway production of "The Music Man" as Robert Preston's replacement and stayed with the legiter for 330 performances.

As for game shows, Parks has seen them come and go. "Like everything else in show business, these shows travel in cycles. Not so long ago, if you didn't wear a cowboy hat, you were nobody. There may be too many game shows on during the daytime, but these things adjust themselves." Once again, for Parks the public is the great arbiter.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

The Chi chapter of American Federation of TV and Radio Artists, which some months ago petitioned the FCC to hold open hearings on the license renewals of NBC stations, WNBQ and WMAQ in Chi, has been gathering allies in the cause from the ranks of labor. A petition urging public hearings to determine whether NBC hadn't "suppressed the 'Chicago Style' of entertainment and stifled the development of local talent" was signed by George W. Smith, prexy of NABET, and representatives of Cook County Industrial Union Council, United Steel Workers, American Federation of Teachers, International Assn. of Machinists, United Transport Service Employees, and Illinois State Federation of Labor and CIO.

FCC had earlier heard from Chicago religious leaders, the Journeyman Barbers Union, Athletic and Public Events Vendors, and Printing Specialties & Paper Products Union, all in support of the AFTRA petition.

Igor Stravinsky is in Toronto taping, for CBS-TV, "Stravinsky at 80" for showing next June to mark the composer's 80th birthday that month. With him and wife are U. S. conductor Robert Craft, who'll also take part, along with CBC Symphony and Festival Singers, with Franz Kraemer producing. Another seg of the 90-minute special will be taped in March, with George Balanchine of N. Y. City Centre Ballet doing excerpts from Stravinsky toe tune. On current visit CBC radio is taping two programs with Stravinsky and Craft.

ABC-TV has revamped the format of its 11 p.m. news show by giving Bill Shadell the slot of news editor. Show now revolves around Shadell who introduces the various ABC correspondents from various global points.

Meantime, Lou Cioffi, chief ABC European correspondent is in town from Paris this week in huddles with news chief Jim Hagerty on further strengthening the overseas staff.

Harold S. Meden, partner in the sales promotion firm of Franznick-Meden, has been named secretary-treasurer of the Broadcast Promotion Assn.

Operating out of New York, Meden will handle all BPA affairs and services to members. Association prexy Don Curran, ad-promotion director of the ABC o&o's, predicts the membership will be up from 430 to 500 by the end of '62.

David Susskind's two-hour interview with former President Harry S. Truman, televised last September over WNEW-TV, N.Y., is becoming part of the archives at the Truman Library in Independence, Mo. Two prints were presented to Truman last week by Bennet H. Korn, exec v.p. for Metropolitan Broadcasting's television stations. One of the prints will be part of the permanent library. The other will be made available to schools and civic organizations for exhibition.

"Walk in My Shoes," the opening documentary on ABC-TV's "Close-Up" series this season, received an offbeat theatrical exhibition in Greenwich Village at the Charles Theatre last weekend (19-20). The one-hour show was the highlight of a program of films made by Nicholas Webster, producer-director of "Shoes" and another tv documentaries and feature films. Webster was on hand to speak about his work.

Edward F. Ryan was named 1962 chairman of the national wire study committee of the Associated Press Radio-Television Assn. Ryan is general manager of WTOP News, in Washington.

Daniel Kops, boss of WAVZ, New Haven, and WTRY, Troy, and present of APRTA, said four regional vice chairmen will shortly be named to serve with Ryan on the national committee. Ryan himself was 1961 regional chairman in the eastern district.

TV execs and Bell & Howell have given them and other producers in the series complete editorial freedom. Hartigan said "Close-Up" has demonstrated "real guts to do the story on a medium that is badly in need of the truth." Hartigan, incidentally, was also the cameraman on "Walk In My Shoes," the challenging "Close-Up" report on the new Negro outlook in America.

Miss Rogers, a lammister from Harvard Univ.'s faculty and wife of John Secondari, exec producer of the "Close-Up" series, said it usually takes eight or nine weeks to wrap up a one-hour documentary, although deadline pressure will slice that time for the show on England. "We know the general questions we'll be asking but the conclusions will emerge from the material."

Kansas City—FM radio is spreading here as two more AM stations seek to expand in this field. Metro-Media, Inc., New York, which recently bought KMBC-AM-TV and other broadcasting properties from the Cook Paint & Varnish Co. has received approval of the FFC for a construction permit for a new FM station. Station KCKN, country music outlet in Kansas City, Kan., last week filed for a permit to add FM broadcasting to its operation.

'TV' sounds simple; deceptively simple. 'Associated-Rediffusion' sounds much more complex; and it is. Set out to give the best of television to the vast family of Londoners, with all their various tastes—and often to all of Britain as well—and you quickly have a very complex pattern of programmes. The Big Top, and the pick of the pops; drama and comedy; plays, films, musicals; music itself, for imagining, remembering—or forgetting; streamlined series like 'Echo Four-Two'; human documents, like the programmes of Daniel Farson; panel games and variety; national and world affairs in 'This Week' . . . That's not all, but it's enough to show that 'Take Your Pick' is more than a very popular show—it's just what Associated-Rediffusion likes people to do. Which (not surprisingly) is why over nine million Londoners do it.

Radio Reviews

FREDERICK LOEWE & MOSS HART
Producer: Robert Sherman
Director: Walter Neiman
85 Mins.; Sun. (21), 8:05 p.m.
WQXR, N. Y.

Moss Hart died a couple of weeks after this show was recorded late last year and so this stanza was infused with the poignancy of hearing one of the last public appearances of the late playwright and director. It was originally designed as a review of showtune writer Frederick Loewe's career which crossed paths with that of Hart in "My Fair Lady."

As interlocutor, Hart displayed affection and humor in his exchanges with Loewe. Hart's queries helped Loewe trace his career from his early days in Vienna through his varied and checkered saga as prize-fighter, cow-puncher, and songwriter. Loewe told about his initial meeting with Alan Jay Lerner at the Lambs Club, their subsequent collaborations (not all successful and their climactic success of "My Fair Lady," which Hart directed. In reminiscing about "Camelot," in which Lerner & Loewe and Hart again joined forces, Hart said that show almost proved "lethal" to all three. He predicted, however, that Loewe would outlive the money he had earned from his Broadway successes. Hart did not prove to be so fortunate.

The conversation between Hart and Loewe was punctuated regularly by excerpts from the cast albums of such shows as "Brigadoon," "Paint Your Wagon," "My Fair Lady," "Gigi," etc.

Democracy in America

An assessment of the first installment of the new radio series, "Democracy In America," reveals only the limitations of radio, the crudities and cliches of most any half-hour dramatic series in that medium. But since the Division of General Education at N.Y.U. and the Fund For Adult Education thoughtfully provided records of all 14 programs in the series, which was initiated on NBC Radio last Wednesday (17) at 8:30, some listeners can get a fuller impression by simply sitting down and listening to three or four of these transcriptions in a row. It then becomes clear what history professor George E. Probst, who is responsible for "Democracy In America," sought to do and then—and only then—is any light shed on the meaning of democracy.

Notably, the 14-part skein is carried not only by NBC Radio but also by Canadian Broadcasting Corp., which helped in its making, and on WNYC-AM, New York.

Based on the study of America in the 1830s by Alexis De Tocqueville, a visiting Frenchman, it deals in subjects such as "A Study of Jacksonian America" (the first and least successful of the programs because of the crowded quality shown), "A Study In American Equality," "A Study In American Independence" and "American Independence" and "American Character." These were the programs heard. There seem to have been limitations placed on these first four programs, since, ostensibly, they were restricted to the Frenchman's observations. While it may have a contemporary validity, this is mostly a dated evaluation of American democracy. Later programs may well update the point of view, but a listener undoubtedly has to hear them all for the proper effect.

Made with the help of a radio repertory company that belongs to CBC, the acting tended toward caricatures of Frenchmen and early Americans. In the latter case, particularly, everybody, including Americans from Michigan, sounded as though from New England. But the scripts by Probst and Lister Sinclair were competently, if not brilliantly, arranged.

The first installment and a good deal of the second established broadly the typical vibrancy, "humble origins," initiative, brashness of the American character. But the more one listened, the more one heard that struck profounder notes.

Monte Carlo

and there is no reason why it cannot have its fests as feature films, music, ballet and drama do. The U.S. sent 20 entries, most of them from private packagers and producers, with the Eastern countries—Russia, Czechoslavakia, Poland, Hungary, Rumania—sending 19 between them (and two from East Germany slipped in), with five from France, two from Britain, one from UAR, one Mexico, one Argentina, two from Canada and one from Monaco.

There were 109 press people present with 45 invited from various countries—Yugoslavia, Argentina, U.S., Russia, Japan, Poland, Italy, France, Ireland, Britain, West Germany, Morocco—and the rest local. At least 30 video producers showed. That is not much, but a good nucleus for the second time around.

Lotsa Hoopla

There were cocktails and dinners galore and it was well organized with good documentation on all the entries. Journalists had a free bar where they had access to talks with the jury and six viewing booths. Jury had its own room and there was a big public room with many sets. It was estimated 200 locals attended every day. All films were on sets, as they should be, and a closed circuit setup handled by Tele Monte Carlo worked well.

Main conclusions were that too much video fodder is still more vest pocket filmmaking or theatre rather than a true tv form of expression and style. That is why many of the prizes went to essay-like pix or more severe and closely knit dramas. The U.S. entries in the main were scaled down pix as were the Russo entries. But they did have more compactness and greater use of closeups and medium shots than the average pix. U.S. network offerings did not fare too well in the final prizes and such heralded Yank dramas as "The Power and the Glory" and "The Iceman Cometh" got nothing while some educational entries did, mainly because they were more fitting of the medium than the more ambitious dramas.

Another drawback was a lack of translation though some countries sent entries with dubbed commentaries in French or English. Next year small transistors will carry simultaneous French and English translations which should work this out. But extensive synopsis each day helped.

The fest is a personal favorite of prince Rainier and the bill is footed entirely by the Monte Carlo performing arts outlay. The Prince and Princess, ex-American film star Grace Kelly, had a dinner for the jury and two cocktails for press and guests while they followed all the films from special sets in the Palace.

The Prince feels that tv is now of the stature where it deserves a festival akin to Cannes to pinpoint worldwide interest on it and create a spot for the meeting of international tv people and for unearthing new talents and outlooks. In its second time around Monte Carlo is still small but it looks on the way to becoming one of the important video fests.

The Jury had a good cross-section of tv writers, vid people, playwrights and public figures. The president was French playwright Marcel Achard.

U.S. reps were video writer, scripter and playwright Paddy Chayevsky and ex-tv critic, John Crosby. Another Frenchman was playwright and filmmaker Marcel Achard.

There is no actual grand prize at the Monte Carlo Festival but eight categories with a special jury prize also at the discretion of the prizegivers. However, the jury intimated that this last was really the Grand Prix as far as they were concrened and it went to the U.S. for National Education Television's "Casals Master Class" a 27-minute entry showing the great Spanish cellist teaching a class at the U. of California in Berkeley.

Only other U.S. winner was the Shari Lewis Show" presented by Tarcher Productions-NBC.

TV: C.B.S. Offers a Civil War Classic

'JOHN BROWN'S BODY' BY BENET STAGED

By JACK GOULD

THE television presentation of Stephen Vincent Benet's narrative poem, "John Brown's Body," was superb. The exaltation of freedom, the agony of war and the heartbreak of a divided nation were magnificently realized in forty-odd minutes of TV that were strikingly creative and deeply stirring.

The Benet classic on the Civil War was staged with a Spartan simplicity that avoided intrusion on the imagery and eloquence of the poem. It was spoken with vigor and sensitivity by an inspired company led by Richard Boone. It was implemented by George Kleinsinger's original score of uncommon power and beauty.

At 1:30 P.M. yesterday over Channel 2 the home screen reflected the matchless excitement of all elements of theatre brought together with skill and dedication.

A drama was produced by the Public Affairs Department of the Columbia Broadcasting System's news division and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. It was designed to call attention to the league's American Democratic Legacy Award, presented this year to Adlai E. Stevenson, chief United States delegate to the United Nations.

In the production of Richard Siemanowski and under the direction of Joseph Chomyn, the Pulitzer Prize poem was staged with all the leanness of style, which is so especially effective in black-and-white video. The succession of close-ups of the Civil War's participants gained in cumulative force as the Benet historical account was unfolded.

The major visual supplement to the straight readings was the use of lithographs depicting the scenes of battle. In these sequences particularly, the score of Mr. Kleinsinger imparted a tension and action that vividly intensified the feeling of drama.

But the success of "John Brown's Body" stemmed essentially from the delivery of the Benet words. As the narrator of Harold Flender's felicitous adaptation of the poem, Mr. Boone brilliantly conveyed the tragedy of the involvement of individuals, the larger hymn to the cause of freedom and the raw savagery of war itself.

Lester Rawlins, as the Confederate soldier finally pouring out the South's bitterness in tears, was outstanding, and Maxwell Glanville, as the slave who finds his way to freedom's shores, projected a lyric nobility. Peter Donat as Clay Wingate, essential Confederate figure, and Burt Brinckerhoff as Jack Ellyat, essential figure in blue, were fine.

The part of Brown was taken by Douglas Campbell, who realized the stern conviction of the abolitionists. Others in the company were John Colicos, Jeremiah Morris, Sean Garrison and Nancy Wickwire, playing Sally Dupre.

RICHARD BOONE HEADS AN INSPIRED CAST

Mr. Chomyn's direction had the virtue of sustained restraint and modesty that reflected a taut rein knowingly held.

His scene of the ballroom in the South had a lovely composition; the dancing figures could be seen behind a gray mist as delicate shadows converged on the South. And again Mr. Kleinsinger's score was a notable complement to the mood.

The Public Affairs Division of C. B. S., which is headed by John W. Kiermaier, has reason to be a proud and happy unit. Its fitting reward should be a repeat performance of "John Brown's Body."

as Washington, and the program was densly-researched and neatly produced by Paddy Russell. It should go better with past figures who had more criminal acts to hide, for the trial element would add to the tension. No one—not even in England—could really believe that Washington had much on his conscience. Otta.

Foreign TV Followup

Sunday Night at the Palladium

Acquisition of a new emcee hasn't brought any change in the familiar formula of ATV's "Sunday Night at the Palladium," but there's little sign that the public would welcome variations anyway. Norman Vaughan, replacing Bruce Forsyth, proved quite a find on this second showing. Less fulsome than his predecessor, he didn't get on terms of immediate amity with his audience and showed some sense of strain during the daft capers of "Beat the Clock." Otherwise, he made a resilful link-man, sending the show off with a fizz by terping and warbling "Week by Week."

Only foreign guest in this one was Neil Sedaka, who purveyed typical numbers as if suspended from invisible elastic. Still, he was bouncy, and had a toothsome appeal, rather less woebegone than most of his rivals. After "Sweet Sixteen," he proceeded to prove he could play piano by sitting down to a Chopin "Fantaisie-Impromptu." This wouldn't worry Rubinstein, but it made a charming change for a pop-singer to pronounce, more or less, Chopin, let alone play him. After reminiscing over past disk hits—which took in "Oh, Carol," "Stairway to Heaven," and "Little Devil"—Sedaka closed with "Calendar Girl," still bouncing. While he stuck to lighthearted ditties, Sedaka pleased, but his personality's not built for theh greater extremities of passion.

Other musical items included the local trad outfit of Kenny Ball in "Margie" and their best-selling "Midnight in Moscow." They blew briskly, but Ball erred in trying a vocal Satchmo. Susan Lane, a young thrush with a well-mouthed set of pipes, gave a musicomedy selection and seemed suitably awestruck to be doing it; she was one of those sopranos better kept at a safe distance, like behind the footlights, but producer Francis Essex insisted on a close-up.

Topping the bill were the comedy duo, Jewel & Warriss, who pattered inchoherently about Matt Dillon getting mixed up in a commercial, and finished up in a wild riot of slapstick, with lost trousers, thrown pies, the lot.

Jack Parnell's band was safety sticked by Peter Knight and the show was nimbly produced by Francis Essex. Otta.

Armchair Theatre (London)

Rod Serling's "The Rank and File," which pursued the rise and fall of a union boss, made a punchy entry for ABC TV's "Armchair Theatre" hour. Although its theme of racketeering in the unions hasn't any exact parallels over here, and also was too close a relation of the "On the Waterfront" movie, Serling's crisp plot and purposeful dialog insured it a fine impact.

Central figure was Kilcyne (Kenneth J. Warren), first pushed into local labor leadership by genuine anger and resentment. Then the urge for national power led him to deal with crooked Tony Russo (David Cargill) in order to win a dispute. And the tale followed his gradual immersion in thuggery, conniving at murder of an erstwhile pal, until his final summons to a Senate investigation.

All this was told in flashback, which was effective, and was helped by a crunchy performance from Kenneth J. Warren, who suggested the misdirected power of the man despite a tendency to act with his tongue hanging out at moments of stress. David Cargill was suitably slimy as the rat, and solid thesp support stacked up from Bruce Boa and Paul Maxwell. Alan Cooke directed Sydney Newman's production with a mailed fist and exciting face-photography, with maybe too much joy in the violent interludes. Otta.

Femme Fatale

of water pouring out of a fountain and she has a fountain in her bedroom. She talked of many things at the interview, least of all of fountains. That comment was made in passing a luxurious fountain, encased in a midtown restaurant, where the interview took place.

She talked and talked of "Look Up and Live," and "Lamp Unto My Feet," the two Sunday morning programs on CBS-TV. One reason she talked so long and hard was her effort to fit what she had to say for this show biz publication.

Miss Ilott was high in her praise for producer Richard Siemanowski, who recently won critical acclaim for his production of "John Brown's Body." Siemanowski, she averred, has been doing equally good work as "Look Up and Live" producer. All of a sudden all the techniques used on the religioso shows are acclaimed as new and daring, when we've been doing it so long." The two half-hour shows, "Look Up" and "Lamp Unto My Feet", start at 10 a.m., and "I suppose the reviewers aren't up by then," Miss Ilott says philosophically.

She's pleased at the freedom given to the religioso hour. The church groups with whom she works with render the theology, while her unit executes the message, which may vary from the experience of conversion to the new spirit of religion in art.

In themes, the religioso shows evidence far more daring than nighttime tv dramas. "We've handled the integration issue way back, we've questioned the superficial trappings of success, satirized higher education, and had works by Camus, Auden, Sartre and T. S. Eliot." Religioso shows also attract many new writers in the tv medium.

There's been acting talent which had their first exposure on CBS-TV's religioso bloc. Roster includes Sal Mineo, Steve McQueen, Warren Beatty and Susan Oliver. Fees offered to talent arrived are small, but still they come, the personalities including Jan Peerce, Sir Cedric Hardwick, Marc Connelly, Siobhan McKenna, Stanley Holloway, and Mildred Dunnock.

Miss Ilott acts as producer of individual religioso shows as well. She's proud of the commissions tendered for original musical and dance compositions used on the two series.

Asked, after an hour of talking, how she liked her job, Miss Ilott smiled, "Isn't that obvious."

Granada's Appeal For Better Shows; 'Give ITA Powers'

London, Jan. 23.

Standout point in the Granada group's annual report for the year ended Sept. 30, 1961, is the call for better tv programs as the "real danger from which tv has most to fear is the philosophy of the flat-iron — smooth, impeccable and deadly dull." Granada, which operates the Monday-to-Friday commercial tv station serving the North England region, would like to see the Independent Television Authority with increased powers and the added responsibility of stimulating "good, vital programs."

According to Granada, the Television Act, by which the independent channel was set up six years ago, is worded so that ITA's powers are of a negative character. It's time, says chairman Sidney L. Bernstein, that the Authority's responsibilities were given a different emphasis.

As previously reported, the group made a record profit over the year of $17,973,323 net. After taxation of more than $9,800,000 and the payment of preference dividends, the balance of net profit was more than $7,950,000. Balance of retained profit was in excess of $4,716,000 of which $2,800,000 was placed in general reserve.

At the annual general meeting—to be held on Feb. 8—directors of the group will propose that 100,000 "A" ordinary shares (at 70c each) should be held available as stock options to senior execs. Move is aimed to help recruiting of the "right" personnel into the industry and retaining top flight execs.

Further point of interest in the annual report, is that Granada theatres had a better year. Although admissions still dipped, they did so by less than the national percentage (Granada attendances dropped by 6% to the nation's 11%).

Burnett-Andrews Special Bought By Lipton Tea

Lipton Tea has lined up provisionally for sole sponsorship of the upcoming Carol Burnett-Julie Andrews special.

Lipton's order for the hour telecast was conditioned on the web clearing an acceptable date and slot for the show. Program, to be scripted by Mike Nichols, will be vidtaped at Carnegie Hall March 8. Bob Banner will produce, with a probable air date sometime in June.

A MOMENT WITH . . .
With Senator Jacob K. Javits, Sir Howard Beale, Deena Clark, hostess
Exec Producer: Wes Harris
30 Mins.; Sun., 1 p.m.
WNBC-TV, N.Y. (tape)

An entry of uneven value is this new pubaffairs show vidtaped in Washington by NBC's o&o, WRC-TV, and telecast in New York by sister station WNBC-TV.

The format is simple, a news personality tells about himself without interruptions. The half-hour format limits the guests to two, with hostess Deena Clark introducing each with a brief sketch.

Format bogs down because the politico or other personality may not be too adept in drawing a self profile. Senator Jacob K. Javits (Rep., N.Y.), assuredly a man with talent in other areas, for instance used his time as a political platform. He picked an interesting theme to address himself to, the theme being "What Motivates a Legislator." His exposition, though, was inundated by political officalese which may go over big on the platform but wilts in a format which begs for a freer, more intimate glimpse of the personality.

Sir Howard Beale, Australian Ambassador to the U.S., had a better time of it. He, in simple, forthright language drew a portrait of his country. He also had charm in his style.

Deena Clark was okay as hostess.

WNBC-TV will telecast this series three out of every fourth Sunday. Horo.

stones," also comes from H-B, which distributes through Screen Gems.

The imprint of Terrytoon, a division of CBS Films, of course helped sales on the successful "Deputy Dawg," an established cartoon character.

Grosses on the syndie successes, though, spur the cartoon entrepeneurs to initiate new packages. To date, King Features claims to have grossed $5,000,000 on new "Popeyes," with 220 five-minute episodes in the package. "Popeye" gross includes a reported $500,000 from overseas sales. Skein has been sold in about 120 markets.

Television Personalities, working with a six-man sales organization under sales topper Al Unger, is reported to have grossed about $4,000,000 on "Magoo" and "Tracy." Each series consists of 130 episodes. "Magoo" has been sold in 130 markets and "Tracy" in 90 markets.

Minute Maid will sponsor CBS-TV's "Marineland Circus" special on Easter Sunday, April 22. Hour special will be telecast at 7 p.m.

In another special events sale, General Foods has lined up a Girl Scouts hour special for telecasting next September. The Girl Scouts special will be telecast in September prior to the opening shows of the '62-'63 season, preempting Andy Griffith and Danny Thomas shows.

25 Pilots Costing ABC $3,500,000 Key Affils Told

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Except for a couple of minor complaints on both sides, the four-day meeting between ABC-TV execs and its affiliates' board of governors at Acapulco last week was all sweetness and light. ABC-TV execs detailed programming plans for next season, informing the affils that it was spending in excess of $3,500,000 on 25 pilots and general programming development this year, a record for the web. The question of revising the network's compensation plan, which was introduced at the last board of governor's meeting, did not arise.

Network execs did press, however, for a better clearance picture on both its news and entertainment shows. The affils, on the other hand, registered some squawks about some of the web's programming this season, singling out "Straightaway" and the controversial Fabian episode on "Bus Stop."

ABC's new chief Jim Hagerty, marking his first anni with the network this week, indicated to affils that the news operation would be progressively beefed up and urged stations to alert the web's staff on hot local developments for national coverage.

"We have no objection, and indeed welcome those situations where program packagers are able to furnish their product directly to advertisers, who in turn supply it to our network schedule, providing such programs meet our standards and are suitable for the time period involved."

Aubrey credited change sponsorship patterns — increase in the number of cosponsored and participation shows — for the increase in the amount of web-licensed or web-owned programs in the past two years.

Brennan's five-year pact for "The McCoys" ends this season. He would like to do fewer shows next fall. Lewis Titterton, tveepee at the Compton agency, said that the series may be continued on that basis but that he was hopeful Brennan would appear in least half of the season's output.

Hagerty Confers With Azcarraga On Mexico Ties

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

James C. Hagerty, ABC News executive, passing through this capital on his way to the meeting of affils in Acapulco, said he will initiate an intensified program to give Americans a true picture of Mexico via radio and television.

The ex-White House press chief held talks with Emilio Azcarraga and Secretary of Foreign Relations Manuel Tello to this end. Hagerty feels that Mexico has a great future as a tourist attraction and, along general lines of the Alliance for Progress program, he plans to concentrate on amplified programming to give American public a clearer picture of their south-of-the-border neighbors.

In effect, this means more coverage of the area in spot news as well as cultural and other remote control events. Hagerty said there was great interest in Mexico, pointing up to success of recent documentary telecast over ABC outlets and covering inauguration of the Chihuahua Pacific Railroad.

As a "simple citizen" Hagerty expressed opinion that "relations between Mexico and the United States have never been better," and he inferred that collaboration in exchange of tv programs may soon be worked out.

Meanwhile, buildup of a broad interchange of radio programs by American stations with Latin American counterparts will be initiated during Feb. 3 to 7 meetings here of 40 American broadcasters, representing around 200 stations.

Group will exchange ideas during formal sessions with Mexican broadcasters and in social gatherings. Oscar Bravo Santos, functionary of the Mexican Chamber of the Broadcasting Industry has invited 400 Mexican broadcasters to receive their American colleagues here.

After sessions here Americans plane out to Peru and later to Argentina for program interchange talks.

ABC-TV Deadline Nears On Evolving a Rerun Pattern for Late Night

ABC-TV has until Feb 1 to make up its mind whether it will slot reruns of "Wagon Train" and Warner Bros.' "Roaring Twenties" and "Maverick" in the 11:20 p.m. Monday-through-Friday slot next season. At the present time, the web's sales staff is pitching strongly to top advertisers, such as Procter & Gamble, General Foods, Lever Bros., Colgate, etc., for commitments on the re-runs. It's figured that a major buy will facilitate the job of selling assorted remaining minutes.

If no sales can be made by the Feb. 1 deadline, WB will put "Roaring Twenties" and "Maverick" into syndication and ABC will not attempt to program after 11:15 p.m. next season. The web may even skip using reruns of "Wagon Train" for one season but more likely will schedule the western series as a daytimer.

88 Stations Lined Up For Storer Coverage Of Canaveral Manshoot

Miami, Jan. 23.

The Storer radio station here, WGBS, is going to cover Saturday's (27) scheduled manshoot for a total of 88 indie outlets in the U.S. and Canada and for the MacQuarle Broadcasting Network of Australia.

The Miami outlet is sending a remote crew, headed by news chief Spencer Danes and newsmen Merritt Hadley and Dick Kidney, to Cape Canaveral to supply the coverage.

WGSB planned to transmit the audio-only coverage of the moonshoot yesterday (Mon.), but the shot was delayed. In all probability, when the moonshoot comes off, the Storer outlet will reactivate its plans for coverage.

'KILDARE' HOT AS BRITISH TV ENTRY

London, Jan. 23.

Short of making some major programming mistakes, it looks as if BBC's going to stay in the 20 top rated programs even if it's mainly in the lower places. Current ratings from TAM (Television Audience Measurements Ltd.) show BBC-TV with six places out of the first 21 for the week ended Jan. 7.

Without dobut, "Dr. Kildare" is the Corporation's prize audience-puller. Yet again the series has made the top 10. And, "Bianco," which replaces "Overland Trail," looks strong, too. BBC's line up reads: "Kildare" (9th); "Bronco" (13th); "The Singing Years" (16th); "Juke Box Jury" (17th); "Dixon of Dock Green" (18th) and "This Is Your Life" (equal 20th with Granada-TV's Paul Anka special).

However, shows like Granada's "Coronation Street," ATV's "Sunday Night At The London Palladium," Associated - Rediffusion's "Double Your Money" still dominate the key positions.

Production Shuffle On 'Price Is Right'

Beth Hollinger Ferro has become producer of the NBC-TV daytime version "Price Is Right," as part of a production shuffle by packager Goodson-Todman. The former associate producer, she replaces Bob Stewart, who was named exec producer for the daytime strip.

Previously, Mrs. Ferro was associate producer on both the day and night versions of "Price." She remains in her old capacity at night. Meantime, two associate producers were appointed for the daytime version: Edythe Chan and Don Scott, elevated from lower production jobs.

man, Gene Rodenbury, Perry Lafferty, Paul Henning, Jerry Thorpe, Rouse & Greene, Max Schulman, Sidney Sheldon, and others of their type on the new program production roster.

Going along with the assumption that truth is more fascinating than fiction, web is offering Jack Webb's "True Anthology," based on yarns in True mag. Bob Banner's "TV Tonight," with Dennis Weaver in the lead, will be localled in a midwest community, with about a dozen regulars, in a variety format.

The comedy forms being planned for next season range from a wild, hellzapoppin' format for Liebman's projected hour series, to the literate comedics of an S. J. Perelman in "Acres and Pains," to the doings of an illiterate hillbilly family who struck it oil rich and moved to Beverly Hills.

Then there's "APO 293," being produced by Screen Gems for the web, a World War II yarn set in the South Pacific; Brodkin's comedy "Wake Up Stupid," based on the Mark Harris novel and starring Larry Blyden; "Little Amie," situation comedy led by a seven-year-old character; and "Star Witness," a half-hour series conceived as a vehicle for two stars opposing one another in a courtroom drama. The opener for "Witness" has Lloyd Bridges and Barbara Stanwyck on the opposite sides of the table.

CBS-TV 'Clear Horizon' Bumps 'Surprise Package'

Soaper, with a space twist, returns to CBS-TV daytime, filling the spot to be vacated by "Your Surprise Package." Soaper, "The Clear Horizon" revolves around a young Air Force officer and his wife, stationed at a top priority missile and rocket-launching site at Cape Canaveral.

"Horizon" had a CBS-TV run from July, '60 through March, '61. "Package" bows out of its 11:30 to 11:55 a.m. slot on Feb. 23. Other morning daytime game show slated to be axed is "Video Village." Web is out shopping for a replacement.

Stuart Hood Sparks A Revitalized BBC-TV; Re-Patterns Program Sked

London, Jan. 23.

It's changed days for BBC-TV. Time was when BBC could be relied upon to let programs wander all over the schedules and make swift and frequent changes to popular shows—moves threw viewers into confusion and kept the commercial competition free from ulcers. Now, however, under the new regime of program controller Stuart Hood, BBC-TV has taken up a new "consistent" stance.

Reflecting closely established programming patterns of the independents, BBC has now aimed at solid midweek middle-of-evening fare comprising mainly U.S. vidfilms like (like Dr. Kildare," "The Defenders" and "Laramie") and comedies. After the 9:15 newslot, which anchors midweek evenings, programs branch out into documentaries, plays and films.

Weekend format on BBC has also undergone some revamping and now represents the Corp's best

TV's $1,000,000 Manshoot

urally, one of the big issues at the FCC hearings is the way the networks handle their newscasts, and, again naturally, if they come off well with Col. Glenn and the National Aeronautics & Space Administration, it won't hurt their cases before Newton Minow & Co.

No Faking This Time Up

As a consequence, there'll be no faking like the simulated pickup of the Capt. Virgil (Gus) Grissom capsule recovery the last time. This has forced the webs, it would appear, to intensify their efforts to find an exclusive, maybe dramatic way to beat out their rivals for the other kind of prestige—audience returns.

And this in turn has led to a melee, the likes of which is almost unimaginable to an outsider who doesn't realize how jealously the networks guard their reputations and fame. As a matter of observation, the crossfire among NBC, CBS and ABC has led at least one exec in tv to conclude that the manshoot has become "the plaything of network executives."

The network intermural competition for scoops, smart angles and such has been taken to the newspapers and, not unfairly, it is now being said that the execs are spending almost as much time on the propagandistic attitudes of the Glenn orbital flight as the newsmen are on arranging the complex and costly details of covering it on the air.

The three tv webs, their radio counterparts and Mutual Broadcasting, which is in radio only, are splitting the pool charges, which, as of earlier this week when the industry still hoped the shoot would take place today (Wed.), were said to be $400,000. The delays, the necessity of maintaining standup tv and radio crews, the uncertainty of when NASA can get their man off the ground and then back again, will jack up the price. Moreover, an estimated $700,000 will probably be spent by the tv networks alone, just in trying to build up coverage of the flight's peripheral aspects—President Kennedy's reaction, the reactions of the other astronauts and their families, the reactions from abroad, attempts to get pictures of the orbiting space vehicle and a host of other things that'll keep folks by the couch constantly interested in tv until Glenn comes down approximately six hours after he takes off from Cape Canaveral.

There may be a pool telecast (with ABC-TV cameras supplying the basic elements at Canaveral), but that's all that one can legitimately say is pooled. The war of propaganda, so often played among the webs but now with much more verve because of these hearings, became obvious late last week when a hassle developed among the three major companies over the use of NASA-ordained footage on the flyboys which was done at Langley Field. There was a NASA embargo placed on the use of the films, supposedly to restrict the use of the 20-or-more minutes of celluloid to use only two days before the flight. Naturally, when the takeoff date changed, so did the embargo. To avoid the complexity of events that ensued, suffice it to say the webs went wild trying to beat the embargo rap. NBC seemed, at first, to get their ahead of its rivals, when NASA (in this case in the person of William Lloyd of the Federal Agency) decided to let the webs use the footage a day earlier than the planned embargo break. (Evidently, this suited NBC better than the other webs because of the way their regular news programs fell.)

Latourette's Protest

One of the strongest protests on record in tv almost immediately came from Frank Latourette, an ABC producer. He wrote NASA and in part accused the space agency of "brutally and unjustifiably" violating basic journalistic principles and also of a "wholly unwarranted act of dishonesty and favoritism" (to NBC, of course).

Then, there evidently was another rule almost broken, when NBC made plans to pick up Glenn's voice live in flight after a seeming decsion had been reached to use the tapes of his voice. More cries from its rivals, and NBC decided to stick with the tape idea. (NASA's aim in sticking to tapes itself as to give Glenn a sense of freedom in talking to his earth-bound buddies rather than have the additional burden of self-consciousness in having to speak at the same time to the whole nation and the whole world (since BBC, via VHF Inc., is planning a tape pickup of the occasion.)

At one point late last week, the networks were calling the newspapers to explain how the other guys were trying to pull fast ones. The charges and counter-charges flew.

Lewis Sholenberger of ABC (formerly of CBS and an old news pro) is in charge of the pool. The pickup ostensibly will start from the minute Glenn starts his trip to the slim missile from Hangar S on the other side of Canaveral.

At sea, aboard aircraft carriers Wasp, Enterprise and Randolph, will be other tv and radio crews. There is another pool setup at the Vanguard Motel where the crowd shots (maybe 100,000 people) will be made. ABC has a jiffy processing van, a video tape van, a switching van and a master control van on hand. Shollenberger expects to go live at 7 a.m. on launch day. There'll be coverage probably late into the night, even after recovering of Glenn and his capsule.

Shollenberger was quoted as saying the job was so divergent and complicated that "no one network has enough equipment or manpower to do the job."

ABC, like its "friends in the tv business," will have cameras stationed in New Condord, Ohio, Glenn's childhood home and his present home in Arlington, Va. In all, ABC has about 40 men involved in coverage, that's outside its pool contribution.

CBS anchorman at Canaveral will be Walter Cronkite, aided by Charles Von Fremd and Dallas Townsend. For NBC, the key man will be Frank McGee, assisted by Willy Ley and Dr. Fran Field. Bill Shadel (in N.Y.) will anchor overall for ABC, with Jules Bergman, Arthur Van Horn, and Roger Sharp at the Cape.

These are merely representative names. The crowd and the "crowding" by network radio and tv as well as group stations and indies is fantastic, enough, said one observer, to drive NASA "crazy."

JFK Asks Boost In FCC's Budget To $13,100,000

Washington, Jan. 23.

President Kennedy is asking Congress for an increase from $12,504,000 to $13,100,000 to finance Federal Communications Commission for the fiscal year begnning July 1.

The increase includes $3,946,000 for the Commission's Field Engineer Monitoring, which keeps ears peeled on programming as well as technical violations by licensees. Overall, the Commission anticipates a rise in FCC personnel from 1,476 for the current fiscal year to 1,512 for fiscal 1963.

Federal Trade Commission bird dogs will likewise be beefed up if Congress goes along with the JFK budget requests.

Investigations into deceptive practices, including false and misleading commercials, are earmarked for $2,638,000 as against $2,288,000 allotted by Congress for the present year. FTC looks for an increase from 2,300 to 2,600 in the number of probes launched, including both deceptive practices and antimonopoly.

In the deceptive practices category alone, the FTC forecast it will issue about 500 complaints next year compared with 400 this and only 293 last. Commission operations as a whole will be financed with a budget of $11,845,000 in contrast to $10,221,000 appropriated by Congress for the current fiscal annum.

Broadcast operations of U.S. Information Agency would be stepped up considerably under the Kennedy budget. Of a total $14,400,000 increase (to $125,500,000) requested for the agency, $2,800,000 would be pegged for adding new broadcast facilities to Voice of America's far-flung network. Plans for fiscal 1963 call for production of broadcasts in English and 40 foreign tongues, using six domestic transmitters and nine abroad.

USIA's Television Service is allotted a fat increase—from $2,043,000 this year to $3,783,000 next. This arm of USIA acquires and produces tv shows for placement in outlets in foreign lands.

WPAT Standing Pat On Its Com'l Formula? Jos. Somerset's Slot

Joseph B. Somerset was named director of program operations for WPAT, in Paterson, N. J. According to the station's management, he in a great sense will be doing the job filled until recently by Bill Calvert.

Calvert, former veep of station operations for WPAT, quit shortly after the recent resignation of Dickens Wright as veep and g.m. Wright, who is remaining on as a consultant, was owner of the station until he sold it to Capital Cities Broadcasting chain for $5,000,000. In a letter, Wright said he was resigning over policy differences, hinting that the differences might be over the amount of commercials to be aired by the new ownership.

But the station says that it is going to hold to an old old policy of three commercials on the half-hour in the premium stanza, "Gaslight Review" and no more than three on the quarter-hour in other WPAT musical shows.

David Gordon, vet music director of the station and the man said to be as much responsible as Wright for the WPAT success format, was retitled director of music operations. Management says Gordon and new man Somerset (lately program supervisor for WPRO-AM-FM, Providence) will split the chores.

New veep and g.m., Daniel P. Weinig, is also heading up sales. For the time being, evidently no direct sales chief will be named.

attempt to beat its competitors at their own game. Starting lunchtime on Saturday, BBC snares sportslovers with "Grandstand" which carries, at times, more than double the audience of Associated TeleVision's and ABC-TV's sport-flavored outside broadcasts. The commercial contractors acquisition of tv rights to wrestling, however, is gradually pulling back some of the Saturday afternoon viewers.

Buildup to the Saturday night film on BBC consists of three click entries, first two of which are back-to-back— "Juke Box Jury," "Dixon of Dock Green" and "Perry Mason." And, suddenly, Sunday p.m. has become a highly competitive spot in which BBC's old film often outsteps indie live-and-tape programming.

According to Stuart Hood, Sunday afternoons can no longer be ignored. He seems to have found a successful child-and-adult formula here for BBC's claims 58% of the audience. Particularly strong in this time period is "Bronco" which faces ATV's kidvid skein "Supercar."

Speaking of the revitalized BBC web, Hood says he has deliberately aimed to make it more competitive and more professional while at the same time building each evenings to "some purpose." Current pattern, which is largely responsible for the increase in BBC's slice of the public, is to continue until March. In the summer, says Hood, considerable experimenting will be done although he will maintain a high degree of consistency.

"One thing we've learned," he says, "is that you can't get away with high thoughts and good intentions."

In line with his policy of using longer shows generally, the executive is now thinking more in terms of 13-segment series as opposed to six-episode skeins hitherto dominant on the Corporation's web. Examples are: "The World of Tim Frazer," "Maigret" and the new "Z-Cars" show plus, of course, all co-production deals.

vised crime and violence. The Senator added: "They blamed the taste of the American people and the paucity of imagination of tv writers or the producers. Since that time the committee has subpoenaed documents of major producers and the networks which indicate that the above was not an accurate picture."

Dodd had been holding a series of closed sessions since winding up the first phase of the public hearing last summer.

Drop Categories On N.Y. Emmys

For the first time, one of the chapters of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences is breaking with tradition and plans next spring to dispense with categories entirely in giving Emmy Awards. The New York chapter of the national org, headed by Betty Furness, is now going to entertain suggestions for "the outstanding achievements in local tv throughout the year."

The national Academy, next May, will continue the previous practice of giving awards within specific categories. Miss Furness described the move as a "way of unlocking the rigid restrictions imposed by categories—even allowing more than one outstanding achievement in a single area to win an award."

Besides continuing (year round) nominations from the N.Y. group's membership, each of the seven tv station managers in town will make suggestions quarterly for outstanding achievement in local tv.

There is at least one other variant from the national Academy technique of award giving, which calls for specific categories and voting by the membership. In New York, the membership, despite the dropping of categories, will choose the winners. In the Washington chapter, according to the Academy, a non-tv group is asked to choose the winners, but this system is not new to Washington.

Frizell Named NBC Paris Correspondent In Wake Of John Rich Tossout

The French Government, which is having its share of troubles in Algeria, Russia and other points of the world, is now having trouble with NBC—or perhaps it's the other way around: NBC is having trouble with the French Government.

In any event, the DeGaulle regime kicked NBC's Paris correspondent John Rich out for good, as the result of remarks he made at a recent National Press Club meeting in Washington and NBC has made Bernie Frizell its temporary bureau chief in the Gallic capital.

As it happens, Rich was supposed to have been barred from returning to his Paris post for the network for only "a month or two months." Then NBC, on Friday (19), started sending a flow of protests to Gen. DeGaulle, to President Kennedy, to Secretary of State Rusk and U. S. Ambassador James Gavin in Paris. This flow may have caused Paris to change its mind and bar Rich for good, which it did early this week.

NBC has not given up hope by any means of getting reporter Rich reinstated. Frizell (who might get the job permanently, according to wide guesswork, should Rich not make it) is being shipped at once to Paris where he is being listed by the web as its temporary bureau chief. Robin McNeil is going from the NBC London Bureau to give Frizell a hand, and Rich is being shipped at the end of this week to London, where he'll sweat out a possible reversal of his ukase by Paris and rove for NBC.

JAZZ DIGS NEW GIG: CHURCH

Victor Inks Name Artists For Big Push Into Jazz Field Here & O'seas

RCA Victor is enlarging its jazz image. In a program designed by George Avakian, pop artists & repertoire manager, Victor has launched its push into the jazz field with the signing of Sonny Rollins, Paul Desmond, Joe Morello and the new duo, Jeanne Lee & Ran Blake.

The jazz push, according to Avakian, will be directed at the international market as well as in the U.S. Avakian feels that jazz has a strong sales strength abroad and with some jazzsters could account for about 50% of the total sales.

He says that he's bided his time in moving Victor into the jazz arena because he wanted to get two or three people who are well known because it's somewhat difficult to build a jazz image for a label with new names. He feels that Rollins, Desmond and Morello have established reputations which will make acceptance for Victor's new jazz product easier.

Work With Brubeck

Desmond and Morello, incidentally, are members of the Dave Brubeck Quartet which records for Columbia. They'll continue with Brubeck on Col but have the greenlight to record for Victor as soloists. Avakian worked with the Brubeck bunch when he was on the a&r staff at Columbia several years ago.

Rollins, who returned to the jazz scene several months ago after a two-year hiatus, apparently was in hot demand. It's been reported that Victor gave him a $90,000 guarantee to cut five albums in two-and-a-half years with an additional $10,000 for anything over the five LPs. The tenor saxist and his new quartet are scheduled to record their first Victor LP within the next two weeks. The album is slated for April release.

Avakian will kick off his jazz program in February with a Desmond LP called "Desmond Blue." The saxist works on the disk against a background of strings and woodwinds written and conducted by Bob Prince. Drummer Joe Morello's set will follow in March with a large ensemble under Manny Albam's direction and with a smaller group working with arrangements by Phil Woods. The newcomers, Jeanne Lee & Ran Blake, are scheduled to make their Victor bow in May.

The company also plans to step up its reissue program. Disks by Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Lionel Hampton, etc., have been doing well in the U.S. and overseas, says Avakian.

Musicians Union Wants To Aid in Revising Mexico City Entertainment Laws

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

The Federal District Musicians Union has asked Mayor Ernesto P. Uruchurtu to permit it to participate in a proposed revision of regulations governing all forms of entertainment offered in this capital.

Union's position is that there should be more cooperation on part of city authorities in granting organization of public dances. Union also wants a return to "more adequate hours" for all nightclubs (currently a one a.m. curfew for second and lower category spots is still in force). And as another means of boosting employment, it urged that musical entertainment be offered in motion picture houses.

Venus Rey, head of the Musicians Union, insisted that "defects" in organization and administration by former city administrations have given this city "complicated regulations covering public entertainment, replete with obstacles." Rey wants to broaden scope of regulations to make possible use of musicians in spots other than nightclubs.

Pye Handling Chancellor

London, Jan. 23.

Pye Records, fastest-growing of the British independent labels, has added the U.S. Chancellor imprint to its fold. The company is also the outlet for Chess, Checker and Argo and handles Reprise in the U.K.

According to Pye, business expanded more than one third in 1961. During the year it launched four new labels and has now taken on another a&r man, Ray Horricks, to develop the Piccadilly label.

Brit. Songwriters' Guild Hits BBC's Low Tune Quota

London, Jan. 23.

The "feud" between the Songwriters' Guild of Great Britain (SWG) and BBC developed another wrinkle when SWG executive Reynell Wreford accused the broadcasting setup of operating a quota of British music as low as 33% over the 1959-60 period. Currently working to complete figures for 1961, Wreford indicated the same would most likely apply for that year, too. Other two-thirds of musical airtime went to foreign songs, mainly American.

And, says Wreford, at a time when Britain is at last making some headway in the amount of broadcasts received for "current items" (new songs), BBC radio has extended its use of oldies most of which are again American. Effect has been to offset the U.K. cleffers' gain in the former field, for while native songs cut use of new U.S. songs by 3,500 items over the period 1958-61, use of American oldies increased by nearly 7,000 items.

Unwilling to believe BBC would deliberately conduct an anti-British music campaign, SWG has sought meetings with Hugh Carleton Greene, director-general of the network, to aquaint him with facts and figures of which he may be unaware.

CAP NAMES F. SCOTT BIZ AFFAIRS TOPPER

Capitol Records continued its new year reshuffling with the appointment of Francis Scott to the newly-created post of business affairs administrator. Scott will now assume principal responsibility for negotiating and controlling artists & repertoire contracts as well as evaluating the profitability of product and marketing plans.

Reporting to Scott in the business affairs department will be P. Vaughn Burdick, director of financial review and analysis; William K. Minea, director of profit planning, and Karl Engemann, director of a&r administration. Scott reports directly to Alan W. Livingston, v.p. for phonographs and records.

A 13-year veteran in Cap's a&r department, Scott had been diskery's album producer for the past several years.

Grauer's Folk Package

Bill Grauer Productions has undertaken a project for the folk set. Francis James Childs, prolific writer of English and Scottish ballads whose material has been printed in book form but never recorded, will have a complete collection of his ballads waxed on Grauer's Washington label.

The collection will be released in four separate LPs under the title, "The Childs Ballads." Ewan MacColl and A.L. Lloyd will be the artists on the disks.

STIRS RENEWED ATTENDANCE

By MIKE GROSS

Jazz is developing into a regular churchgoer. The resistance to blending jazz with religion is wearing down, and more and more theologians are looking to jazz as "a symbol of renewed affirmation."

The tieup is spreading both here and abroad. For example, next Sunday (28) an original jazz composition by Ed Summerlin will be presented on "Look Up And Live," a CBS-TV network religious show and only a few weeks ago the first jazz church service in West Germany played to an SRO house.

Summerlin, who composed a "Liturgy In Jazz" for performance at Southern Methodist U. two years ago (it was later telecast on NBC-TV's "World Wide '60"), will conduct a jazz group of seven pieces on the upcoming CBS program. His composition was inspired by a poem, "Let Us Pray," by John G. Harrell, whose work is published in Motive magazine, put out by the Methodist Student Movement. The poem will be read on the program.

Jivin' the Hymns

The jazz service in West Germany took place in Hamburg with about 250 youths jamming into the Protestant church hall. A five-piece band played hymns with calypso and blues rhythm. There were so many people waiting out-

British Hit Twist As 'Kids' Stuff'

By ROGER WATKINS

London, Jan. 23.

Film and tv exposure has given the Twist every chance to get off the ground in Britain. Press here, too, is acclaiming it as "the new dance sensation" and, at last, Twist disks have entered the top 20 best-sellers. Even one nitery, Helene Cordet's Saddle Room, reports that The Twist is in. But the overriding factor is that, for the British, the Twist is just kids' stuff.

According to Joe Loss, bandleader and purveyor of Twist tempo at London's biggest dancehall, it's the "uninhibited" youngsters (up to about 18-year-olds) who are picking up the dance craze. The older ones, he says, are standing off. This seems to be the principal reason why night spots generally are not mopping up from publicity given to the dance via video appearances of Chubby Checker and others, plus two feature pix, "Hey, Let's Twist" and "Twist Around The Clock."

Additional evidence that it's strictly for the teenagers comes with the banning of the dance by the London Dance Institute because "it isn't really a dance at all." That the youngsters are interested in Twisting is without doubt.

Twist Platters Climb

For instance, teenage record buyers have pushed Checker's "Let's Twist Again" up to No. 7 on one chart, while the gradual building of longtime released "The Twist" has now eased it into 11th place on the same chart. Coming up, too, is Joey Dee and the Peppermints version of "Peppermint Twist."

Of all branches of U.K. show biz, the disk field seems to stand the most chance of soaking up Twist gravy and consequently a rash of new Twistdisks has hit the retailers. Pye Records, for instance, has issued three albums built around the new craze.

"For us The Twist is certainly happening," says Norrie Paramor, exec a&r man in the EMI (Electric and Musical Industries) stable. "And film companies have approached me to write music for upcoming Twist films." Established British rock singers have been signed, however, to provide a measure of insurance.

Infringement Via Tape Rates Bigger Balm, Pubs Charge in Unusual Suit

A precedental suit which would give music publishers the right to sue infringing manufacturers for general damages amounting to $5,000 was filed in N.Y. Federal Court last week. In the past the publishers received only 2c. per side for each disk infringment.

Attorney Julian T. Abeles, representing Harry Fox, agent and trustee for the plaintiff publishers, is contending that a tape is not a record and that it has been manufactured for "public performance for profit." This would put it into the general damages category and give the publishers the right to sue for more than the usual 2c. a side.

Named as defendants in the suit are the National Musitime Corp., manufacturer incorporated in Delaware, Charles Y. Rynd and Jerome K. Levy, company's president and v.p., respectively.

The action, which was filed for a flock of publishers, claims "that the National Musitime Corp., for the purpose of public performance for profit of the various musical compositions, distributed, sold and licensed recordings and reproductions and copies of such recordings thereof, on tapes from which the musical compositions could be and was reproduced in such public performance thereof."

It further alleges that such acts on the part of the defendants were perpetrated without any authorization, permission, consent or license.

The publisher-plaintiffs in the suit are: Shapiro-Bernstein, Peter Maurice, Famous, Paramount, Robbins, Feist, Miller, Bourne, ABC, Hill & Range, Alan Jay Lerner & Frederick Loewe, Sam Fox, Joy, E. H. Morris, BVC, Twentieth Century, Triangle, Leeds, Laurel, Valando, Hollis, Lombardo, Fairway and Planetary.

Presley's 29th Gold Disk

Elvis Presley has copped his 29th gold disk. The RCA Victor disker passed the 1,000,000 salesmark for "Can't Help Falling In Love." The award was approved by the Record Industry Assn. of America which audits sales for the disk companies on request.

The "Can't Help Falling In Love" platter was released Nov. 21, 1961, thus hitting the golden circle in less than two months' time. Presley recently became eligible, under RIAA rules, for another gold record for his LP "Blue Hawaii."

Col Scores Goal On Cultural Kick Of White House

Columbia Records is reaping the rewards of the White House's cultural kick. Last November Pablo Casals performed a concert for President and Mrs. Kennedy, which was recorded by Columbia, and last week the Kennedys had Igor Stravinsky, another Columbia artist, as honered guest.

Stravinsky was in Washington to conduct three performances of his "Oedipus Rex" for the Washington Opera Society. The opera was put into the groove by Columbia at a special session at Constitution Hall.

Attending the dinner for Stravinsky were Goddard Lieberson, Columbia prexy, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Craft, both of whom record for Columbia.

At the affair a disking of Jimmy Dean's "PT-109" was played. The record, which tells of the story of Naval Lieutenant John F. Kennedy, has not yet been released.

ARMADA HUDDLING ON SITE FOR '62 MEET

The American Records Manufacturers and Distributors Assn. (ARMADA) will hold its quarterly meeting in Chicago Jan. 29. This marks the first time in over a year that the session will be held in that city.

Primary matters on the agenda include the finalizing of the site and the dates for the 1962 ARMADA convention, and a report on the status of legislative activities to be given by Sigmund Steinberg, legal counsel for the organization.

Jordan Ross, ARMADA's exec secretary, working with Art Talmadge, org's prez, will report on the various sites under consideration for the '62 meet as determined at the last board session.

Disk's 'Love Moans' Only Heavy Breathing, Ct. Rules

Frankfurt, Jan. 23.

In Italy, the records are getting sexier and sexier. And a new disk put out by an American firm has just won clearance from an Italian court, it was learned here, after the lawyer proved that the "love moans" were only "the heavy breathing of a woman fleeing through the jungle with a lion at her heels."

Platter is the 45-rpm "The Jungle Chase," produced by U.S. Pacific Records Co. and brought into Italy through the Bluebell Record Co. The record was originally cleared by a lower Milan, Italy, court, last May. But the prosecutor appealed, and the appeals court just gave the disk its final okay for release in Italy.

Col Creates Corporate Marketing Staff For New Product Development

William P. Gallagher, marketing veep at Columbia Records, has formed a corporate marketing staff for the development of new products and marketing techniques for the firm's sales corporation, the branch corporation, the home music library and the special products division.

Appointed to the marketing staff are George Kling, Stanley Kavan, Peter Munves and James Sparling.

Kling has been upped to the position of director of market development. In his new assignment, he will assist in the development of plans and programs to expand present markets for Columbia products. Kavan has been upped to marketing director of pop albums and Munves has been promoted to the post of marketing director for classical albums. Both will work on Columbia and Epic record catalogs.

Sparling, as coordinator of product development, will specialize in the development of new commercial products for manufacture as well as for distribution. He rejoined Columbia several months ago, transferring from CBS Electronics, where he was veepee and general manager of phonograph operations.

Bikel's Scriptures Disk

Theodore Bikel is making a departure from his usual folksinging waxings for his 12th Elektra disk. The package will be a specially-produced album featuring the performer reading from the Bible and sporting an original musical score which was recorded in Vienna.

Called "The Poetry and Prophesy of the Old Testament," the album has a score by Dov Seltzer, who is the leader of the Israeli folk group, the Oranim Zabar. The set is slated for March release.

Limeliters' 'Sing,' Zentner's 'River,' Coward's 'Sail Away' Top New LPs

THE LIMELITERS: "SING OUT" (RCA Victor). This click trio, which has been churning out a succession of bestselling LP's, follows through with another highly attractive package. Once again, it's a fresh and colorful collection of folksongs done with the combo's identifying polish and occasional humor. The well-chosen repertory includes such fresh items as "Everywhere I Look This Mornin'," "The Lion and The Lamb," "Gilgarry Mountain," "The Little Land" and "Gotta Travel On." Best of the several comic numbers is "Pretty Far Out."

SI ZENTNER ORCH: "UP A LAZY RIVER" (Liberty). Si Zentner's orch is the latest of the big bands to rack up a sales score with a pop single. The clicko disk was "Up A Lazy River" which titles this LP and should help it roll over the retail counters. Zentner also applies his big band sound to such other clickos as "Take Five," "Never On Sunday" and "Moon River," and they emerge with a musical spirit that calls for steady programming.

NOEL COWARD: "SAIL AWAY" (Capitol). The "Sail Away" score gets an authoritative interpretation by Noel Coward, who wrote it. Coward's peformance is marked by good humor and an awareness of lyric values. His renditions of the title song and "Later Than Spring" and "Something Very Strange" are excellent in a ballad groove. Coward, of course, excells in the clever patter songs such as "The Passenger's Alway Right, "Beatnik Love Affair" and "Useful Phrases."

THE HIGHWAYMEN: "STANDING ROOM ONLY" (United Artists). The Highwaymen, five collegians, connected solidly in the folk field last year with their recording of "Michael." In this LP they show that they are much more than one-shotters. The dozen songs, all out of the folk repertoire, are given a charm and an authentic flavor that will help all programmers and bring special delight to the home spinners. "The Gypsy Rover," "Three Jolly Rogues," "Run Come See Jerusalem" and "Black Eyed Suzie" are good samples of their work.

ANDY WILLIAMS: "DANNY BOY AND OTHER SONGS I LOVE TO SING" (Columbia). Andy Williams' style is soft and easy in this grouping of familiar items. His warm baritone gives plenty of meaning to such as "Danny Boy," "The Heather On The Hill," "Tammy," "Secret Love" and "Misty." In all, it's a likable package that can't help win lots of spinning friends.

LESTER LANIN: "HAPPY-GO-LANIN" (Epic). Lester Lanin is no stranger to those who like their terp beat direct and to the point. His steady sales rackup of more than a dozen albums attest to that and this one hould have no trouble following a similar pattern. Here he has arranged enjoyable medleys of 40 evergreens and they bounce in a businessman's fashion.

MEL TORME: "MY KIND OF MUSIC" (Verve). A solid talent who has maintained an identifying style for some two decades, Mel Torme is still one of the classiest song purveyors around. Torme consistently delivers with taste and intelligence. In this set, he turns up with a group of top standards, including "You and The Night and The Music," "I Guess I'll Have To Change My Plans," "Dancing In The Dark," "A Shine On Your Shoes" and "Alone Together," among others.

"THE JUDY GARLAND STORY —VOL. 2" (MGM). Continuing its valuable rundown of early Judy Garland disks, this LP brings back some of the top songs which this performer did during her Hollywood years between 1938 and 1950. It's a solid songalog ranging from the memorable "You Made Me Love You" from "Broadway Melody of 1938" to "You Can't Get A Man Without A Gun" from "Annie Get Your Gun" in 1950. Other highlights in the set are "The Trolley Song" and "The Boy Next Door" from "Meet Me In St. Louis" (1945), "Singing In The Rain" from "Little Nelly Kelly" (1940) and, of course, "Over The Rainbow" from "The Wizard of Oz" (1939).

CAROL LAWRENCE: "THIS HEART OF MINE" (Choreo). One of the newest show biz stars, emerging from the legit ranks as a songstress and hoofer, Carol Lawrence registers as a fine stylist in this disk production. With a good voice and a warm attack, Miss Lawrence is most impressive in the slower ballads such as "Tell Me Lies," "The Year Turns Round" and "I Love You Porgy." On the up-tempo numbers, a metallic edge manifests itself in her voice.

"THE ANDREWS SISTERS' GREATEST HITS" (Dot). This set is a nostalgic evocation of the era when all gal trios were measured by the Andrews Sisters. Starting with the middle 1930s, and extending for some 15 years, this distaff combo sliced a long string of smash hits. Some of their biggest are reprised here, including "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen," "I'll Be With You In Apple Blossom Time," "Beer Barrel Polka," "Rum and Coca-Cola" and "I Can Dream, Can't I," among the dozen.

FRANCO CORELLI: "NEAPOLITAN SONGS" (Angel). A superb operatic tenor, Franco Corelli delivers this group of songs with an impressive command. While the repertory has a longhair character, Corelli's performance could make this marketable in wider circles. His rendition of the familiar "Come Back To Sorrento" could be the exploitation peg.

CALIMBO STEEL BAND: "THE HEART OF TRINIDAD" (GNP). It's hard to match the driving tempo of a steel band and the Calimbo outfit recorded in this package shows off style to advantage. It has the spirit and excitement of Trinidad which should win it spinning attention. "Yellow Bird" and "Jamaica Farewell" are especially good and the vocals by Chuck Wood give 'em an added plus.

"COUNTRY MUSIC HITS" (RCA Camden). This low-priced label had wrapped up an outstanding folk music bargain in this collection of past hits. Top artists in the alfalfa idiom, including Eddy Arnold, Pee Wee King, Jim Reeves, Don Gibson, Grandpa Jones, Davis Sisters, Slim Whitman, The Carter Family, Gid Tanner, Hal Lone Pine, Hank Locklin, Hank Snow and Elton Britt, are represented in this set of backwoods Americana. Herm.

(Mercury) . . . . . If I Should Lose You

Dinah Washington's "Tears and Laughter" (Gilt) blends a nifty ballad with a meaningful vocal performance that builds up to payoff proportions. The song, incidentally, is the title of her new Mercury album. "If I Should Lose You" (Famous) is another fine ballad slice that will attract programmer interest because of the standout delivery.*

BEN E. KING . . . . . ECSTASY
(Atco) . . . . . Yes

Ben E. King's "Ecstasy" (Presley-Progressive-Triot) drums up a captivating Latino beat with the help of a fine instrumental and choral backing to bring it into the payoff circle. "Yes" (Progressive-Triot) spotlights a nifty vocal approach in an okay rhythm pattern.

HANK BALLARD . . . . . DO YOU KNOW HOW TO TWIST
(King) . . . . . Broadway

Hank Ballard's "Do You Know How To Twist" (Loist) brings the Twist's daddy back with a rhythmic slide in company with The Midnighters and it's headed for a big spinning score. "Broadway" (Loist) is a high-flying slice that has a chance to pull in a lot of juke coin.

TIMI YURO . . . . . LET ME CALL YOU SWEETHEART
(Liberty) . . . . . Satan Never Sleeps

Timi Yuro's "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" (Shapiro-Bernstein) puts this oldie into scoring position again via the solid vocalizing that's sure to win over the jock and juke crowd. "Satan Never Sleeps" (Feist*) has moody ballad touches and an interesting piping push for spinners' attention. Side is the title song from an upcoming 20th-Fox pic.*

ROBERT MITCHUM . . THE BALLAD OF THUNDER ROAD
(Capitol) . . . . . Mv Honev's Lovin Arms

Robert Mitchum's "The Ballad of Thunder Road" (Leeds) is a re-release that has started breaking out in some areas. It fits into current song-saga vogue and should be picked up all over. "My Honey's Lovin' Arms" (Mills*) is a so-so vocal effort on a frisky fave.*

ALONZO TUCKER . . . . . RAMONA
(Cub) . . . . . What's Wrong

Alonzo Tucker's "Ramona" (Feist) puts the oldie in a rocking-shouting groove to catch teen interest for a spinning splash. "What's Wrong" (Merrimact) blasts across a rocking beat that will work especially well in juke situations.*

JAMES DARREN . . . . . HER ROYAL MAJESTY
(Colpix) . . . . . If I Could Only Tell You

James Darren's "Her Royal Majesty (Aldon†) will stir up spinning excitement with its strong beat, good lyric idea and punchy vocal. "If I Could Tell You" (Alamo-SkyRock) captures the rhythmic ballad form nicely to give it okay spinning chances.*

JOHNNY DESMOND . . . . . TWISTIN' ROSE OF TEXAS
(Diamond) . . . . . Hello Honey

Johnny Desmond's "Twistin' Rose of Texas" (Tobi-Annt) puts the "Yellow Rose" into Twist form and it could swing into the upper brackets via the vibrant vocal. "Hello Honey" (Desmo) pours out some sweet talk in an easy ballad form.*

JULIUS LAROSA
YOU CAN'T KEEP ME FROM LOVING YOU
(Kapp) . . . . . If I Had My Way

Julius LaRosa's "You Can't Keep Me From Loving You" (Holist) is the vocal version of the "Midnight In Moscow" instrumental click and it should move out in the spinning areas, too. "If I Had My Way" (Shawnee Press) brings back a familiar oldie with a likable vocal approach.*

JACK SCOTT . . . . . GRIZZILY BEAR
(Capitol) . . . . . Cry, Cry, Cry

Jack Scott's "Grizzly Bear" (Januaryt) pushes across a solid sound that's matched with a novel lyric idea to attract lots of teenager attention. "Cry, Cry, Cry" (Wolfpackt) shapes up as another sure spinning entry via the rhythmic beat and vocal drive.

DEAN BARLOW . . . THIRD WINDOW FROM THE RIGHT
(Lescay) . . . . . Baby Doll

Dean Barlow's "Third Window From The Right" (Famous) could come out of left field for a spinning rackup because of the breezy vocal style and bright lyric idea. "Baby Doll" (Lescayt) has average ballad appeal with a rocking background to appeal to some of the young folks.*

ARETHA FRANKLIN . . . . . I SURRENDER DEAR
(Columbia) . . . . . Rough Lover

Aretha Franklin's "I Surrender Dear" (Mills) gives the solid standard another spinning chance because of the powerhouse piping and top-drawer arrangement. "Rough Lover" (Danbyt) rides along at a swinging pace with a vocal drive that's quite impressive.*

Paray Delays Retirement As Det. Symph Conductor, Remains on Partial Sked

Detroit, Jan. 23.

Paul Paray has been named conductor emeritus of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra but will continue to lead the orch for part of the next two seasons. Meanwhile, two of three guest conductors have been named to "spell" Paray. They are Sixten Ehrling and Werner Torkanowsky.

The arrangement permits Paray to continue active leadership of the orch he has led since it was reformed in 1951. Paray had been scheduled to retire after this season. However, hundreds of letters have been written to him, the orch board, and local newspapers urging Paray not to retire.

He will conduct the first nine weeks of next season, then return to Europe as a guest conductor. In the 1963-64 season, Paray will lead the Detroit orch for four weeks. Ehrling, Torkanowsky and the third guest conductor yet to be named, will lead the orch on an alternate basis.

'Theme Song' Off Key With Seattle World's Fair

Seattle, Jan. 23.

The Seattle World's Fair has no official theme song. That fact was emphasized here by Fair officials when they blew the whistle on a song, "See You In Seattle," published and copyrighted by the State Commerce and Economic Development Dept. Recordings and sheet music of the song are now on sale, with promotion as the "theme song" of the Fair.

Harry Henke 3rd, assistant v.p. of the Fair corporation, has ordered the sponsors to obtain a license from the Fair) or withdraw the song from the market.

An earlier fair song, "Meet Me in Seattle," has been licensed by the fair and it is receiving royalties. Henke said it was not an official song, but is licensed and has "our wholehearted support."

Composers of the unsanctioned "See You in Seattle," are Seattle musicians Tubby Clark and Ben Harkins, and Mrs. Virginia Burnside of the How J. Ryan & Son ad agency. The Ryan agency, which has the state's account for World's Fair advertising and promotion, commissioned the song. Ryan said it was necessary because his office needed the music for fair promotion.

The record jacket for "See You in Seattle" has pictures of the Space Needle and monorail, and a Century 21 symbol.

Henke said the Century 21 Corp. owns all "fair emblems and names and is entitled to a royalty for the use of the name and symbol on records, seals and covers."

COL UPS THOMPSON & ELIZABETH LAUER

W. Robert Thompson and (Mrs.) Elizabeth Lauer have taken over new assignments at Columbia Records. Thompson has been appointed national promotion manager for Columbia Records Sales Corp. while Mrs. Lauer has been upped to special assistant to Col president Goddard Lieberson.

Thompson replaces Salvatore Forlenza who has been appointed regional promotion manager for the northeast. Thompson will be responsible for coordinating promotion of pop products by the Columbia field sales organization. Succeeding Thompson as regional promotion manager in the Mountain Pacific region will be Robert A. Murphy.

Mrs. Lauer, who's been Lieberson's exec secretary since 1957, will now assist him in all activities relating to original cast show albums. She'll also continue in some of her former duties as exec secretary.

Frankie Avalon discusses his role in Columbia's "Sail a Crooked Ship" on Dick Clark's "American Bandstand" on ABC-TV Friday (19). . . Charles Feldman takes over as branch manager of Cosnat's Pittsburgh outlet.

MEX TOOTERS' UNION IN R 'N' R CRACKDOWN

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

The Federal District Union of Musicians has ruled that rock 'n' roll and tropical music combos cannot accept tv engagements without prior official approval. Venus Rey, head of union, said an accord has been reached with Televicentro to "control" the number of units playing rock and tropical rhythms.

For some time musicians have been complaining of inroads in tv by the smaller combos playing "exotic" rhythms, with work for more bonafide musicians curtailed. Union had protested several times to Televicentro. But when no action was taken, Rey threatened a musicians' walkout. Management then agreed to the new arrangement.

Irving Granz Jazz Pkg. Hits Big $13,700 in 2 Gigs

"Jazz A La Carte," Irving Granz's touring music package, grossed around $13,700 in two performances last weekend (19-20). The show features pianist Ahmad Jamal and his trio, singer Etta James and drummer Shelly Manne and group.

On Friday (19), the package grossed $5,600 in one performance at the Kiel Opera House, St. Louis. The following evening, Saturday (20), it drew an overflow crowd of 2,300 to the Denver Auditorium for a take of $8,100. The latter show was scaled to a $4 top and, despite four degrees below zero weather, required an additional 100 seats over the house's regular capacity to handle the turnout.

Twisting The Twist

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

"We will give a Latin twist to The Twist," explained Ruben Fuentes, artistic director of RCA Victor Mexicana, in talking about the diskery's recording plans. "And since the public is not storming stores for records with this rhythm, we will 'rejuvenate' traditional Mexican songs."

Top Mexican singers and orchestras will be used to wax new versions of Mexican ditties, Fuentes said, with recording going on jointly here and in the U. S. Some standards being adapted to "twisting" include "Besame Mucho," "Mariquita Linda" and "Currucucu Paloma."

Mexican Disk Biz Sees New Sales Records in '62

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

While last year was a banner one for diskeries and retail platter outlets, consensus of industry is that the next 12 months will see a continuation of the boom and new peak sales figures. With complete figures still spotty, indications are that some diskeries recorded a 20% sales boost over 1960, and look for an equally good year in 1962.

Salvador Suarez, who heads the major retail chain called Record Mart, indicated that in this city alone the firm sold $920,000 worth of records as compared with $824,000 in 1960.

A new daily sales record for firm was established Dec. 23, with $18,000 chalked up. Domestic disks led with 60% of total while the balance was imports.

Among foreign warblers Frank Sinatra and Nat King Cole appeared to be tied in lead, with Johnny Mathis and Ray Conniff also selling well. Mexican leaders included Cesar Costa for rock and roll, The Hooligans, Teen Tops and Crazy Boys. For more sedate interpretations longplays of Los Panchos led list, with Javier Solis, Virginia Lopez, Leda Moreno and Enrique Guzman also doing well.

British Decca Records, which has undergone some reorganization of late, has come up with a plan to take some of the strain off its artists and repertoire staff in an attempt to regain its once-potent position in the British pop music market. Whereas, up until a few weeks ago, the company's a&r people worked on diverse projects, the plan now in effect calls for three separate disk divisions—each to handle a different area.

Like the Capitol Records' blueprint recently instituted here, Decca has set up pop singles, pop LPs departments, each operating individually on its own projects. The pop singles operation is headed by Dick Rowe. In New York last week to visit with London Records staffers and to introduce new Decca personnel, he related that the company is trying to "revitalize" its operation and "to build up its English line again." To help with this move, two new a&r men have added to his pop staff—Peter Attwood and Tony Meehan. Also working with Rowe is Mike Smith.

At one time, Rowe points out, Decca had a fine stable of pop singers but the company hasn't kept up with the times. It had been releasing several U. S. disks. But, while the other British diskeries had been cashing in on the current boom in native singers, Decca had allowed itself to fall behind. The new regime has been set up to hunt out new U.K. talent. "We have a half-empty table," Rowe says.

Billy Fury's Disclick

The company's new plan has already produced one new singer with a disclick in the person of Billy Fury whose "I'd Never Find Another" is currently hitting British charts. Other signings to Decca include Anthony Newley, whose "Pop Goes the Weasel" is getting U.S. play and Karl Denver. Rowe's staff will only handle pop singles production.

Decca has a considerable gap to close what with Electric and Musical Industries (EMI) having put four a&r execs into action some time ago to deal exclusively with home talent. These men—Norman Newell, Norrie Paramor, Wally Ridley and George Martin—have been responsible for the buildup of such U.K. talent for the label as Cliff Richard, Helen Shapiro, Johnny Leyton, Craig Douglas, Acker Bilk, Matt Monro and Adam Faith, most of whom have scored well for EMI over the past year. EMI claims to have over 150 British singers under contract as opposed to Decca's 100.

At Pye Records, where 70 U.K. singers are under contract, the label is beefed exclusively with home artists under the aegis of newly-joined a&r man Ray Horricks, with more signing expected shortly. Philips, which has pacted some 65 local singers, has no all-

Cliff Richard En Route To Second Gold Disk With His Version of 'Young Ones'

London, Jan. 23.

Cliff Richard's version of "The Young Ones" seems set to earn him his second gold disk. Sales now total 800,000 on the title tune disk from the Associated British film after only one week on release (and 524,000 in advance orders). While EMI (Electric and Musical Industries) is having problems meeting the demand, sheet music sales of the number are also rocketing.

According to Cyril Simons of Leeds Music, some 20,000 sheets had been sold at the end of only one week (this total is nowadays a sizeable one for the complete run of a number). One large London sheet music wholesaler, F. & R. Walsh, reports difficulty in supplying needs of the sharpest trade done for some years.

Entry of "The Young Ones" into the U.K. hit parade at No. 1) makes a triple disk success for the Associated British film. Previously, "When The Girl In Your Arms Is The Girl In Your Heart" by Richard, and "The Savage" by The Shadows instrumental group entered top 10 chart. Soundtrack album of the film is also doing boff biz, says EMI.

Inside Stuff—Music

The Record Industry Assn. of America certified for goldisk awards two pop singles and 15 LPs for 1961. This was the largest number of records certified since the RIAA began its auditing procedure in 1958. The pop awards went to Lawrence Welk's "Calcutta" (Dot) and Jimmy Dean's "Big Bad John" (Columbia).

The albums were: Lawrence Welk's "Calcutta" (Dot), Frank Sinatra's "Come Dance With Me" (Capitol), Kingston Trio's "Sold Out" (Capitol), Glenn Miller Orch's "Glen Miller Story" (RCA Victor), Tennessee Ernie Ford's "Spirituals" (Capitol), Elvis Presley's "Elvis' Golden Records" (RCA Victor), Harry Belafonte's "Belafonte At Carnegie Hall" (RCA Victor), Van Cliburn's "Tchaikowsky's Piano Concerto" (RCA Victor), The Platters' "Encore Golden Hits" (Mercury), Elvis Presley's "Blue Hawaii" (RCA Victor), and "Christmas Carols," "Theatre Land," "Film Encores Vol. 1," "Gems Forever" and "Strauss Waltzes" all by Mantovani on the London label.

To qualify for an RIAA-certified gold award a pop single must have amassed a sale of at least 1,000,000 units and an album must have accumulated a minimum of $1,000,000 in factory billing. For one-record album this is equivalent to 500,000 units.

The first jazz record ever made has been presented as a gift to the Free Library of Philadelphia by Lawrence M. Stevens, an investment broker. The gift is a recording by Nick LaRocca's original Dixieland Jazz Band and was made by the Victor Co., in Camden, N. J., in 1914. The numbers are "The Lively Stables Blues" (fox trot), b/w "The Dixie Jazz Band One Step."

LaRocca, a New Orleans cornetist, formed his band around the time the first platter was made. He was the composer of "Tiger Rag," "Fidgety Feet," "Jazz Band Ball," and other works. The recording will be kept in the permanent collection of the library's music department.

George R. Marek, vicepresident and general manager of RCA Victor, and composer Harold Rome have joined the advisory board of the Musical Theatre Academy of N. Y. Already with the Academy are Leonard Bernstein, Jerome Robbins, Robert Whitehead, Jule Styne, Abe Burrows, Garson Kanin, Dore Schary and Joshua Logan. The Academy begins its initial semester Feb. 5 with Sanford Meisner, Lehman Engel and Hanya Holm, chairman of the departments of drama, music and dance, respectively.

A survey of approximately 60 ASCAP writers conducted by Bruno Zirato Jr., who produces CBS Radio's "Carol Burnett-Richard Hayes Show," resulted in still another "Top 10" list of popular songs. The top 10 are: "Stardust," "Night and Day," "All The Things You Are," "September Song," "St[illegible] Blues," "Tea For Two," "Where Or When," "Begin The Beguine," "Tenderly" and "Old Man River."

Film Promotion Via Theme Songs Being Overdone, Sez Morris Stoloff

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, Jan. 23.

Morris Stoloff believes the trend toward film promotion through identification songs has introduced certain evils along with the added angle of salesmanship.

"It is being overdone," said the composer-conductor, who received 14 Academy Award nominations and three Oscars (for "Cover Girl," "The Jolson Story" and "Song Without End") and who achieved popularity with his adaptation of "Moonglow" for the film version of "Picnic."

"With any new idea, things happen that are detrimental," he added. "Now songs sometimes intrude during a film for purely commercial reasons without enhancing the story. The producer becomes overanxious. This doesn't always work," said Stoloff, here with his wife on the first leg of a global trek that combines a vacation with promotion of his latest film, "Fanny," for Warner Bros.

One of the pioneer music men in films, Stoloff explained, "With 'Laura' and later 'High Noon,' producers became very much aware of the exploitation a song from a motion picture can do to enhance its earnings. The producer is interested in money—from the extra promotion and from the additional residuals from the sales of records and the publication of a song.

'Picture Rates First'

Stoloff does not agree with the extent to which this has been carried. He said, "The picture should be the first consideration." He noted that "Laura" was written as a theme and only later had lyrics added. Citing another example, he said, "'Love Is A Many Splendored Thing,' a beautiful song, paid off both ways.

"Generally, I believe this has become an evil," he continued. "You can go too far in a commercial way in trying to get a hit song with a picture."

Drawing on his own experience in creating the "Theme from Picnic," which sold over 2,000,000 records, Stoloff described how it was written, with the advancement of the film's story being the sole consideration.

"Joshua Logan, the director, had directed the stage play," Stoloff recalled. "In the show, he had used 'Moonglow' for the dance sequence. He asked to use it as a good luck omen in the film because it had worked in the play. The scene showed a very strong physical thing happening between William Holden and Kim Novak. There was no dialog.

"I thought about it for a while and said I think I know what it needs. I suggested the song become a love theme for the picture. It was a lucky thing and it worked beautifully."

Hits Track Albums

Stoloff also takes exception to the practice, somewhat nudged by the fact that most studios now have their own record labels and publishing companies, of releasing albums of film scores complete down to fragmentary music.

"There is no question about it," he said. "In a motion picture scorther is a lot of filler music that does not always make for independent listening pleasure. For the album of 'Fanny' what I did was use the motion picture music as the basis for the record, but with an editing job mainly for listening purposes. I also wrote extra music so the songs would have beginnings and endings."

Now a freelancer, Stoloff was music director at Columbia for 24 years. He began his career as a "serious" musician, studying under Leopold Auer and touring the U.S. as a concert violinist at 16.

"When sound came into motion pictures in 1927 I was playing with the Los Angeles Philharmonic as first violinist," Stoloff recalled. "There was a call from Warner Bros. They had to have a scoring and wanted certain musicians from the symphony orchestra.

"I was entranced by the whole thing," he reflected. "I made more money in one day than in a week with the symphony—and that was a factor for a young man. I became a renegade as far as serious music was concerned. I had resigned a responsible position with a symphony to work in films."

Ga.'s Peppermint Lounge

Atlanta, Jan. 23.

Atlanta now has its own Peppermint Lounge, right in the area where Yankees and Confederates fought it out way back yonder. Featured in lounge, which opened in spot formerly occupied by Escoe's Restaurant, is, natch, a Twist Room, where lessons in the new dance craze are given, for free, to patrons.

Providing music in spot, which opened last week, are Piano Red & the Show Stoppers.

British Pubs Invade Disk Biz to Sidestep Major Co's A & R Men

London, Jan. 23.

In an effort to sidestep the power of a&r men in the major diskeries, several British publishers are stepping into the record business themselves. Led by a pubber-agency-recording company tieup involving Essex Music, Lyn Dutton agency and Record Supervision Ltd., major publishing houses like Chappells and Francis, Day & Hunter are handing big diskeries ready-to-release platters.

Trend involves a considerable shift in risk. Publishers now stand to shoulder the overhead—expense of artist, musicians, studios etc.—whereas before this type of negative costs was assumed by the diskeries.

Needless to say, the wheelin' and dealin' twixt pubberies, artists and disk companies are rife. Most common deal, according to trade sources, is for the pub-produced platter to be handed to a major disker gratis with the publisher and artist splitting an agreed royalty.

Talented songwriters are raking off from this new operation too. It is no longer an exception for a top cleffer to get coin in advance from a publisher for his next half-dozen or dozen songs.

The a&r men welcome this development, asserts Eddie Rogers of Chappells, who now helms his house's pop activities and is himself a freelance recorder. With the increasing number of platters released per month, (200-250), a&r execs are constantly on the lookout for a good, independently-produced record.

Franklyn Boyd, who makes indie disks within the Belinda group has already predicted that Britain will follow the U.S. in a move towards more freelance a&r men and thereby more independent disks (VARIETY, Jan 3.). Smaller pubberies, including Southern Music, Good Music, Dick James Music, are latching on to this new beat, too.

So are artists managements to a lesser degree. Bunny Lewis, for example, is preparing to enter independent disking shortly and, he says, several other agencies and managements may soon follow suit.

Philips Marketing New CBS Label in U.K., Eire

London, Jan. 23.

The deal between Columbia Broadcasting System Inc. and Philips Records here, which has been in the offing for many months, has finally been officially confirmed. As of May, Philips will market the CBS label which is bowing in the U.K. and Eire. John Humphries has been made label manager for the U.K.

Philips is also to release material from the U.S. Vanguard catalog on the Fontana label. This second deal, which takes effect next month, "marks the start of a long-term association between Philips and the Recording Society Inc of New York," says Philips.

Scheer Joins MGM As Singles Nat'l Sales Chief

Lenny Scheer has been set as national sales manager for all MGM, Verve and Cub single product. According to Andy Miele, diskery's director of marketing, Scheer will also be responsible for singles sales promotion and Julie Rifkind, national disk jockey manager for the three labels, will report to Scheer.

Scheer, who's been in the music and record business for the past 10 years, has had sales and promotion spots with United Artists Records and ABC Paramount.

Memphis Sets Name Bands

Memphis, Jan. 23.

Don Campbell, skipper of the Hotel Peabody, the only local night spot playing name bands, has inked the following crews for the 1962 season in the swank Skyway room:

Paul Neighbors, Lester Lanin, Emile Petti, Don Glasser, Chuck Foster, Russ Carlyle, Claude Thornhill and Dan Belloc. Foster will make encore engagement following Belloc's stint.

Stress Better Product, Sinatra Urges Industry At His Reprise Powwow

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

At Reprise Records' first national sales meeting held here Sunday (21), topper Frank Sinatra acknowledged that the industry was going through the problems of evolution on the distributing and retail levels.

Sinatra urged that the entire industry concentrate on better product—better planned releases and integrity in merchandising. He added, "The public knows what it wants and it's up to the record company and the entertainer to deliver."

Sales prexy Jay Lasker stated that 1962 will be the most critical year to date in the history of the business. He added that Reprise is coming in as a new babe (it's nine months old) in an industry that is throwing off its old, tired and precedent ridden taboos and getting ready for today and tomorrow.

Jazz

side that the pastor put on a second show to accommodate them.

The packed church in Hamburg substantiates Wilson Wade's theory that jazz would help fill churches. Wade, a professor of religion at Dartmouth U., stated in an article in The Christian Century, a non-denominational magazine, that jazz can offer more than traditional church music because it has two things that traditional music lacks—honesty and the ability to reflect the age truly.

He further stated, "If we in the church are really open to the gifts which God continually sets in our midst, we may find that jazz is the long-awaited symbol for the renewed affirmation we so desperately need."

Another Viewpoint

And from Roger E. Ortmayer, of Southern Methodist's Perkin's School of Theology, there's still another view. He states, "My own conviction is that so-called 'classical' music has about come to a dead end, and that the new American music, 'jazz,' at least holds some hope of renewal. This would not be the first time this has happened in the church, nor presumably the last—but apparently it is going on."

In New York, John Gensel, of the Church of the Advent at Broadway and 93d St., has already experimented with jazz, having brought in Charlie Mingus' group for an innovation called "Adventures In Vespers." Pastor Gensel, incidentally, is known as the "Jazz Minister."

Father Kennard, an instructor in philosophy at Loyola U. in L.A., has been quoted as saying "to swing is to affirm." Professor Wade has followed this up with, "If it is true that 'to swing is to affirm,' then let us swing."

Br. Decca

British label but estimates that 50% of its monthly pop releases feature Britishers.

Shuffles Personnel

In Decca's pop LP department Hugh Mendl, who in the past has specialized in albums, particularly legit packages, is handling a&r chores. Frank Lee, until recently overall head of everything, is now also working with LP product while maintaining an administrative post for Decca's whole recording operation.

Rowe feels that by separating the responsibilities of Decca's a&r staffers the label will be able to make specialists out of its a&r men and thereby shorten the home talent gap that much quicker. Whereas Decca's Fury disk has hit the charts, it is the company's only British-made disk in the top 20 as opposed to EMI's five, Pye's two and Philips' two. The other 10 spots go to U. S. waxings.

Decca's move to bolster its U.K. roster is further necessitated by the fact that local talent is now in greater demand than ever and U.S. hits no longer seem to be authentic clicks there as they used to be, a fact Decca relied on for its successes.

60 Years, Vaude Still Dynamite

[Big Bookings at Tivoli, Melbourne]

By ERIC GORRICK

Sydney, Jan. 16.

Tivoli at Melbourne, of circuit of same name, is celebrating 60 years of variety—only house that could say that here.

It all began back in 1901 in the Harry Rickards' era, when this colorful Cockney launched a new operating venture from which has grown the Tivoli Circuit as it is known today. Following Rickards, came Hugh D. McIntosh, ex-fight promoter, who changed the name of the New Opera House, as it was first called, to the Tivoli. This was in 1914.

In 1921 the Tivoli passed from the hands of Hugh McIntosh to a new company headed by Harry G. Musgrove. With the world-wide depression came yet another change, and the leading figures in the company that took over from Musgrove were two performers well-known to Aussie audiences via the old Fuller loop, then opposition to the Tivoli—Mike Connors, an American.

In 1934 Musgrove again took over the loop and Frank Neil, an enterprising showman with a flair for discovering talent became general manager and producer. The death of Neil in 1940 gave Wallace Parnell a difficult task when he took over the reins, but it was his great knowledge of show biz that enabled him to stage a succession of hit shows in Sydney and Melbourne.

In 1944 David N. Martin acquired the controlling stock in the loop and Martin immediately launched a vigorous expansion policy, bringing big name stars to Australia at the peak of their careers, including Chico Marx, George Formby, Tommy Trinder, Wiere Bros., Winifred Atwell and many others, as well as importing the Katherine Dunham Dancers and the Folies Bergere. This policy was climaxed by the purchase of the present Melbourne Tivoli site and an expenditure of $300,000 on modernizing the theatre to world standard.

The untimely death of David Martin whilst talent-buying in the U.S. was a shock to local show biz. Now, with 60 years of variety behind them, the current joint managing directors of the loop—Lloyd Martin, son of the late David Martin, and Gordon Cooper, are conscious of the Tivoli's heritage and are currently finalizing plans for a top array of key talent from the U.S. and England throughout 1962.

Current show at the Tivoli, Melbourne, is aptly titled "Golden Days" and stars Hutch, Alec Finlay, Freddie Morgan, Linon, Grecos, Kenet & Jani and Alistair McHarg.

Tivoli has a terrific hit in Sydney with the "Ice Follies," starring Pat Gregory, Frank Berry, Bill Christopher, Harvey Weber, Howard Hardin, Jodie Gray, Wim de Jong, Dorothy Lee, Joe Chisolm, Lacona & Mayumi.

"Follies" set up new records at the Tivoli, Melbourne, prior to Sydney season and should score a four months' run without difficulty on current advances sales tempo.

Dee & Starliters Still Together, His Agent Sez

Philadelphia, Jan. 23.

Reports that Joey Dee had broken with his group, the Starliters, were denied at the Jolly Joyce Agency here, bookers for The Twist unit. Dee had to let two men go during his run at the Crescendo, Hollywood, because the cafe management balked at their consistent latecoming, Joyce said.

Dee remains at the Crescendo until Feb. 11, when he moves east with one-nighters in Oklahoma City and Tulsa and two nights in Pittsburgh (15-16). Dates in New England will be followed by a week's run at Sciolla's here, starting Feb. 26. Agency has set the Twisters for a 10-day Australian tour, beginning March 17, at a $20,000 fee. In April, they are slated to make another picture for Paramount, with Harry Romm producing.

Arabic Terpers Again Twisting in Hub; Ends Oriental Dance Drought

Boston, Jan. 23.

Oriental terpers are back in Boston after an absence of nearly a year. First nitery to feature the Arabic twisting is the newly redecored and reopened El Morocco, 350-seater upstairs on Tremont St., on the site of the former Ada Bullock beanery.

The new spot, with a four-piece band, and Mike Sarkissian, features four of the terp acts in continuous entertainment with a $2 minimum on Fridays and Saturdays.

El Morocco, operated by the B&B Corp., with Louis DiBella, head of F. DiBella & Sons, biggest banana importing firm in Boston, as prexy, opened its doors Friday (12) to turnaway biz. Acts will be changed each week, the management said, and the bill will be expanded.

There have been no oriental terp spots in the city since closing of Club Zara last year. At that time there were several clubs featuring the art, and the performers left town for Washington, which has been embracing the ancient near east dance.

Gale to Gershwin As R 'n R Slips

With rock 'n' rollers slipping as one-nighter grossers, Tim Gale is probing new channels for arena and auditorium fodder. He has assembled "A Night with Gershwin" package which will go on tour starting March 9. It's also set for a full week at McCormick Place, Chicago, March 27.

The package will mark the one-nighter debut of "singing cop" Saverio Saridis who bowed last month at the Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel, N.Y., in one of the most publicity laden debuts ever given a new performer. Filmster Rhonda Fleming has been signed for the femme lead.

Also inked are Earl Wrightson, who conducts a Sunday musical television show, and Skitch Henderson will conduct. The Ray Charles Singers round out the bill.

Gale, who produced several rock 'n' roll and rhythm & blues one-nighters, at one time was head of the touring show department at General Artists Corp. He left to do his own promotions and go into personal management.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Keith Monroe in the January issue of Harper's Magazine puts a psychiatric angle on the operations of William Harrah, of Harrah's casinos in Reno and Lake Tahoe, going over ground that was plowed in VARIETY nearly a year ago. The author, at one point, takes issue with the propriety of using Sanford Research Institute's facilities for the profit of a gambling casino. But in a statement quoted in the article, the institute is engaged in the "Accumulation, analysis and presentation of objective information. While conclusions may be drawn from this information, the use to which it is put is the prerogative of the client organization alone."

Cliffie Stone, Active Again, Sets Up Stone Associates

Hollywood, Jan. 23.

Cliffie Stone, in retirement for past two years, has returned to personal management and set up Stone Associates, in which he is joined by Jim Halsey, Kansas booker, and Charlie Williams. Hank Thompson and Wanda Jackson have been brought in as clients and firm has also inked Capitol pactee Roy Clark.

Stone over past decade handled Tennessee Ernie Ford, Tommy Sands, Polly Bergen, Joanie O'Brien and others, but doesn't rep these acts now. Two Stone tune pubberies, Snyder Music Co. (ASCAP) and Central Songs Inc. (BMI), are reined by Joe Allison.

DON RICE
Comedy
25 Mins.
Playboy Club, Chicago

Rice has a deceptively easy and offhand approach as he unreels his gagalog of keen one-liners and ingratiating anecdotes. The Playboy Club would not ordinarily be an ideal setting for a low-pressure comic, but Rice had control of auditer attention all the way. His material is wideranging, covering politics, air travel, family situations and saloon society, but always with a goodnatured tolerance for human weakness and foibles.

He consistently pulled good yocks, as for instance with his local-reference gags: "Chicago is the only city where you can get a haircut at 3 a.m.—in an alley." Or: "My father was a tailgunner on a beer truck in Prohibition." He also works over teevee: "For fast, fast, fast relief—turn off your set." Or, of the space program: "They ought to name the next series of missiles Social Security—you can't fire 'em and you can't get 'em to work."

Rice's astute wit and well-filled gag bag is adult, but never blue.

Seattle's World's Fair Springboard For Sundry Columbia Packages

Seattle's Worlds Fair this summer is already having an impact upon talent. A number of imported groups being handled by Columbia Artists in N.Y. relate to that exposition. Notable is the Argyll & Sutherland Highlanders with the Royal Scots Greys which will bring regimental, pipe, drum and Scottish dancing. In all this outfit will spend about 14 weeks in the States, including Madison Square Garden and Hollywood Bowl engagements.

CAMI is also bringing over Rapsodia Romina, a company of 50, under Cultural Exchange, for a Seattle date as part of some 12 weeks of touring. If Roumania is an unusual country of origin for a concert group so, too, is Portugal from whose ancient university, Coimba, will come the Orfeon Chorus of 80.

One of the longest itineraries next season, perhaps 30 weeks, will be for the Pitlochry Festival Theatre of Scotland. These dramatic actors will alternate G. B. Shaw's "Pygmalion" and "The Circle" by Somerset Maugham. Some 16 are in troupe.

Three philharmonic orchestras are due under the Columbia banner, 120 men from Leningrad and somewhat smaller complements from The Hague and Hamburg. The British king of schmaltz, Mantovani, will be back for a seventh annual tour. He brings himself and a few key men, recruits the remainder of his personnel in the States. He plays some nine weeks and rates as Columbia's top puller at present.

Something new in the Columbia shop is management of the limited tour of the N. Y. City Opera under Julius Rudel. Latter has toured a few weeks annually under its own auspices and recently played dates within the state under subsidy. It will confine itself to the area east to Cleveland.

Columbia has put together its own Cameo Opera group of 11 (Judson, O'Neill & Judd division) to present Donizetti's "Elixir of Love" in English.

Ice Show Included

Seattle, Jan. 23.

The opening day shows for the Seattle World's Fair are set, plus first week's presentations, except for the Opera House. Opening night, April 21, in the Opera House will star Igor Stravinsky and Van Cliburn with the Seattle Symphony, conducted by Milton Katims. The opening ceremony will honor Stravinsky's 80th birthday year, and the famed composer will conduct one of his works.

The Ceylon Dancers will open the new Playhouse, Shinstad & Johnson's "Ice Follies" will be the first presentation in the Arena, and the Spanish Riding School of Vienna will perform in the Stadium. All three are booked for the entire week, with the "Ice Follies" set for a nine-day run.

Harold Shaw, the Fair's performing arts director, says there will be a big show in the Opera House the first week, but it may not be definitely set until just before opening. Tickets for the first day reception are scaled from $5 to $50 and most of the $50 seats are already sold.

Shaw, just back from a trip to Europe, has ranged the world for the last year lining up shows for the fair. He says the entertainment program will boost all local show business in Seattle and will leave Seattle with the biggest and best civic centre in the country.

Berle Succeeds Cantor As President of JTG

Milton Berle will be formally installed as president of the Jewish Theatrical Guild Feb. 11 in conjunction with the Guild's tribute to Danny Thomas at the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria. Berle succeeds Eddie Cantor who becomes president emeritus. Harry Gould becomes board chairman replacing the late William Degan Weinberger. Gould is overall chairman of the Thomas tribute.

Harry Brandt is chairman of the Thomas dinner while the coordinating committee comprises Emil Friedlander, Abe Lastfogel and Nat Lefkowitz.

French Line Sues

Seattle, Jan. 23.

The French Line has filed suit in Federal Court here against Northwest Leasing Corp., Mark Howard, of Seattle, president, and E. J. Ted Crosby, of Spokane, vice president, asking payment of a $293,605 promissory note. The action stems from Northwest's failure to go through with an agreement to acquire the French liner Liberte.

Claude E. Wakefield, local attorney, who filed the suit on behalf of the French Line, said New York attorneys plan to file a similar action in N. Y. against Everett Crosby, another v.p. of the Seattle firm.

The two Crosbys are brothers of Bing Crosby.

Wakefield said Howard and the Crosbys signed the note Nov. 14, promising to pay before Dec. 15. When the note deadline was not met, the French Line sold the ship to Luria Bros. and the India Trading Co.

Geo. Burns And Carol Channing Form New Act

After several years as a single, comedian George Burns is taking on a new partner, Carol Channing, herself a successful single in the supper clubs. Burns, the male top of Burns & Allen (Gracie Allen who is Mrs. Burns), will be playing the circuits with a new and different kind of partner. He'll be switching from Miss Allen's dumb characterization to a dame who plays dumb, but shrewdly.

The duo is being set for the Illinois State Fair and the Dunes Hotel, Las Vegas. They will also play a stand at Seattle's World's Fair and Harrah's, Lake Tahoe. The new pairing is being represented by MCA. They'll split the salary evenly.

Miss Channing, current at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria's Empire Room, has given credit to Burns for starting her in supper clubs, talking her into the cafe circuit following her long run as Lorelei in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Burns has been playing Las Vegas niteries as head of a unit in which he presents new and rising talent. He started Bobby Darin in Vegas several years ago.

The new pairing will also give a broader base to both performers. Burns goes well in the mass rooms, while Miss Channing is a supper club personality. They can play either type room as a team.

'ICE FOLLIES' SCORES RECORD 520G IN N.Y.

"Ice Follies" wound up a two-week stand at Madison Sq. Garden, N.Y., Sunday (21) with a record-breaking $520,000, a take which is surprising because of the generally low b.o. tone of ice shows around most parts of the country. The gross is about $80,000 more than what it scored last year for this run.

Despite a comparatively weak start, the gross increased to the point where the last portion of the run was sold out completely. "Follies" has been having a mixed season. In some cities the boxoffice has been way off while business has been holding up in others.

Aims At Las Vegas Re-do Of Dad's 'Star & Garter'

Milwaukee, Jan. 23.

Mike Todd Jr., in Milwaukee recently discussed possibility of reviving Mike Todd Sr.'s, "Star and Garter" production, for a Las Vegas unveiling late this spring. He's conferred with Gypsy Rose Lee, who was starred in the original "Star and Garter," on Broadway in 1940's. Gypsy Rose just concluded a 10-day run at Ray Boyle's Swan Theatre in "Third Best Sport."

Eartha Kitt Preceding Her London Gig With TV Date

London, Jan. 23.

Eartha Kitt is to fill two tv engagements in Europe before starting her cabaret season here at the Talk of the Town on Feb. 19. The first will be in Stockholm on Feb. 6, to be followed by Frankfurt on the 18th.

Miss Kitt, who played the Talk of the Town a couple of seasons back, has been booked for a 13-week run. All deals were negotiated by Norman Payne of MCA.

Danny Thomas' St. Jude Hospital Preems Feb. 4 In Memphis Amid Fanfare

By MATTY BRESCIA

Memphis, Jan. 23.

The official opening and unveiling ceremonies for the multi-million dollar St. Jude hospital project of Danny Thomas is set for Feb. 4 in this southern metropolis. Thomas will arrive here on the eve (Saturday night) of the "inaugural" for his patron St. Jude and will emcee a plush dinner toasting Edward Barry, Memphis barrister and civic leader who has been one of Danny's staunch supporters of the project on the local front.

Barry donated $50,000 as a personal gift to the program. The Memphis philanthropist is also chairman of the 25-member board of governors, with Thomas as head of the group and Abe Lastfogel, William Morris prexy, as president of the hospital committee.

Tennessee U. S. Senators Estes Kefauver and Albert Gore have accepted invitations to attend the opening. Congressmen from other southern states and Gov. Buford Ellington also will be on hand for the event.

The preem will get coverage from top dailies in southern cities. Television, radio stations and wire services will also cover the event. Thomas will plane here from Hollywood along with his personal manager Lastfogel. Others in Thomas' entourage will be his wife, Rosemary, three children and his brothers from Toledo.

Gov. Buford Ellington has proclaimed "Danny Thomas Day" throughout the state. Memphis Mayor Henry Loeb is going one step further by tabbing his proclamation—"Danny Thomas Week."

St. Jude's Hospital will be a center for research into cures for leukemia and other childhood diseases. The American Lebanese-Syrian Associated Charities has already pledged to maintain the $3,000,000 institution financially. ALSAC is a charitable group made up of Lebanese and Syrians from all sectors of the country. Thomas is Lebanese.

Following the Memphis preem Thomas will plane to Miami, where the ALAC chapter will honor him with a $50-plate testimonial banquet on Feb. 7 in the Fontainebleu Hotel. He then skies to New York, where he'll be honored again by the Jewish Theatrical Guild, the Empire Arts Guild, Creative Arts Guild, Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, the Actors Fund, the Welfare Fund of AGVA, AFTRA and the Motion Picture Relief Fund at another $50-plate dinner Feb. 11 at the Waldorf-Astoria. Cardinal Spellman will speak at the event.

All proceeds from the banquets will go to St. Jude hospital.

LIBERTE'S SCRAPPING ENDS SEATTLE DEAL

Seattle, Jan. 23.

Negotiations which might have bought the French liner Liberte to the Seattle World's Fair as a floating hotel and nitery have collapsed in Paris due to lack of time to consummate the deal, along with additional costs. The 51,839-ton vessel sails from Le Havre Thursday (25) for Italy, where she will be scrapped.

A contract by which the Northwest Leasing Corp. was to have acquired the Liberte was cancelled by the French Line. It subsequently sold the ship to Luria Bros. of New York, and India Trading Co. of Italy. The Seattle Port Commission and Century 21 Corp. (World's Fair Operators) were dickering for the vessel after the Northwest deal fell through. But the decision to scrap the liner ended any possible agreement.

Jones & Kozlov Expand Casino Chain Through So. America; Names Planned

Hey, Waitress!

Minneapolis, Jan. 23.

It's not only The Twist that's a rage with Twin Cities' niteries at this juncture. Another such trend nowadays is scantily garbed glamorous waitresses.

One after another of local establishments is going in for this sort of thing which previously has been limited to cigaret selling and checkroom gals. For example, in its newspaper and other ads the French decored Poodle Club here stresses "Can-Can girls to serve you!" figuring, of course, they themselves are an attraction.

Ski Dek Bows In Remodeled Riverside, Buff

Buffalo, Jan. 23.

Schine's Ski Dek, the remodeled former Riverside Theatre in the Black Rock section here, was opened to the public on Wednesday (17). The unveiling was the occasion for one of the most potent publicity programs an entertainment project has received here in years. Newspaper space, running to pages in the rotogravure sections and full page ads in the regular editions, was supplemented by radio and tv announcements over local stations.

Prior to public opening, a series of special showings were arranged for the press and area bigwigs. Press kits and other publicity releases were widely distributed throughout western New York and southern Ontario.

The Riverside has been completely remodeled with a Swiss ski resort decor. An elaborate ski shop occupies the front of the lobby and there are attractive snack bars, nursery, and outfitting rooms. The main auditorium is decorated with a mountainous snow and ice motif.

J. Meyer Schine, David Schine, Donald Schine and other execs of the Schine enterprises were present for the opening as was Bill Doll who is handling the publicity. The Ski Dek will operate from 10 a.m. to midnight weekdays and from noon to 10 p.m. Sundays. Admission, which includes all equipment, is $1.50 for first hour, 65c each additional half hour afternoons and $1.75-.75 evenings.

UPTOWN OVERHAULED; PHILLY'S SOLE FLESHER

Philadelphia, Jan. 23.

Uptown Theatre, the city's only remaining film-vaudery, is being given a $170,000 overhaul by Milgram Theatres Corp. North Philly house is set to reopen Feb. 9 with a new marquee, lobby seats, stage equipment and interior decor.

Georgie Woods, local deejay (WDAS) and stage show impresario, brings in the first footlights attraction Feb. 16. David Milgram, head of the chain, plans to follow the Woods show with other stage fare, a la the Apollo Theatre, New York.

Genevieve Tags Delayed Brooklyn Date For April

Genevieve will play out her cancelled Brooklyn engagement in April according to Felix Gerstman who was to have promoted the singer's Jan. 14 concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Date was tabled because of the general state of unpreparedness of the entire show. The chantoosey is doing a revue type layout which needed more rehearsal before playing to New York audiences.

This is the second Gerstman promotion cancelled in recent months. A Jersey City concert by Judy Garland was scratched because of the singer's illness one day before the scheduled appearance. The date will be played in April.

A longrange circuit for name talent is being mapped in the South American area by Clifford Jones & Jake Kozlov, former hotel operators in Las Vegas, who are now opening more casinos in the equator countries. Their latest operation is slated to bow in May. The venture is a new casino in Paramaribo, Surinam. Now under construction, it initially will use local acts but with a growth of tourism name talent will be used.

It's also likely, according to Jones, that names may be used in order to entice new tourists. It's the same type of growth pattern that has been used effectively in all casino countries including Las Vegas. The duo also operates in Quito, Ecuador.

Their largest operation is in Aruba, D.W.I., which is the sole spot now using name talent. When conditions warrant, Jones says, he'll circuit the names in that area to the other casinos.

Jones & Kozlov were forced to relinquish their Las Vegas gaming holdings because of their Cuban operation. The Nevada Gaming Commission bars a license holder from operating in a foreign country. Jones was a stockholder in the Thunderbird Hotel, while Kozlov had been identified with several hotels in the area. Jones was also a lieutenant governor of Nevada and a Federal judge. He is now a practicing attorney in Nevada.

The pair had also operated the International Casino, Port au Prince, Haiti, but sold out to another group. However, they may resume that operation because of a default in payments by the present operators.

PORTLAND HOME SHOW DRAWS RECORD GATE

Portland, Ore., Jan. 23.

The 1962 Home Show produced by Tommy O'Loughlin racked up a record 72,000 admissions at the Coliseum during its nine-day run ending Sunday (21). The layout had 332 booths and exhibits.

Show was headed by the Mills Bros. on the first seven days with Ming & Ling and George Arnold's band in support. Pianist Jo Anne Castle replaced the quartet for the last two days. Tab at the gate was $1 and 50c for children. This was O'Loughlin's first production for the Portland Home Builders Assn.

Chris Connor Pkg. Clicks In 2-Wk. Japanese Tour

Tokyo, Jan. 23.

Sayonara two-show bash at this city's Sankei Hall curtained boff two-week Japan tour by package of Chris Connor, accompanied by Ronnie Ball trio, and the Horace Silver Quintet. Yank clarinetist Tony Scott, longtime resident, guested at sayonara dates to strong mitting, adding to overall impact.

The Connor-Silver unit played 17 shows at halls, clubs and tv studios in tour of Nippon keys. A spokesman for sponsoring Art Friends Assn. said the take topped that of Art Blakey and His Jazz Messengers, who toured similar circuit under same banner at this time last year.

Art Friends has two years to run in agreement with Monte Kay to present modern jazz year-opening programs. Under consideration for next year are units of Miles Davis and Sonny Rollins.

Ceylon Dancers Repeating

Ceylon National Dancers, who first appeared in U. S. in 1959, are due back late this month for a national tour under auspices of the Asia Society Performing Arts Program. Troupe is set for Jan. 30 at the Hunter Playhouse, New York.

The cross-country schedule extends until the company opens at the Seattle World's Fair April 21 for an eight-performance stand. Troupe, which is to be enlarged for the upcoming tour, arrives in N. Y. Jan. 21 via Air India.

Edward Robinson named publicity director for the Performing Arts division of the Seattle World's Fair.

Flordia Avec French Touch

transplanted to the American scene. Maybe the price ain't right—but they don't give it away either in Cannes, Cap d'Antibes, Nice or Monte Carlo—nor even in St. Tropez. There is even a Maxim's—not the Vaudables' but operated by Felix Young and Andre—and good.

Equally impressive is the competitiveness that continues among the hoteliers but there is a common aim by all concerned, apparently, to make catering to deluxe customer requirements a going business and not a realty promotion checkergame.

It's no longer a case of "this year's hotel" because the durable values count in the long run with the regulars. This and the personal contacts between clientele and the hoteliers.

Convention City

Transcending both is the growth of the convention business which makes possible the area's economic survival. Without that, few could stay open, other than the pop priced motels. Result is that, as for example, when the Americana, in Bal Harbour (above MB) had 3,000 of the cement & masonry industry in attendance they spread them up and down the beach, into adjacent hotels but kept the cream grand ballroom, banquet, official agenda and kindred meetings on its own premises. The freres Tisch (Loew Theatres), incidentally, departed from the Gallic influence with their hotel, which is themed to all-the-Americas. The nearby Ivanhoe and Kenilworth (latter is Arthur Godfrey's favorite haunt and CBS origination point) are in the more stolid Anglo-Saxon motif.

Show biz-wise Harry Mufson's Eden Roc is the Palace-Palladium of the Beach since Ben Novack is converting his Fontainebleau into a "closed-door resort" policy (about which there may be some doubt, incidentally). Novack has a posh Gigi Club ($100 membership) going for him, with Ted Strawter's tiptop terp music (just shifted to Frank Hale's Celebrity Club in the Poinciana Playhouse, Palm Beach) as the prime lure. The next-door Eden Roc, however, has an equally posh Mona Lisa Room, also with two crack bands and right next to it is the Cafe Pompeii at which Tony Martin (with added strings and a mixed quartet for twisting and harmonizing) opened resoundingly last Wednesday, to be followed by Alan King and the Barry Sisters this week. Incidentally, Martin must have taken some new kind of juvenile pills; he's in tiptop, this-side-of-39 shape, and makes with the ballads as good as ever. "Little Buck" (Conrad Buckner) was his entr'acte, with some expert legmania.

French Revues

Morris Lansburgh utilizes the Deauville as the kingpin for the marathon entertainment policy he operates for a string of affiliated hotels. Barry Ashton's "Bonjour Paris" vies with Lou Walters' "Scandales de Paree" at the Carillon. Both hostelries are a block apart, at 67th and 68th Sts., and both have lavish Lido de Paris-style revues, although a Yank belter, Kay Stevens, who bespeaks beaucoup potentialities as a comedienne is the highlight of the Deauville show. Latter (Ashton's) is also more on the nudie side but Walters' revue has the edge on the overall tally. Both, like most spots, the Eden Roc included, rely on the "Miami night life" bus tours to beef up the "Burma Road" seats.

As a side-bar, a number of spas have sprung up in Miami and, as part of "the waistline is your lifeline" ballyhoo, that segment of the clientele brings over its own fruit juices and kindred nonalcoholic beverages at $3 a head (after they have had their caloric dinners at the respective hotels) they view the show with no alcoholic beverage indulgence.

The Americana's Jack Young-George Arnold "Spice On Ice" also borders on the French motif and heralds its direct-from-Las Vegas origin. It boasts a good new comedy team in Burt Taylor & Bud Mitchell, latter making like a noisy busboy - from - the - audience - entrance-bit but he soon dons black-tie for zany antics. Just departing was Johnny Bachemin; a clever choreographer-pianist-comic, currently at Murray Franklin's zany trap (where caught). More about Bachemin anon. Johnny Flanagan as a "wacky WAC" clicks in "Spice On Ice" which gives accent to Rodgers & Hammerstein and kindred musicomedy motifs.

Franklin's nitery is unique and a show biz haunt not for naught although multilinguistic Kay Carole & Tommy (a Yiddish-brogued dummy) have yet to be "discovered." She's a natural for the Ed Sullivan show or with Perry Como, who could foil Miss Carole's native Italian nifties. She also sings in French but "Tommy" (should be "Irving") is her tour-de-force. Comedienne Terry Haven, The Cookies, Franklin's own zanyisms, and Frankie Hyers (Club 18) recall the best of the Jack White-Jackie Gleason-Pat Harrington-Hyers antics. Never a dull moment.

Jack Low, now sparking the Biltmore, made some noise with Al Fike, an infectious pianologist who stirred a little excitement and business in Fort Lauderdale and seemingly pulled a large contingent of loyal customers to M.B. Fike is an unorthodox entertainer whose "schoolteacher turned comedian" conjures up a Sam Levenson analogy. However, he is totally different. Fike's infectious style borders on the corn but sells well because he's ingratiating and willing. Fundamentally he is more of a lounge rather than a nite club act. Also, that "Mister Show Business" billing is not only overambitious for what he offers but imparts a wrong image of sophistication. Fike is folksy.

Boniface Low is a Walter Jacobs (Lord Tarleton) alumnus, as is Jimmy Hitz, now managing the Harbor Island Spa. Latter first opened as manager at the Americana, which Charles W. Craddock now handles in big league, convention business manner with Charles Stone, Milton Towbin and Mrs Al Tisch, mother of the Loew Theatres toppers, very much on the scene.

Jean Suits, ex-Dreier Hotels (midtown Manhattan), succeeded Jacobs as major domo of the Diplomat, which Sam (Food Fair supermarkets) Freedland owns. Damita Jo is concurrent in the Tack Room, which uniquely raises its stage so that the diners see the show without shifting into another room. George Fox, former Diplomat manager, is dittoing for Mufson at the Eden Roc.

Surprising to Eastern Airlines' "Golden Falcon" (crack jet, first class flight) passengers is the $1-a-drink charge for cocktails etc.

That is one tipoff on Miami Beach's popularity apparently — space becomes increasingly hard to get as the season rolls into high and the aviation companies cash in. Remember when airlines wooed trade with French cuisine and vintage wine?

Legits

Up in Palm Beach former dancer Frank Hale (& Patterson), now one of the moneyed gentry (trucking, food distribution etc.) is quite the civic pillar with his plush Royal Poinciana Playhouse. It is as complete and lavish a legit theatre as could be desired. His Celebrity Room, adjacent to the theatre, is open for dinner and post-theatre entertainment. He plays and pays stars like Durante, Joe E. Lewis et al. $10,000 a week. Just opened is Ted Straeter's orchestra, ex-Persian Room (Hotel Plaza, N.Y.). Hale's adjoining dressingroom setup makes it an actor's delight. Currently Patrice Munsel is rehearsing an English play, "Chrysanthemum" for pre-Broadway. Victor Borge did a Kiwanis benefit. Jule Styne was there reheasing Celeste Holm's new act; latter has lost over 20 pounds incidentally.

In Miami the Cocoanut Grove Playhouse is a kindred dine-and-theatre subscription operation and doing well with Menasha Skulnik's "Uncle Willie," following "Bye Bye Birdie."

Paul Bruun, long on the Miami Beach Sun (Storer Broadcasting-owned sheet), now publishes his own weekly MB Reporter. Lary Soloway (Variety and N. Y. Times) has taken over on the Sun as columnist.

Rene Black, long a fixture at the Waldorf-Astoria, makes the Fontainebleau's cuisine ultra.

Jack Klass, another Gotham expatriate, is a suave maitre d' at the Eden Roc's Cafe Pompeii.

Don Shoemaker made news as the new editor of the Miami Herald which is building a lavish new plant.

Major Albert Warner and Bernard Gimbel at the Hialehah opening, which marks the traditional milestone kickoff for "the season."

Dick Ettinger, board chairman of Prentice-Hall, bought a home in the Bal Bay Yacht Club sector, as did Leo Van Muching (the Heineken's tycoon) and Norman Land (Polaroid). (The "clubhouse" device still retains some of that Florida "screening" of people. Instead of ethnic or other reasons, the formula appears to be "congeniality" and "mutuality of interests".)

Channel 2 on local tv is good stuff for Spanish-and-English classes, and sets an interesting pattern for kindred educational timeslots.

Among Personages

Jane and Goodman Ace, Harry Delf, Swifty Morgan, Max (Stage) Asnas among the Eden Roc habitues. Shirley (NBC Monitor) Eder at the Americana.

Carl Erbe in and out, working on the Doral Country Club (Alfred Kaskel's elaborate hotel and eventual homesite realty development), which has the Beach hoteliers second-guessing on its potentials; "golf windows," and the like.

Playboy Club getting a play with a marathon of shows in the sundry rooms, accenting "no minimum charge" but all having "entertainment charges" of $1.50 to $2.50.

The Beach hotels also have no couverts per se, but utilize $2.50 to $5 beverage charges on top of the dinners (steak $10.50); or $7.50 minimum beverage charges to non-diners so that average checks range from $20 to $30 per head, depending on the attraction.

Strippers and Ribaldries

Periodically there are raids on the peeleries and B-girls joynts around 22d and 23d Sts.

There is also the usual quota of ribaldries. Belle Barth is back, so is Lenny Bruce. Patsy Abbott, at Patsy's Place, is her own one-woman operation. In between the indigo stuff she belts a good ballad and has excellent pianistic foil in Margi Sherwin, with Bernice Sell as "maitre d'ess" (so billed).

Bill Jordan continues at his Bar of Music which he heralds as the oldest continuing (26 years) nite club, citing that Murray Franklin's is only three years old. Jordan seemingly chooses to identify the hotel rooms as lounges or quondam entertainment spots.

The Roney-Plaza, along with other key hotels, has been coasting with twist policies until the season gets rolling. The Roney also has Marion McPartland, with a jazz trio, and is currently undergoing an extensive facelift.

More offbeat is Eddie Schaffer's "East Side Story" at the Lucerne, a packaged Yiddish-American vaudery in which Barton Bros. ("Joe and Paul" recording, a ribald fractured-Yiddish disk), Norman Brooks, Michel Rosenberg and Esther Sutherland participate. It's an al fresco show for the nostalgic harker-backers to New York's 2d Ave. and Loew-Proctor brand of vaudeville. Brooks, the Toronto road company of Al Jolson, clicked big but owes it to himself now to forget the Jolson medley and acquire a more solid format wherein he could do Jolie's stuff in one highlight number, but evidence some original style on his own. Negro songstress Miss Sutherland was out of her element; the Bartons are funny, so is the versatile Michel Rosenberg. Emcee-packager Schaffer should introduce the acts and get out of their way a bit more; he overdoes the warmup stuff with distracting results. Withal, indigo Yiddish vaude but most of it funny.

A more authentic Israeli revue is headed by Shoshana Damari at the Monte Carlo (in the "Exodus" Room), titled "In The Land of Milk and Honey." Producer-director Jacob Baal-Teshuva and Bernard Cohen, caught on Larry King's radio show, were pointedly asked about the "M&H" title's parallelism to the Broadway show, and one observed that "since God has the copyright on 'milk and honey' as a synonym for the Promised Land" there was no compunction about the title conflict. They hinted at taking this show to Broadway.

Alan Courtney, a lammister from Gotham, has been some 13 years in the Miami belt and claims origination of the beeperphone interviews/conversations with listeners. He's not as conciliatory in his reactions to captious listeners as for example, "Long John" Nebelor Barry Gray (in the metropolitan New York belt) but obviously has a commanding hold on his WQAM listeners. Latter invariably sounded alert to national and global political affairs, several bordering on the esoteric.

Larry King is another local radio-tv personality (Courtney is just AM) who originates a late-breakfast hour from Pumperdinck's, a 67th Collins Ave. road company of Lindy's, with good (WAME) interviews; and at night does a local variation of an "open end" teleinterview show. One night on Channel 10 he had show biz attorney—now bestseller author—Louis Nizer on from 11 until past 2 in the a.m. He's a disk jockey ,who evidences larger horizons.

Some hoteliers are concerned about the boom in cooperative, beachfront apartments, many of them in operation and more going up. They're de luxe setups at comparatively (to those $40-$50-$60-a-day hotel rates) reasonable rentals.

RENO AND LAKE TAHOE

January 3, 1962

Dear Lee:

What can we say that hasn't already been said about "Mr. Showmanship"? Your first appearance at Harrah's five years ago was just great. Now, the score is six - six successful South Shore Room engagements, with each succeeding appearance better than the one before.

The last LIBERACE date, by the way, was the topper. You never played better; the staging was beautiful; and your whole production was outstanding.

We're looking forward to your next visit to Lake Tahoe and Harrah's in 1962.

My best to you,

Bill Harrah

P.S. So you won't forget, that opening date in '62 is August 23rd.

New Acts

CHRIS RAYBURN

Songs
20 Mins.
Left Bank, N.Y.

Chris Rayburn is provocatively-figured, nicely-gowned performer. She projects tunes with a style calculated to incite. Negro miss mixes standards with tunes that are not heard often which gives her a note of interest.

Miss Rayburn dwells lightly on the sexy side of the song spectrum. She doesn't have to go deeply into these matters, they manage to make themselves known anyhow. She offers a turn that still needs more development, but seems in the right groove. Jose.

SHIRLEY HARMER

Songs
30 Mins.
King Edward Sheraton, Toronto

With voice ability, looks and wardrobe, Shirley Harmer is making her first appearance in a Toronto night club. She is breaking in a new act here that has special material written by Allan Bertram, with arrangements by Jerry Hoelki and Ricky Hislop.

Her singing is a far cry from the nice-girl-next-door ditties allowed her by the CBC. She has a sexy, sophisticated look about her now. Miss Harmer has a sensitive style, is hurt by lack of pacing, but this can be remedied.

Apart from Bertram's new material, she wisely sticks to pops and demonstrates that she's at home alternating whisper or torch style songs. Miss Harmer has power when needed and received real attention during her Oak Room stint. McStay.

CLAUDE GAUTHIER

Songs
46 Mins.
Le Hibou, Ottawa

If ever an act is written for folk chanter Claude Gauthier, it should have nothing phoney in it because this 22-year-old is talented, warm and serious. He looks like a robust Sinatra and sounds like a mild Mathis. Properly handled, he would be big for niteries, disks and intimate rooms. But there's a catch: he's not interested in anything but the intimeries where he can cuddle the patrons vocally and visually.

Gauthier has a Columbia LP and on Alouette 45 rpm using his own compositions. He works entirely in French, isn't comfortable in English, and there's no attempt to stage the stanza. Even for the locations he prefers, he needs to be organized, though the sound he produces is clicko. Gorm.

KIRK STEVENS

Songs
30 Mins.
Blinstrub's, Boston

Here's a novel refreshing act, first to come on with kilts for some time. Kirk Stevens is from Scotland and here only a short time. Possessor of a powerful voice, he captures the audience from walkon in his McIntosh hunting kilts, Montrose doublet, sporran, Mary Janes, and plaid socks with the traditional dirk stuk in one. He's great with the Scottish songs, and proves his versatility by singing Italian, American and Irish numbers. But the songs of bonnie Scotland make the most impact.

Stevens has some funny lines in delineating Scottish and Irish songs. He does a swinging 30 minutes, weaving in standards with the Scottish airs, and giving out with a big "Granada." He's working in a takeoff on Sir Harry Lauder, and soars to new heights with "Roamin' in the Gloamin'." Stevens has good stage presence and can deliver. Great visual presentation for clubs, tv shows and vaude. Guy.

OBITUARIES

BILL HOFFMAN

Bill (Elwood C.) Hoffman, 44, former CBS radio script editor, television writer and Broadway playwright, died at his New York home Monday afternoon (22) of a heart attack. Two of his plays are currently under option, "Helen of Troy," with an old Offenbach score, to Walter Freed; and "Forever Galatea" to Jay Julian.

Survivors include his wife, actress Toni Darnay, a son and daughter, his parents and a sister in Detroit. Funeral tomorrow (Thurs.) at 2:30, Campbell's, Madison and 81st.

Details on Page Two.

TILLIE WINSLOW

Tillie Winslow, 70, widow of Max Winslow, former v.p. of Irving Berlin Inc., died Jan. 19 of a heart attack after a brief illness at her home in Hollywood. Services were held at Wee Kirk O' The Heather, Forest Lawn, yesterday (Tues.). Born in upstate New York, Mrs. Winslow and her late husband, were longtime New York residents (in at the founding of the music firm in 1919) and a constant frequanter of the night spots of the day, in many instances present to plug the latest Berlin tune. It was also during this period that the Winslows became fast friends of VARIETY founder Sime Silverman and his wife Hattie, with both couples taking side by side summer cottages at the 1,000 Island resort of Alexandria Bay in upstate New York for several years.

In 1933 Mrs. Winslow accompanied her husband to Hollywood when he left the music business and the Berlin firm to become a producer at Columbia and was a close associate of the late Harry Cohn. Mrs. Winslow's sister, Rose, who died about two years ago, was Harry Cohn's first wife and had lived quietly in Hollywood for many years when the marriage ended in divorce. Among the musicals Winslow was associated with at Columbia was "One Night of Love" starring Grace Moore. In 1939, Winslow resumed his association with the Berlin firm, but continued to live in Hollywood.

After her husband's death in 1942, Mrs. Winslow remained in Hollywood where she lived quietly until her death last Friday. There are no immediate survivors.

ABE I. FEINBERG

Abe I. Feinberg, 71, one of the five remaining original Loew franchised vaudeville agents, died of a heart attack Jan. 20 in his New York office. Together with his brother Joe, he booked the Comerford Circuit and Fay's Theatre, Providence, for more than 20 years.

Feinberg was one of the better known agents in New York. Following the demise of vaudeville, he turned his attention to other fields and helped develop a supermarket and shopping centre circuit. Acts of all types were booked as attention getters in the various market spots. He also booked the talent for Macy's annual Thanksgiving Day parade.

Feinberg acted as broker for various story sales to television and films, and was considered an expert in clearing rights for these media.

Surviving, in addition to his brother Joe, are five sisters and three brothers.

RICHARD M. BLUMENTHAL

Richard M. Blumenthal, 55, former Paramount producer who was brought from his native France to New York by Par in the early 1930s, died of a heart attack in Hollywood Jan. 14 after a lengthy illness. In recent years he had been living on the desert trying to regain his health.

Before being transferred to Hollywood, Blumenthal was associated with Par's foreign dept. and was active also in Joinville, France, on company operations there. He went to Hollywood with Maurice Chevalier and worked on a number of his pix before being handed his own unit, which turned out a number of early Alan Ladd starrers. His last Par production was "Lady in the Dark," with Ginger Rogers.

Surviving are his wife, former Broadway actress Irene Homer, and a sister.

LESLIE R. BELL

Leslie R. Bell, 55, founder of the internationally-famous Bell Singers, all-femme choral group, died Jan. 19 in Toronto of cancer of the throat. He was to have launched a new radio series to be carried by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. web on Jan. 13, the day before he was admitted to a hospital.

As columnist for The Toronto Star for years, the conductor-arranger founded a new audience for serious music besides dedication to contemporary popular works. His new CBC series, "Music with Leslie Bell," was to have been concerned with modern composers.

Majoring in music, he received his B.A. and M.A. at the U. of Toronto, a doctorate of music at the U. of Montreal and later became professor of music at the Ontario College of Education, Toronto. Subsequently, he formed The Bell Singers of 28 all-femme vocalists, with some 500 young singers joining the group since its founding in 1934. The unit also recorded for RCA Victor.

In addition to appearances on CBC radio-tv series, personal tours in the U. S. and Canada, plus appearances in film productions, he also composed extensively. More than 50 of his works were published.

Survived by wife, son and daughter.

HARRY (SNUB) POLLARD

Harry (Snub) Pollard, 72, film comedian and one of the original members of Mack Sennett's Keystone Kops, died Jan. 19 in Burbank, Calif.

He appeared from 1914 until well into the 1920's in nearly 500 comedies, most of them one-reelers. He also had his own "Snub Pollard Comedies," produced by Hal Roach and appeared with such film personalities as Charlie Chaplin, Bebe Daniels, Charles Ray, Harold Lloyd and Chester Conklin.

In recent years, he played numerous bit films and tv roles. He often appeared in Jerry Lewis films and in tv's "Gunsmoke." His most recent role was in "Pocketful of Miracles," with Glenn Ford and Bette Davis. Several hours before his death he attended a reunion of the original Keystone Kops in Beverly Hills.

His wife survives.

FRANCIS D. BIECHELE

Francis D. Biechele, 56, longtime operator of the Osage Theatre, a nabe house in the Armourdale district of Kansas City, Kans., died there Jan. 13 after a lengthy illness. The theatre had been built by his father, the late R. R. Biechele, an industry pioneer, but closed after it was damaged by the 1951 flood.

The younger Biechele was formerly associated with the Kansas State Board of Review, the film censoring body, and the Kansas City, Mo., Censor Board, now defunct.

His wife, mother and two sisters survive.

DR. S. J. M. TRENAMAN

Hotel Pierre, N.Y.

Stanley Melba presentation of "Music in the Air" with Phyllis Arick, Marthe Errolle, Wilbur Evans, Terry O'Sullivan, Harry Snow; music by Jerome Kern (arranged by Lee Hulbert); book & lyrics, Oscar Hammerstein 2d; staging, Dolores Pallet; Lee Hulbert, musical director; $4 cover.

Stanley Melba's regard for the classics of the Broadway stage and their composers has taken the Cotillion Room into unusual melodic paths. The spot is reliving a golden era of the musical stage and in the presentation of capsuled legit musicals, Melba draws on some of the most tuneful items that came from the theatre. This show, a condensation of "Music in the Air," marks the return of the room to legit musicals after a spell of originals, which also proved their boxoffice stamina.

"Music in the Air" is the 1932 collaboration of Oscar Hammerstein 2d and Jerome Kern which was a spoof of the Viennese school of operetta as depicted by Lehar, Romberg, Friml, et. al., and in itself a peg for some sprightly and enduring music. The present show has a cast of stalwarts, able to knock off a tune, a line and a gag with equal facility.

However, the players find themselves handicapped by the exposition of the book. It's a difficult thing to carry off in its present form, and needs some further slicing before the right effect is achieved.

But the performers give the impression of having a grand time with the proceedings. Veteran baritone Wilbur Evans, a perennial in the Cotillion condensations, carries off the role of the flirtatious playwright with charm and authority. Evans and Martha Errolle as his embattled vis-a-vis, provide comedy and strength for the proceedings.

The requirements of this piece call for a boldness of projection and a broad approach. Otherwise, the entangling alliances with the book would be too much for this showshop. Miss Errolle has the voice, figure and cheesecake which adorn the session nicely.

The second leads are Phyllis Arick and Harry Snow. Miss Arick has a delightful coloratura plus a youthful naive mien to portray the country lass who comes to the city to sell her songs. Snow, as the cornfed rustic, meets the vocal and thespic requirements personably. Terry O'Sullivan, who as producer, acts virtually as a conferencier in this abbreviation.

There is a wealth of Kern-Hammerstein music in this layout. "I've Told Every Little Star" and "The Song Is You" are the endurables that have stayed around for lo these many. But it's nice to recall some of the other tunes that had their genesis in this opus such as "When Spring Is in the Air" and others that were on the charts briefly.

Dolores Pallet has staged in a manner that partially overcomes the unwieldy book and has endowed the show with grace and movement while Leslie Wheel's light plot dresses the show neatly. Lee Hulbert conducts the Joseph Sudy Orch. Jose.

Hotel Roosevelt, N.O.

New Orleans, Jan. 17.

Sophie Tucker with Ted Shapiro, the Kimberleys (2), Leon Kelner Orch (11); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

Seymour Weiss has ample reason to beam with the current bill headed by Sophie Tucker, and her material that's memorable. Every table in his plush Blue Room was occupied at the preem show and reservations indicate that the velvet rope will be up for the next two weeks.

The perfectly groomed topper of the nitery circuit who belies her age, is back on her annual visit. She comes on to a standing ovation to give the customers nostalgia and showmanship in massive doses and they, in turn, react strongly to her talk-song fare.

Miss Tucker and her potent ally of some 40 years, pianist Ted Shapiro, pulled strong applause and hefty yocks from firstnighters. The material, per tradition, is a smart and delightful mixture of the serious (kept at a minimum) and laugh-lyrics devoted to the never-ending scrap of the sexes.

Her voice is as strong and as clear as ever and her delivery expert as usual. She sports brand new wares generously sandwiched between some of the familiar-Tuckerisms, and the overall package is solid entertainment.

She wins another ovation with her warbling of the inevitable "Some Of These Days" as a tribute to the composer, Shelton Brooks. She displayed a copy of the battered original song sheet she's had since he brought it to her back in 1911.

She had to beg off.

Opening the show are the Kimberleys, a refreshing team of dancers who belong in winning company. They mix skillful terping with comedy that commands attention and develops nice returns.

Leon Kelner's musical crew provides precision backing for the show and pulls dancers to the floor during the ankle-bending sessions with his rhythmic fare. Kelner emcees capably.

New show due Feb. 1. Lluz.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, Cal., Jan. 19.

Joe E. Lewis, with Austin Mack at the piano; Jimmy Ray, Marrion Tolby, Bill Alexander's Orch (7); $2.50 cover.

Joe E. Lewis ("I've taken a 10 year subscription to Life, that's the kind of guts I have") opened a 10-day run at the Chi Chi Starlite Room with a lot of new material, much of it as topical as last night's report from Cape Canaveral but of course a good deal funnier.

Some of the new lines, like the Sinatra reference that "its nice to have a Prowse around the house" and "this is the first time Juliet has outweighed Romeo by 12 pounds", enjoyed a private test run in Hollywood last week, but much of it was brand new. And all of it, old and new, proves once again that nobody can match Lewis at giving cerebral twists to basically visceral material.

Nobody in any branch of show biz has his timing, nor his charm either. Moreover, nobody can run a gag through a blues rinse and have it come out spotlessly white like old Post Time.

Age has not withered nor has custom staled his infinite variety. As for filtering world affairs through his bourbon, Lewis is more hip than a hippo. "I met a guy who said he'd rather be red than dead. He was a Cherokee Indian."

The Twist, Adlai Stevenson, Barry Goldwater, President Kennedy, Richard Nixon, Vice President Johnson, the John Birch Society, Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Mickey Mantle, Dr. Albert Schweitzer, Elliot Ness, Candid Camera, Jack Paar—they all were grist to Joe's laughable mill.

He ran on for an hour and got the warmest round of applause that ever bounced off the walls of this bistro.

The bill opens with Jimmy Ray, an old favorite, who did four numbers, including his own version of The Twist and one as Joe Frisco might have done if he were alive.

Marrion Tolby follows the soft-shoe champ. Dressed in a mermaid-cut full length frock of silver, which shaded at the bottom into green, and topped by her red hair, she made a stunning ensemble. She sing's five highly stylized songs which proves she has a fine voice as well as a beautfiul figure.

Bill Alexander's orchestra backs up the acts, though Austin Mack ("who has been with me 20 years. He died three years ago but I haven't had the heart to tell him") took over the keyboard for Lewis. Seul.

Executive Inn, Tucson

Tucson, Jan. 17.

Snooky Lanson, Jerry Hanson Orch (4); $2.50 minimum.

Former "Hit Parade" star Snooky Lanson makes his first Tucson nightclub appearance a memorable one with his warmth reciprocated by an enthusiastic audience. Just as in his tv days a few years ago, he demonstrates he can handle a ballad or up-tempo with equal ability.

Lanson's entire program is built on evergreens and the large audience, which seemed to be made up of old "Hit Parade" fans, kept begging for more. Crew-cut singer came back for two encores after his "down memory lane" medley from the tv show.

GALE SHERWOOD

Extra added distraction at Delmonico's Supper Club, Colorado Springs, this week, along with Nelson Eddy.

Audiences warm, but weather cold—especially in the scanty Rose-Marie Indian costume he requires her to wear!

Copacabana, N. Y.

Della Reese & The Meditation Singers (5), Charlie Manna, Angela Martin, Rita Harris, Paul Shelley & Frank Marti Orchs; $5.50, $6.50 minimums.

After the SRO biz chalked up by Sammy Davis Jr., Jules Podell has brought the combination of Della Reese and Charlie Manna into the Copacabana. It's a card that provides a good share of entertainment. Both have been here on previous occasions, therefore they have a familiarity with the room.

Miss Reese has some distinct innovations in her turn. Having once been a gospel singer, a member of The Meditation Singers, she has brought her former colleagues into the Copa. Backed by this femme quartet, Miss Reese and the group supply some highly unusual effects for this room.

One of her singers takes on the soprano counterpoint and provides a sound not unlike those emanating from the Harlem storefront churches on a Sunday morning. The numbers with the girls are memorable highspots of this act.

As a single, Miss Reese displays many facets of the craft. She can endow a tune with humor and strong rhythmic effects as well as lacy delicacy as is evidenced in the adaptation of a Chopin etude. She gets a well-merited response.

Manna has a new act for this trip at the Copa. It's one of the anomalies of this room that while doing a better and more literate routine than in his previous turn, it doesn't have the impact of his last time around. There are more subtleties, more think-material and satire.

One of Manna's top numbers is a hoedown tune built around a jailbreak. It's clever and vastly amusing, but perhaps not as competition to knives and forks. The strongpoint of his present turn, which gives him a big exit, is the rib of astronauts as done on his Decca disk, and his bows are deserved.

The new production shows a different line of thought. Bob Hamilton has collaborated with Doug Coudy on the line routines, and for the first time within memory, the linegirls are doing ensemble singing. They have also conserved on hired help by having Angela Martin and Rita Harris double in song and dance departments. Costuming by Jimmy Bidgood is colorful, and the music by George Harwell and Al Foster meets the needs of the ensemble work.

It's difficult to assess whether the new production is better than the old, but at least it's different. Per usual, Paul Shelley does the backing dance music, and Frank Marti provides the Latin beat. Jose.

Statler Hilton, D.C.

Washington, Jan. 16.

Susan Barrett, Rita Ann Artiste Trio, Ted de Francis Orch (5); $1 cover, $1.50 weekends.

Big-voiced Susan Barrett is back at the Statler Hilton's elegant Embassy Room for her third stint very much the contained professional. Her soft-lighted, bubble blond entrance in something frilly dissolves rather abruptly under the lance of her first notes.

One is reminded of the July Garland-Ethel Merman school under the spell of the crashing Barrett delivery. She plunges cleanly into a fare of standards, all well phrased and ringingly hung on the customers' ears. One of her highlights is "Never on Sunday" in Swedish, another is interpolations of French, German and Italian within the confines of "Stowaway."

The windup is a tour of the U.S., which oddly enough never gets out of the South: "Carolina in the Mornin'", "Georgia", and "Mississippi Mud". Topically, the shapely Miss Barrett is wont to throw in a Twist with a bridge in the music, sometimes solo, sometimes with an exhibitionist customer.

Withal, Miss Barrett comes off quite well. The accompaniment by the Ted de Francis group is uncluttered, the selections a little dated, but the net result is crystalline. Rita Ann Artiste plays fine piano in the interim. Ned.

Additional Night Club Reviews on pp. 58 and 59.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 16.

George Jessel, Jimmy Blade Orch; $3 cover weekends, $2.50 weeknights.

George Jessel is as much at home in the tony Camellia House as he is on the breast-of-capon banquet circuit. His opening came at the tail end of the huge furniture convention and he played to a jampacked and enthusiastic opening night crowd.

Jessel responded with 40 minutes of nonstop unabashed sentimentality, stories of his travels on the fundraising route and ventures into songs associated with such vaude peers as Al Jolson and Eddie Cantor. Jessel preluded his act by saying that it was his "farewell tour," to which one ringsider responded: "You mean your first farewell tour."

Jessel remains one of the most polished and astute storytellers, past and present, whether jibing at his own femme problems ("I'm pregnant with debts in Hollywood") or anecdoting about the presidents who have known him ("FDR, HST, JFK—I wasn't too close to that guy in between the last two.") Included in his times-gone-by songalog are: "School Days,"-"California Here I Come," "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows" and "If You Knew Susie."

Jimmy Blade's fine house unit plays incidental music behind Jessel, accompanies his song outings, and plies its usual terpworthy beat between shows.

Jessel is in till Feb. 9. Mor.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, Jan. 16.

Jerry Van Dyke, The Wanderers Three, Don Cannon Orch (6); no cover or minimum.

Comic Jerry Van Dyke broke in a new pair of shoes and a new audience, both large and carrying a big glow, at this Tidelands Motor Inn nitery.

Van Dyke uses as props a banjo, which he often strums, and his brother Dick, who has a tv show and is referred to perhaps a bit too often, for Jerry is capable of making it on his own. Material is generally original, and it's funny. At times he is a black jacket-wearing rock 'n' roller, playing "music to strip cars by." Again he's the "Lone Ranger" in pantomime, or he just does some good standup patter.

The Wanderers Three (Tim Evans, John James and Ernest Mills) is one of numerous instrumental-vocal folk song groups now playing clubdates, but the field isn't too crowded for these boys.

Accompanying themselves on two guitars and a banjo, group gets good response from such as "John Henry," "A Mighty Day," a folk tune about the disastrous 1900 Galveston hurricane; "Saints," their current disk, "River of No Return," and closing, "Cigareets and Whusky & Wild, Wild Wimmen."

Only criticism of booking is that comic Van Dyke also does some folk tunes ("written by that fellow, Frank Folk") and his 45 minutes is a shade too long for opening act. Don Cannon and his "pop" gun crew again excellent in backing.

Show plays two frames, with Helen Traubel due in Jan. 30 for a week. Skip.

Hotel St. Regis, N.Y.

Charles Trenet, Paul de Margerie, Chauncey Gray Orch; $4 cover Sat., $3 weeknights.

After an absence of five years, Charles Trenet, the Narbonnese chanter, is back in New York, and this time for a five-week stint in the Hotel St. Regis' Maisonette. Full house greeted him opening night and made what must have been a very gratifying fuss over his self-written songs, several of which are becoming standards. Instant response to the lyrics, about 80% of them in French, suggests that, 1.) his record album draw is still potent, or, 2.) everyone's going to Berlitz.

The France of Trenet is not that of Chevalier or Montand, but his appearance and delivery—that of the open-faced country boy—is today ingratiating and amiable. He makes small excursions into characterization, injecting an echo of some French type occasionly during a song and these bits he does deftly and sparingly.

Trenet also seems to be aware of his modest singing dimensions and handles them carefully. One slightly exception opening show, was when he blasted as he reached the crest of "La Mer," his solid final encore.

Opened is "Philosophy," followed by an upbeat "There's Happiness Everywhere" ("Y'a d'la Joie"). Then comes "Bon Soir Jolie Madame," "Kangaroo," with which he scored very strongly; "Polka du Roi," another pleaser about two wax statues and a museum owner; "Revoir Paris," "The Grasshopper and The Ant," with words from the old La Fontaine fable (plus a mention of The Twist); the ebullient and familiar "Boom!" and "The Soul of Poets," ("L'Ame des Poetes,") for the windup.

Throughout there flows effective backing by pianist Paul de Margerie, assisted by the rhythm section of the Chauncey Gray band. Latter group provides a wide variety of easy-to-follow rhythms for dancing. The room continues to offer topdrawer interior decor for both eye and palate. Rudy supervises with his usual aplomb. Leve.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 19.

Bobby Darin, Myron Cohen, Don Kirk, Flamingoettes (13), Flamingo Orch (19); presented by Morris Lansburgh; choreography, Barry Ashton; lighting, Hugo Granada; $4 minimum.

Bobby Darin's savvy showmanship is honed to a sharper point in his first nitery outing in over a year, and the smooth hipster comes through with a well-paced song session. Extra added Myron Cohen (with 100% billing) is a strong billbalancer, adding new stories to his revived classics—all registering solidly as yock bait.

Darin demonstrates natural histrionic ability as he tosses in double-takes and facial expressions appropriate to his songalog to good effect; he has an amusing line of patter and is an artist with the adlibs.

Initialing the turn with some special material about Vegas to the tune of "Swanee" and "Hey Look Me Over," Darin moves gracefully about the stage as he easily sells such numbers as "Fool To Want You," "I Ain't Nobody," "Under My Skin," a chain-gang work song with dramatic lighting by boothman Hugo Granada, "Danny Boy," "Climb Every Mountain" and "Bill Bailey."

He shakes a salute to the Twist, and reprises his trademark, "Mack The Knife." His conductor, Dick Behrke; drummer, Ronnie Zito; and guitarist, Milt Norman, properly guide the Flamingo orch (19).

Cohen, with his mild-mannered delivery of dialect tales, tried out some freshies which he said he planned to use on the Ed Sullivan show in the spring—the stories registered 1,000%, so he said, "I'll keep 'em in."

Barry Ashton comes up with a refreshingly rousing production number for the curtain-raiser called "Whatever Happened To The Old Songs?" Featuring the 13 flapper Flamingoettes and the big voice of Don Kirk, the bash includes a community sing aided by lyrics flashed on a screen.

The Darin-Cohen show is in for four weeks, to be followed by Peggy Lee and Dick Gregory. Duke.

Roundtable, N.Y.

Ronnie Hawkins Combo (5), Orchids (6), Vibrations (8); $3 music charge.

The Twist reigns supreme here. In a three-act session that kicks off at 9 p.m. and runs for more than two hours, with only slight intermission for combo shifts, the performers and the audience keep the pace in high gear.

The Roundtable, which started as an eastside jazz spot, never had it so good. The Twisters were out in force at show caught Friday night (19). Every table was taken, there was a line waiting to get in and even at the entrance bar and adjacent drinking tables space was at a premium. Like the westside Peppermint Lounge, the Roundtable is dishing out some of the hottest Twist music in town which accounts for the ropes-up biz.

All the Twisters seem to want is the beat and it apparently means little who's supplying it at any given time. They Twist and Twist with only short breaks for a sip back at their table, comb their hair or to adjust a skirt that's gone out of line.

Things start humming when Ronnie Hawkins opens the show. Accomped by two guitars, a sax and drums, he leads 'em on with a hot vocal beat. "When My Dreamboat Comes Home," "I Got A Long Way To Go," "Oh Babe, What You Gonna Do," "Ain't It Just Like A Woman" and "Splish Splash" are some of the entries which he's tailor-made for the Twist beat and there's hardly any room on the dance floor as he spins his way through his routines.

Same goes for The Orchids, who began the Twist policy here several months ago. The juve sextet continues with a powerhouse musical drive that really gets the terpers to extend themselves. At the opening show they received a request to play "Anniversary Waltz" for some newlyweds in the room. They managed to do it without straying from the Twist tempo, thus keeping everybody happy.

The Vibrations, a group of five singers and three instrumentalists, wind the first show with a series of rock 'n' roll songs that's just as suitable to Twisting as anything else. In their repertoire is a song called "Peanut Butter" which gives a sampling of the kind of work they do. The group was only in for a week, closing Saturday (20).

Hawkins and The Orchids will continue to hold the fort for another couple of weeks making the Roundtable a Twisting-must for the uninhibited as well as the inhibited. Gros.

The Troubadour, L. A.

Angeles, Jan. 8.

Travis Edmonson, Jean Durand; $1.50 general admission, $2.00 top.

Travis Edmonson and Jean Durand give an international folk presentation in the current Troubadour show, though each expands his stint to include a variety of music styles.

Edmonson, devoid of "The Good Guys" trio he formed when he split with Bud Dashiell, is in the unfortunate position of being forced by fan demands to perform as a single many of the songs popularized as a duo with Bud. In most instances they fall short of the rich blend of the team, making him seem incomplete and obviating qualities he has as an individual.

Only the classic "Malaguena Salarosa," which allows him to display the high Mexican head tones, remains in top form. On his own he performs most successfully in the folk vein, delivering Woody Guthrie's "Charlie Brennan" and a depression song, "Times Are Getting Hard, Boys," with sensitivity.

His own "In the Village," which incorporates portions of Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," is a nice entry and his singing comes off most pleasantly in a mellow Spanish serenade. Not a singer as much as a representative of folk culture, Edmonson's musicianship shows in a number of rousing Mexican songs in which solid guitaring is his asset.

Durand, who might be called a Haitian Yul Brynner in appearance, has a good, rich voice but hasn't yet learned style variety. "Crawfish" is bright and "Scarlet Ribbons" could have been effective if he didn't play too much. Singer should concentrate on singing and pointed delivery in his songs rather than getting into comedy asides in which he is not yet sufficiently at ease. Accompaniment by Gabor Szabo on guitar is equally lifeless. Dale.

Ash Grove, L. A.

Los Angeles, Jan. 8.

Brownie Mc Gee & Sonny Terry, Chambers Bros.; $2 admission.

Brownie McGee & Sonny Terry embody the spirit of true Southern American folk blues in a set of songs for the most part written by them but delivered in the natural improvisatory style of Southern, philosophical music. Lyrics and music have a free, relaxed design that projects sensitive representation of the area, with much hitting a double entendre edge though basic quality is strictly homespun artistry.

Terry, who is blind, plays a 75c harmonica with sounds that would make Larry Adler envious, while McGee's guitar and sound vocal delivery have complementary appeal that makes an unusually interesting harmonic combination. Terry's singing, sometimes oblivious of keys, is spontaeous and exciting because of its honesty.

Closing "Walk On" is probably the only generally known tune for those not specifically attuned to their specialized work, though "Kansas City" was a big hit in the 30s. Top blues entry is the typical "My Baby Done Changed the Lock on the Door," while they hit representative folk blues with "If You Lose Your Money, Please Don't Lose Your Mind; If You Lose Your Woman, Please Don't Fool With Mine," which tells the story of Southern philosophy with ease.

Chambers Bros. (6) support with a set of lively spirituals reminiscent of Southern Baptist meetings. "You Know I've Got It" is infectious, though group needs variety and stronger staging to go beyond the specialized audience field. Dale.

Barclay Hotel, Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 17.

Afeta, Jamira, Shamira, Larry Day, Sylvia Sands, Starlet Dancers (4), Percy Curtis Orch (8); no cover or minimum.

With capacity crowds jamming the 450-seat Oasis Room here, a no cover or minimum policy has been instituted by Fred Maddalena, longtime maitre d', who has taken over the producing end of this spot because Al Siegel, owner-operator, is too tied up with his automatic food interests.

In a fast-moving 70-minute, twice-nightly show tagged "The Casbah Revue," Maddalena has introduced for his initial production a trio of Arabian belly-dancers, plus The Starlets dance line, a femme singer and a male comic, interspersed with The Twist in dance sessions staged by the Percy Curtis Orch (8).

Maddalena has attracted a new audience and has joined the ranks of abdomenal showmen. His Casbah Revue introduces—for the first time to Toronto—a threesome of navel operators who prove what the patrons want. Jamira, Afeta and Shamira separately come on in chiffon gowns and are teasers in their navel and chest undulations—thanks to vociferous appreciation of the male members of the audience. Trio call themselves "Oriental" dancers and offer their physical attributes unstintingly.

Frenzied pace is maintained by the blond Sylvia Sands who, clad in a red dress and elbow-length black gloves, delivers a "Look Me Over" and "Never on Sunday" and winds with the theme song from "Exodus." She lacks nitery savvy but has plenty of bounce and looks.

The Starlets (4) appear in two production numbers, one for a strobe effect with scarves, plus plenty of percussion by the house orch. Larry Day, as the male comic, was a throwaway — when caught.

Maddalena has attracted a new audience and a different atmosphere with his exotic dancers and swift surrounding bill, plus the knocking-off of the $1.75 cover charge (which only takes two extra drinks per customer to offset). What's important is that his twice-nightly floor shows are packing them in.

Acts are in, with renewal of options, until Feb. 3. McStay.

Latin Casino, N. J.

Delaware Township, N.J., Jan. 17.

Marlene Dietrich, Dave Barry, Moro-Landis Dancers (16), Jack Curtis, Martin King's Orch (20); $5-$6 minimum.

Glitter and glamor are the principal commodities being offered at the Latin Casino, where the return of Marlene Dietrich automatically raises the age level of the audience a decade or more. A large portion of the ringsiders are men, whose filmgoing dates back. Baubled and bangled with shimmering wrap half covering her revealing dress, the veteran film beauty comes on with the bravura "Look Me Over Closely," a challenge which the femmes in the house seem to take up wholeheartedly.

Her songalog is much the same as she used during her first visit to this area one year ago. And once again she bisects her act by appearing in the second half in gentleman's white tie and tails. This time, however, she cuts the dance number. It seems a mistake, since her high kicking antics with the chorus lined up like Rockettes made a showy finale.

A diseuse in the dramatic Continental style, Miss Dietrich is most effective in the foreign language lilts—"Johnny," in German, and "La Vie en Rose" and "Marie," in French. Her voice is harsh at times and woefully limited in range. It makes her employ every feminine wile to sell a number. She is most at ease in the conversational type song, such as "Nice and Easy" or "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face." And her powerhouse number is the one authentic World War II tune which she has virtually trademarked, "Lili Marlene."

Dave Barry, who can make with a wide assortment of sound effects, does the comedy warmup for the star. In line with the current trend, he has switched his standup routine to the humor of social comment. "All men are created equal —losers." It's all to the good.

While decrying the breakdown in modern morality, he tips listeners how to beat the telephone company or the Government's postal increase. His forte is still the guy on a furlough from AA, whose idea of group therapy is "booze up and be somebody."

The Moro-Landis dancers present one of their dressiest and best conceived ensembles in "Winter Wonderland." Martin King's house orchestra takes on added dimensions with 20 men on the stand to back up Miss Dietrich. Gagh.

Orbit Room, Houston

Houston, Jan. 23.

Veteran vocalist Al Hibbler brings top phrasing, his own unique style and a big hunk of nostalgia to the Skylane Inn's Orbit Room.

Hibbler, blind since birth, opens with "S'posing," does such standards as "Daybreak," "Stella by Starlight," "Unchained Melody," a medley he performed with Duke Ellington, and "Lover Come Back to me," and his begoff, "After the Lights Go Down Low."

Hibbler can sing it straight, or switch to his own style of suddenly dropping his voice down to bass range, all to good returns from goodly crowd of patrons, many of whom were his fans in '30s and '40s. Act was timed at 38 minutes.

Hibbler's pianist, John Malachi, takes over 88s from Bill Gannon, with remainder of trio joining in excellent backing for singer. Show plays 10 days. Skip.

MALD'S SAN JUAN BERTH

Jack Larson, The Note-Ables (4), Lea Lindell, Bobby Hale Orch (5); $1 admission.

Youthful singing mimic, Jack Larson, whose impersonations include a sharply authentic version of much imitated Ed Sullivan, has polished his act considerably since appearing here last July. His hard-working 45 minute stint includes acceptable facsimile takeoffs of most of the "standards," such as Nat King Cole, Frankie Laine, Jerry Lewis and Johnnie Ray to whom Larson bears a strong visual likeness. But he has augmented this much travelled road with special material he has written himself that is fresh and clever.

Top selection in this vein is a three-part segment titled "A History Of Flight," in which he first goes back to ancients Daedulus and Icarus, with D. as played by Walter Brennan and I. by George Gobel. He follows with Lindbergh's flight to Paris, with Lindy, played by James Stewart, being greeted by a French ambassador Mr. Magoo, and concludes with a man in space interview between John Cameron Swayze and Jimmy Durante. Voices in this set are excellent "dupes" and the material is witty, lively and imaginative.

In this own voice Larson is effective with a varied medley of tunes that includes "A Real Swinging Affair," "Makin' Whoopee" and "Let's Twist Again" among others. He exits to hefty and well-deserved mitting with his own ballad, "The Beauty," which shows a nice lyric line and may catch on disk-wise.

Rounding out a strongly vocal bill are The Note-Ables (New Acts) and sepia songstress Lea Lindell. Miss Lindell holds her own in this company with an easy, modern style and a pleasing variety of tunes in her catalog. She gets good attention with a set that concentrates on the ballad side, such as "Like Someone In Love" and "They Can't Take That Away From Me," but proves she can belt with the best when she segues into "Bill Bailey" and "S'Wonderful." More concentration on developing her own special quality is required but she shows promise.

Bobby Hale's orchestra is new to the room and turns in a good job of showbacking, with Richie Walters handling emcee chores.

Bill is in for three frames with singer Roy Petty and exotic Ricky Covette slated to follow. Shaw.

University Key Club
(FORT LAUDERDALE)

Ft. Lauderdale, Jan. 15.

Kay Stevens Trio, Big Ben Hawkins Trio; no minimum.

The eight bankers and businessmen who are backing this swankery claim it to be the only existing club of its kind (requiring collegiate background for eligibility) and have a world franchise to prove their contention. The UKC has already become a status symbol in this playtime town.

Kay Stevens and her trio were a natural for the opening and are scheduled to return Jan. 19 for the "rest of the season," giving the shock treatment to UKC members and guests.

"Guests" includes wives and lady friends, as this is strictly a den for The Male Animal and is geared to his taste for privacy, decor and entertainment.

Stellar treatment is also conferred on the femme "sommeliers" (co-eds, no doubt?) who serve food and drink throughout the whole establishment, the former pavillion of the Marie Antoinette. Clad mostly in the traditional chain and key symbolic of the wine steward, with mortarboards proclaiming their academic standing, they are as pretty as Varga girls and almost as nude as the portraits of undraped feminity which adorn the walls of the bar.

In such an atmosphere, Kay Stevens' vibrant style of belting, ad libbing and toying with ringsiders roused the "alumni." In a series of gorgeous gown, which she designs herself, she is both eveful and earful as she accompanies her songs and sallies with a wide-stance "twist" as frantic as the antics of a one-arm paperhanger. By turns gamin, witty and bawdy, she offers more lift to the Old than Old Grandad.

In all these goings on, including a couple of tuneful numbers, Miss Stevens is aided and abetted by the excellent musicianship and vocal support of pianist Fred Gary, drummer Dick Rivier, and her ex-husband Tony Amato, on bass and trumpet. Culm.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

B. B. King Band (13), Flip Wilson, Drifters (4), Marie Knight, Gene McDaniels, Gladys Knight & the Pips (3), Impressions (5), Odess Harris; "Battle at Bloody Beach" (20th); $2 top.

Singer-guitar player B. B. King and his band headline the bill at the Apollo this week and it is an unfortunate selection for the house. In addition to playing its own specialty numbers, the 13-piece group also backs the other acts. Its undisciplined, off-key and unevenly tempoed performance not only slurs its own showcasing, but also that of the other turns.

King himself shows little style on guitar, confusing noise in spasmodic bursts with music, but he sings the blues in okay, if uninspired fashion. At the show caught, the audience, usually a stern judge of talent, reacted coolly to the band and King.

A high point of the bill is the comedic work of Flip Wilson, who also emcees. His ability to deliver a long yarn and keep it funny throughout make several of his monologs particularly enjoyable. His lampooning of Negro speech patterns (he's Negro himself) and hip dialog registers well with the audience. Another high-scoring group is the Drifters whose rock 'n' roll stylings are well-devised and smartly presented. Their turn, which includes their recent disclicks and other tunes, sports nice work by various lead singers.

Marie Knight, gospel singer who has turned to the pop market, is still in transition and needs an individual style with more control and definition. She shows some sparks on occasion. Gene McDaniels, who scored with a big disk during the year and began to do some club work, has a pleasing pop voice and styles his work well. He seems headed in the nitery direction, however, and is somewhat undynamic for the Apollo.

Gladys Knight, working with the Pips (3), turns in some spirited renditions, displaying a big voice and strong gospel influence. The Pips are a bit over-stylized both vocally and physically. The Impressions (5) do an okay turn on their current disclick and contrib an amusing comedy turn to the audience's amusement. Odess Harris, apparently a regular with the band, has a good blues voice, but not much individuality. Kali.

Bobino, Paris

Paris, Jan. 13.

Georges Brassens, Jean Valton, Jacqueline Danno, Roger Riffard, Hoganas Trio, Martin Granger, New-Two, Carmen Gowan; $1.75 top.

Georges Brassens is a phenomenon. He goes on pleasing with his poetic anarchic songs though most are so incisive in sentiment and language that they are barred from radio and video here.

His new songalog is as fresh, biting and underlyingly tender as ever and his forthright delivery and nuances have the audience begging for more. He looks in for two weeks of biz in this nabe house.

Brassens is big, hirsute and mustached and backs himself with a guitar and bass. His simple melodies and catchy voice get the most from his excellent songs. Jean Valton does neat imitations of noted show biz figures with good material and patter to make him a fine second slot act.

Jacqueline Danno gives out with a series of torchy songs that are backed by fervor and dramatic poise. She sometimes oversells, but emerges a singer who could develop into a staple.

Martin Granger smartly manipulates marionettes who put on a miniature circus replete with risley acts and clowns to build his act into a mitt gatherer. New-Two have a leggy girl and a muscled boy revving up exotic apache dances for an eyefilling interlude that is good for filler purposes.

Trio Hoganas have two men holding a slack wire in their mouths for the covorting of a well stacked girl. This is a robust, fast and a solid act. Ditto Carmen Gowan's lasso twirling. Roger Riffard is the only letdown in this well made program in a fey singing style that does not hit the right comic note to put it over. Mosk.

Strollers, N.Y.

"Time, Gentlemen, Please," Second Edition, presented by John Krimsky and Players Theatre of London, staged by Fred Stone. With Stone, Joan Sterndale Bennett, Archie Harradine, Sheila Bernette, Tony Bateman, Margaret Burton, Jean Rayner, Kyra Vayne, Jerry Terheyden, Geoffrey Webbs. Piano, Gordon Mumford. Opening Jan. 16. Admission, $4.60, dinner, $6.50.

This is another evocation of nostalgia, that recognizably commercial commodity of our times. The mixture as before is of old English music hall songs, dances, funny sayings and recitations, complete with an elegant "chairman," the forebear of today's emcee or compere. One may reasonably assume that the entertainment is authentic in its genre, as it is charming in its quaintness. The appeal is to the lovers of mannered humor; those who like to see the old hokum bucket go down the well of yesteryear.

An institution in London, imported to New York by John Krimsky, the group of nine plus an American pianist, and very good, Gordon Mumford, opened in the fall at the old El Morocco site and are now presenting their "second edition." Regardless of the billing, what they are exploiting is memory lane. The cost of a flight from the atomic age to the simpler times and tastes of the Pax Britannica is $4.60 for a ticket, $6.50 for dinner, plus what you imbibe.

The evaluation of an enterprise of this sort is not simple. How to measure its potential audience? This is not the non-stop marathon of, say, Bill's Gay 90s and similar whisky-and-song stations. It is a cafe-theatre in miniature, capacity 198. More to the point perhaps: it demands something more from the customers, an appreciation of a satire which is self-generated and not forced.

The numbers mounted with simple scenery (by Thea Neu) and beguiling period costumes (by Reginald Wooley and James Boyce) cultivate without gilding lilies. The gaslight atmosphere of Victorian song-and-drinking rooms is maintained. The "chairman" sits all the while at his own table beyond the proscenium. He is, as impeccably impersonated by Fred Stone, obviously an actor of authority and presence, tall, a trifle grand, gloved, fobbed, waistcoated and most anxious to ingratiate.

A great deal depends upon Stone, who is also the stager, and he is the central arch of the whole bridge to the past. It tells something of the dated flavor that Stone actually recites an extended passage from Lewis Carroll. And the audience was delighted.

Those less aware of the varieties-that-used-to-be may perhaps keep expecting stronger punchlines. But that would sacrifice the whole basic concept. The humor rests on characterization rather than gags. This is especialy true of Archie Harradine who runs from silly ass with monocle to cockney with gold chain; and of Joan Sterndale Bennett and Shiela Bernette both of whom have a fine piquancy of restrained much-from-little stage business. No doubt the best time to see this show might be at a weekend performance, 8:45 or 11 p.m., with the performers and the patrons both keyed a bit higher than can be expected at a preview populated too much by newspaper reviewers.

It is probably wise that the show, divided in two halves, is not too long to pall, as might be a hazard where the burlesque skirts repetition. The repertory is large and the show can easily expand, and probably does on occasion. It helps vary the songs to have a bit of dancing here and there (credited to Tony Bateman) and the whistling-singing soft shoeing of Geoffrey Webb is a forgotten kind of specialty, much liked by the audience.

Take it for what it is, a group of stage-wise English troupers doing their stuff in the style of former reigns, neat but not gaudy, sincerely characterized and easy to enjoy. Land.

Frolic, Revere

Revere, Mass., Jan. 12.

Ford & Reynolds, Nadina, Buddy Thomas Dancers (12), Cliff Natale Orch (6); $2.50 minimum.

Ford & Reynolds are a couple of fast moving youngsters with their own special brand of comic innovations which indicate imaginative creativeness, a rarity these days. Both are thoroughly grounded tooters, sax, drums, trumpet, which they use for good effect, but it's the comic shenanigans that leave customers limp in this plush decored layout across the harbor from Bosfon.

As testimonial to the kind of biz they pull, the Frolic has 'em on a return three-weeker and they're already inked for another date. In the meantime, the boys are set for another Sullivan show.

Frank Ford is a true nut comic, who can do anything from mugging to pantomine to terpery, while Gary Reynolds plays the straight man to the hilt, but works in plenty of clever bits from impresh to hot licks.

Night caught they wowed the audience with Ford's recital of the adventures of Tarzan in three languages; a skit full of yocks burlesquing "You Asked For It," a Twist soiree with Ford pulling ringsiders up on stage and a riotous tumult climaxing with a battle of music in which everybody gets into the act from the members of the band to the audience.

Nadina (see New Acts) is a slim lissom oriental terper who's sinuously graceful in the Arabic art of terp. Buddy Thomas has a line of eyefuls, stunningly gowned, who get off two production numbers, "People," and a terrific Twist.

Blackstone Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 15.

Hanna Ahroni, Franz Benteler Orch; $2 cover weekends, $1.50 weeknights.

Hanna Ahroni is that rare thrush who enrolled in concert training at an early age with the intention of becoming a cafe singer. Astutely steered by impresario Moshe Walin since childhood, she still does some concert work.

If at times it seems as though using her superbly lyrical voice for pop tunes is like driving a tack with a sledge, it is an invigorating relief from the host of chirpers who vend their repertoire with sheer salesmanship and little vocal ken.

The petite Israeli songstress' quicksilver voice makes exciting fare out of what might be considered chanteuse chestnuts in other hands. She sings in seven languages, and, more than being just multilingual, she projects the essence of the language in which she sings—a nostalgic number, a thrilling Israeli laughing song, a moody Spanish flamenco, the "Exodus" theme in English, and "Whole World In His Hands." The latter, an American Negro spiritual, is the least successful of her songalog, handled, as it is, as an uptempo jazz number, wherein a more religioso style would seem more appropriate to the lyrics.

Ye Little Club, L.A.

Los Angeles, Jan. 17.

Mavis Rivers; two-drink minimum.

Mavis Rivers is a good example of a firstrate pop singer who has every vocal quality she needs to go to the top but who hasn't yet learned the proper staging that will realize her full performing potential.

Essentially a jazz stylist, Miss Rivers can do anything with her voice. However, she injects a great deal of undisciplined personality comedy into most of her up tunes in a manner that distracts from her solid vocal delivery. While this is successful in "Route 66," a personality song itself, it is completely unnecessary in most of her other fast numbers.

Ballads, which she delivers straight, make the best showing. "There's No You" has polish and sensitivity, while "Like Someone in Love" shows equal proficiency. Judging from her handling of "Foggy Day," she could concentrate on a mixture of jazz phrasing in ballad tempo to display her best qualities and develop a nice individual style.

At the Tuesday (16) opener, the Reprise pactee had some trouble with backing from pianist Joe Felix and bass Jack Smalley who didn't give her enough tempo. When set, it should allow her more freedom for jazz experimentation.

Singer is in for four weeks with options. Dale.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 9.

Lous Prima, Nica Ventura, Sam Butera & The Witnesses (7), Dick Humphreys, Donn Arden Dancers (16), Carlton Hayes Orch (13); produced by Louis Prima; written & directed by Sid Kuller; staged & choreographed by Dick Humphreys; original music, Louis Prima; lyrics, Sid Kuller; orchestrations, Larry Gordon; sets, Harvey Warren; $4 minimum.

Louis Prima calls his new show "Twistin' At The Mardi Gras," and devotes just enough time to the craze to make the turn a timely click and avoid monotony. Result is that this is by far the best show Prima has presented here.

Nica Ventura is introduced as Prima's new singing partner, and the event is handled tastefully in a neat demonstration of showmanship. Miss Ventura is no flashy beauty—she's an extremely attractive girl with delightfully disarming humility and shyness, easily passable as a nurse, secretary, or school teacher who has switched to a singing career because she has an excellent voice.

Prima undoubtedly made a wise choice when he selected Miss Ventura. She does five solos, "For Every Man There's A Woman," "In The Eyes Of My Love," "You Made Me Love You," "Just One Of Those Things" and "Birth Of The Blues." With Prima she duets "Undecided" and "I'm In The Mood For Love."

Dick Humphreys is responsible for the effervescent choreography which is hip but not too far out, tying his own imaginative up-to-the-minute routines in with The Twist. As featured hoofer, Humphrey also scores, and is a strong asset to the bash.

Sam Butera & The Witnesses—Rolly Dee, John Nagy, Allan Seltzer, Lou Sino, Morgan Thomas and Jimmy Vincent—spark the festivities with Prima in new and very funny skits written by Sid Kuller. They also provide fine musical supplementation to the Carlton Hayes orch (13). Saxophonist Butera, bassist Dee and trombonist Sino get enthusiastic response with their vocals.

"Twistin' At The Mardi Gras" was directed by writer Kuller, original music is by Prima, with orchestrations by Larry Gordon. Sets are by Harvey Warren, costumes by Berman's. The Donn Arden Dancers—12 girls and four boys—add dressing to the colorful splash, scheduled for six weeks.

Riverside, Reno

(FOLLOWUP)

Reno, Jan. 18.

When Bill Miller needed a lead act replacement for his "Life Begins at Minsky's" production in the Riverside's Riviera Room he had to look no further than his casino lounge. And tabler response is proving it was no gamble on Miller's part to move the Jo Ann Trio from lounge to "big room" status for the No. 1 spot in the hour-long Minsky revue.
